D·C· food variety spices up menu

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

The assistant director of Menu Services at the University of Massachusetts, as she has done for 15 years, has planned some special events in the dining commons this semester to alleviate the monotony of institutionalized dining.

Josephine Keeley, who plans the daily menus of the more than 10,000 UMass students enrolled on the meal plan each semester, said "Steak's a favorite of everybody, and I always like to serve hot cross buns for breakfast on Ash Wednesday."

Each semester, the dining commons serve about 20 meals designed to spice things up for the students. Special meals range from "New England Night" and "Far East Night" to "Bread and Spread" buffets and a "New York Deli" luncheon.

Planning for Feb. 19th's "Winter Carnival" began about six months ago in the test kitchens of University food Services.

Before Keeley decided to place carnival punch and dishes such as grilled sirloin steak, with baked stuffed haddock, green bean almondine and broccoli normandy on the menu, each recipe was prepared in the Worcester Dining Commons test kitchen by Assistant Dietician Denice Yanni and sampled by a panel of Food Services staff.

The Winter Carnival is based on New Orleans' traditional Mardi Gras festival.

"The Mardi Gras represents a regional festivity," Yanni said. "Perhaps we too will be able to generate this air of something new, something different and festive."

PVTA buses to malls face axe

By JOHN MILBIER
Collegian Staff

Bus service to the Hampshire Mall may be eliminated if a proposal to cut funding for the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority is passed March 18 by Hadley Town Meeting.

Paul Mokrzecki said the proposal to cut the $19,989 appropriation from the budget was placed on the ballot last year.

"We have severe budget problems. We have to cut $400,000 out of the budget because fo Proposition 2 1/2, "Mokrzecki said, referring to the 1980 property tax limitation bill.

Mokrzecki said that if Hadley remained a member of PVTA, they would have to cut services from other areas like the police and school departments.

Buses would still run from Amherst to Northampton along Route 9. However, there would be no stops in Hadley.

Stephen Gazillo, director of marketing and public relations for the PVTA, said, "It will hurt them more than it will hurt the PVTA. Hadley does not have a tremendous impact on the PVTA."

"I understand where they're coming from, but the return on their investment is greater than they realize, "Gazillo said.

He said it is unfortunate that there has to be so much negative sentiment and that the business along Route 9 would suffer.

Chris Sullivan, University fo Massachusetts Undergraduate speaker of the Student Senate said, "We are going to encourage Hadley not to stop funding. $20,000 seems like such a small amount for the services provided."

Sullivan said if the service is cancelled, business might foot the bill.

Carol Burke, a Hampshire Mall manager, said, "I think it will hurt the business in the Hampshire mall and other businesses along Route 9 if the proposal is passed."

Burke said she could not put a dollar estimate on the proposal but said many students without cars will suffer.

Emily Plumb, a UMass management intern at the Hampshire Mall said, "If the proposal does pass I would either borrow a friend's car or try to car pool."

Plumb said if theses options were not available then she would quit. She added, "I wouldn't thumb, it's too dangerous."

Martha Nelson, the PVTA spokeswoman for the Commuter Area Government at UMass said, "Hadley feels disconnected with students at UMass. It's a slap in the face from Hadley if they vote it in."

Nelson said that the ridership is established and that the buses are always overloaded.

Mokrzecki said that any registered voter in Hadley can vote on the ballot issue.

Rhodes Scholar Andrew J. Nussbaum

Rhodes awarded locally

An Amherst College senior has been named a Rhodes Scholar for 1985.

Andrew J. Nussbaum, 21, of Highland Park, Ill., is a Russian major and will study "Cultural and Political Conflicts in Russian and Soviet emigre literature" at Oxford this year.

The Rhodes scholarship, established in 1902 by Cecil John Rhodes, a British administrator, is awarded annually to exceptional students who wish to attend Oxford University in England.

Nussbaum is a member of the men's swimming team and teaches a weekly Russian Studies course.

"I have been hoping for this since I applied in September," he said. "I'm still pretty stunned."

This year, 32 Americans were chosen from 1,148 applicants. Amherst College has had four Rhodes scholars in the past eight years.

University Store tightens security

By DANIEL WHITE
Collegian Staff

Fine collecting and security are being improved to help prevent shoplifting at the University Store.

"There was a 1.5 percent shrinkage (dollar loss from breakage, paper loss and shoplifting) last year," said Mitchell Roye, student clerk of courts. The clerk of courts collection office has improved its bookeeping to catch up with people who owe fines, he said.

"The bookeeping system last year was a shambles," Roye said, adding that he has since "cleaned out the backlog" of overdue fines.

Students overdue in their fine payments can be withdrawn from the University until the fines are paid. The money collected through these fines is kept in a sweep account and put into the Massachusetts general budget at the end of the year. Legislation is being proposed which would put the money collected from such fines directly into the University in the form of scholarships or financial aid, Roye said.

"We'd like to keep the money back here where its from," he said.

About $100 to $125 is collected each week in shoplifting fines, Roye said.

Students who shoplift from the University Store are stealing from themselves, John Kussisto, merchandise manager for the store said. This is because the money from the store helps fund the Campus Center, he said.

"Our jobis not to apprehend shoplifters, just to prevent them," Kussisto said.

Store security, which has been trained by the University Police, caught 126 offenders last semester, Kussisto said. Store security employs thirteen people, with two or three on at any given time, he said.

Most shoplifters are handled through the student judiciary system, Kussisto said, but non-students and repeat offenders are sent to Hampshire District Court in Northampton.

No matter what the value of the shoplifted object, all violators are prosecuted, Kussisto said.

"We can't say a little bit is okay," he said.

About 50 students stood waiting outside the tower library between 7:15 and 8:00 last night, while University of Massachusetts police and Amherst firefighters responded to a fire alarm. A small fire was discovered in a trash can on the 25th floor of the tower, but Amherst fire Chief Victor Zumbruski said it had been extinguished by the time police and fire officials arrived. Zumbruski said the fire "looked suspicious." Police have no suspects.

Working women face challenges

By LORI KIRKLAND
Collegian Staff

A woman who chooses to do a "man's job" is often sexually harrassed, a victim of discrimination, exposed to homophobia and subject to verbal abuse, according to Myra Hindus, coordinator of the Working Women's Program at the Everywoman's Center and leader of a support group for women in non-traditional jobs.

"Women who work in non-traditional occupations are often the victims of sexism and homophobia," Hindus said. "Men sometimes assume that a woman carpenter or plumber either can't do the job properly or is a lesbian for wanting such a job," she said.

"Linda Pirog, a skilled laborer who works for housing services at UMass, said that when she first got the job men assumed, "Oh, she'll do the paperwork and keep the office clean, but when she started to do actual labor their attitude changed to "Oh, she must be gay;only a lesbian would want a man's job".

The reason most women want such an occupation is because it pays better than most secretarial or clerical jobs, Hindus said, adding that some women genuinely enjoy skilled labor.genuinely enjoy skilled labor

"I think the job is interesting. I like getting my hands dirty, taking things apart and putting them back together; figuring out how things work," Pirog said.

One of the hardships in acquiring such a skill is not a woman's lack of aptitude but "keeping a steady job while training without suffering from exhaustion," Hindus said. "Some women have a family to care for and finding child care can be a problem. Such obstacles can cause a woman to drop out before completing their training," she said.

"I learned quickly, but I found that my (superiors) over-explained simple things. They seemed surprised at how fast I picked things up," Pirog said.

The Everywoman's Center is offering a support group for women in non-traditional jobs that will be free and confidential. "The group gives women a place to realize they're not alone. Here they can vent their anger about sexism and share their experiences," Hindus said. Hindus, who facilitates the group, said that they will also discuss strategies on how to enter non-traditional occupations and the availability of such occupations in the area.

The support group is offered to women in the University and community and will be meeting Monday evenings beginning February. Women interested in participating shoud contact the Everywoman's Center.

Restroom thefts net cash, supplies

University lavatories seem to have been a popular place for thefts Thursday, University of Massachusetts police said.

• A wallet containing $100 was left behind a toilet seat in a Campus Center women's room and was stolen several minutes later, police said.

• Soap, toilet paper and towels were taken from a men's room in Morrill Science building Thursday evening. Police also said the restroom had been vandalised.

In other police reports:

Several students from Kennedy dormitory were caught by campus security officials stealing a milk crate and a Soutwest Area Government sign from the Campus Center Friday morning. Police said because the property was of such low value, the students will be disciplined by the University rather than campus police.

Mount Holyoke students learn as counselors

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Students at Mount Holyoke College, an exclusive women's school, are getting an education of a different sort as they encourage pregnant teen-agers from nearby Springfield to finish school.

The program is the brainchild of Mount Holyoke junior Thara Jefferson of New York City, who has organized 28 students to volunteer as mentors to the pregnant girls.

"We try to allow the college student to be a role model," said Doris Harris, who runs the program. "This is someone who is in college and has gone ahead with her educational growth."

"We ask the college kids to have sensitivity to the teen-ager who is pregnant," she added. "They don't have to advocate it, but they must recognize that teen-age pregnancy does happen in this day and age. We ask them to be non-judgmental."

The program has turned out to be as educational for the students as for the girls they counsel.

"I think they have a lot of courage for what they've been through. I have respect for them. My life has been easy," said one of the mentors, Cheryl Tourtelotte, 20, of Springfield.

The program began when Ms. Jefferson was assigned to do a report on a regional social services agency. She chose a new program being offered by the Springfield YWCA, Pregnant Adolescent Girls Education.

After completing her research, she decided that Mount Holyoke had something to offer the teens in trouble.

"I was very impressed with what they were doing," Ms. Jefferson said. "I thought it would be nice to see if we could get some involvement on this end."

Springfield's teen pregnancy rate was the third highest in Massachusetts in 1983, the latest year for which figures were available. In 1983, 171 Springfield girls under the age of 18 gave birth. That translates to 36.7 births per 1,000 teen-agers compared to the state rate of 12.2 births per 1,000 teen-agers.

Woman killed in city hall

LOWELL (AP)—Police reported yesterday that a young woman was found beaten to death in a stairwell at City Hall.

In a separate incident, a youngster was found dead in an abandoned factory building.

Patrolman John Clarke, on routine patrol yesterday morning found the body of Patricia S. Richard, 23, of Lowell in a stairwell at City Hall, according to Sgt. John E. Sullivan. He said the woman had been beaten to death.

Sullivan said no motive had been established, and no arrests made.

At 4:30 p.m., police were called to an abandoned industrial complex on Bridge Street, where they found to body of Matthew Ventura, 13, of Lowell.

According to Sullivan, the victim, along with a brother and a friend, apparently climbed a fence surrounding the complex and then went up a fire escape to the fifth floor of the building. Matthew then slid down an idle conveyer belt, and dropped about 50 feet to the ground.

Sullivan said the youngster was pronounced dead on arrival at Lowell General Hospital.

X-rated theater is gutted by fire

BOSTON (AP) - A smokey blaze upstaged the x-rated movie at the Scene Theater in the Combat Zone, and authorities say the fire may have been set.

No injuries were reported in the Saturday morning blaze, which forced fire officials to close the theater in the city's seedy pornographic district.

Firefighters were hampered by cold weather, which turned the spray from hoses into ice that coated the fire trucks and ladders.

Fire Commissioner Leo D. Stapleton said the fire started on the top floor of the five-story structure housing the theater and spread so quickly that firefighters were ordered out of the building shortly after they arrived.

The fact that the upper stories of the building were boarded up hindered access, Stapleton said, adding the cause fo the fire "is regarded as suspicious at the moment." Officials estimated the damage at $100,000.

As water cascaded from the building, workers at the Intermission Lounge next door waited for a chance to move equipment from the nightclub, but Stapleton told them it would not be safe to do so for a while.

Judge orders woman to return $32,550 ring

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - A Middlesex Superior Court judge has ordered a Wellesley woman to return a $32,550 engagement ring to her former fiance, who had sued her for it after he decided to break off the engagement.

Judge Hiller Zobel, citing a 25-year-old case as precedent, said Friday he found that although Pasaquale Franchi, 55, a wealthy Weston businessman, had broken off the engagement to Carol Bosworth, 37, he was entitled to the ring.

Franchi owns the Waltham Racquet Club and "about 800" apartment units, according to his testimony.

He testified he had planned to marry Ms. Bosworth in 1983, and had given her the ring to persuade her to discontinue her education in Kansas City, Mo., and come to Weston to live with him and later to marry.

Ms. Bosworth said she had planned to sell the ring to pay back about $15,000 in education loans.

Out in the cold

Frozen, frustrated and angry describes how we felt Friday night. We were two of a crowd anxiously awaiting the last run of the PVTA bus in Amherst Center. After waiting a half hour in temperatures below 0° we decided to start walking down North Pleasant Street towards UMass. As we approached the corner of Fearing and North Pleasant Streets we spotted the North bound Campus Shuttle bus starting to pull into the bus stop. Frantically waving the bus driver down, we ran across the street through green light traffic to reach the bus in time. As we passed in front of the bus to reach the doors before they shut, the bus attempted to leave. While still inside the area, the driver stopped the bus and refused to open to doors stating "I can't", and went warmly on his way.

We feel that the bus driver acted poorly under the circumstances - last run, below 0 temperatures, etc. . . If he had better things to do in the time it would have taken him to open the door, then maybe he should consider another type of employment.

After all, doesn't the PVTA exist to serve the public?

For the record

With respect to the article last week on Dr. Masuyama's and my research on the long term genetic effects from the Nagasaki atomic bomb, some points should be corrected. The A-bomb (called "Fat Man") was detonated 500 meters above Nagasaki and not 80 Kilometers! The primary blast, fire and radiation effects were restricted to an area less than 3 kilometers in diameter, not 80 kilometers (which is approximately 50 miles!). And finally, Dr. Masuyama and I are not funding this research out of pocket, I am often desperate for research funds but have not yet reached that point.

Dow way off base

Progressive, peaceful change in South Africa would be fine if it were at all likely to occur; which it isn't. The whites in the government of South Africa are not willing, and have no intention of giving power to black South Africans nor are they willing to give any meaningful power to the Hindus or the people they call "Cape Coloureds."

Perhaps Peter Dow's (Collegian Thursday) view of South Africa as a "utopia" has blinded him to the realities of the place. Or perhaps he has forgotten to ask the question; "What have the minor improvements that have recently occurred in South Africa been an improvement to?"

Dow states that the blacks of South Africa "enjoy a level of economic and physical well being unmatched...." He however neglects to note that blacks are restricted in what jobs they are legally allowed to hold and by law earn on average 16 times less than a white doing the same job. Under such conditions an extra buck an hour would be a big improvement.

As to physical well being, blacks in South Africa may still be stopped at any time by any white and forced to show their pass which identifies them and states where they are allowed to be, work, and live. They can also be arrested and imprisoned without trial for any reason or no reason at all. Just last year several black miners were shot to death by whites for protesting inhuman conditions at their workplace. The whites who shot them were not even policemen and yet were still not charged with any crime. So much for physical well being and trade union rights.

The question of education in South Africa is an interesting one. In 1973 the average amount spent on black education was $9.00 (in South African currency) the average amount spent on a white child's education was $180.00 per term. At the rate of growth that Dow mentions, the amount spent on black education would have to grow quite a long time before it was even acceptable let alone equal.

Dow may see great improvement in South Africa but I do not. As a friend of mine put it "It's a lot like going to a country where genocide is being perpetrated and applauding because torture is down 30 percent that week. It's not enough Dow, not nearly enough.

An award-winning speech

Kevin Sweeney

Wednesday night thousands of television viewers saw one of the finest acting performances of a lifetime. In a one-man show entitled, "The State of the Union or How I Lied Through My Teeth to the American Public", Ronald Reagan gave a virtuoso performance of deceitfulness and dishonesty. The show, a forty minute monologue consisting of half-truths and pieces of misinformation, aired at nine o'clock on all three networks.

Too bad this wasn't just another made-for-TV movie; this was real life!

Issue by issue Reagan either really didn't know what is actually happening in the world or he just decided to ignore reality. Time and time again he portrayed himself as a "savior" of the poor and impoverished, when he is actually a "messiah" of the rich and famous. He claimed that his is an administration concerned with the people of developing nations when it is actually one concerned with American corporate investments in the countries of the Third World. Finally, he asserted that in the last four years his presidency has encouraged peace and stability, when actually it has done little for Soviet-American relations and has constantly resorted to "gunboat diplomacy" as its only tool.

In reference to his proposed fiscal year 1986 budget, he said "...the social safety net for the elderly, needy, disabled and unemployed will be left intact." What social safety net is he talking about? Does he mean the one that he has put so many giant holes in, because of severe budget cuts, that thousands of people fall through it every year? He even admitted in his very next breath that his plan includes cutting back both Medicare and Medicaid. In other words, if the poor don't fall through the already gaping holes in this so-called safety net, they will be fine as long as they don't become ill or injured.

Later in the address, Reagan refered to "our strides in civil rights." His administration has no right to use any possessive pronouns to describe any strides in the struggle for human equality. It is an administration which ignores civil rights legislation and insults civil rights leaders.

"In the area of education," he stated, "we're returning to excellence..." I guess his concept of excellence in education is cutting financial aid so that the poor and middle-class cannot afford institutions of higher learning.

These were only a few of the many times he told half-truths about domestic issues. Yet his statements about international affairs were even more ludicrous.

"Since 1981, we have been committed to seeking fair and verifiable arms agreements that would lower the risk of nuclear war and reduce the size of nuclear arsenals." This is certainly a new one to me. How could he have been working on any kind of agreement if didn't even make one sincere attempt to talk with the Soviets in the first three and a half years of his presidency? Rather than work for a stable world peace, he had resorted several times to name calling, referring to the Soviet Union as the "Evil Empire."

Later he commented, "There are more than three billion human beings living in Third World countries, with an average per capita income of 650 dollars a year. Many are victims of dictatorships that impoverish them with taxation and corruption." This is perhaps one of the only true facts he used in the entire address. Yet he went on to ignore the fact that those oppressive governments he referred to are the same ones he supports economically and militarily in nations like South Africa.

It is amazing how many un-truths you can fit into one speech. But I suppose if you are a good actor, you can do anything convincingly. Let's just hope we don't see you-know-who at the Emmy awards this year.

Christianity is not just for fundamentalists

I am writing in response to the letter/diatribe by my fellow-Christian, Rusty Denton. In his defense of fundamentalism, he overlooks a few rather important details. Firstly, not "all Christians" believe that only Jesus of Nazareth is the means of experiencing God in an individual's life. We don't really have any idea what Jesus meant when he said that "none cometh to the Father but by me", or even if he really said it at all. Secondly, yes, God created man and woman and made them a family by adding Cain and Abel (and later, Seth). Cain murdered his brother and then went on (if we are forced into a literal interpretation) to sleep with Eve and thus produce more of the human race. Incest is not a very pretty way to describe the origins of the third-generation humans on this planet.

Secondly, being gay and a Christian (don't shudder, it is possible) I can very strongly say that my homosexuality has not made my family or my family life "disposable". My parents, even if unaccepting of my lifestyle, are still loving, caring, and wonderful people. I have learned to respect their problems with homosexuality not because they condemn it, but because they still love me and I them, in spite of those problems. If you had your way, I'd probably be forced into unnecessary "therapy" and separated from my family so that I wouldn't contaminate them. Don't condescend, Denton. God is my God as well as yours, just as the Republican Party is mine as well as (unfortunately) Mr. Falwell's. Thirdly, I am appalled that you would blame John F. Kennedy's death, rioting, the falling economy, and drug abuse on the refusal of some people to allow the intermingling of state and Church. I always thought those things were the fault of the Russians.

I am a Christian, not a fundamentalist. Christ condemned the fundamentalists of his own day, so I would walk very softly when he comes back.

Students should know how money is spent

The Collegian article Friday, on the initiation of late night bus services by the PVTA failed to mention how this service was funded. Students should be made aware that the UMass Transit Advisory Board and the PVTA did not fund these new routes, but that the service was, in fact, paid for by the students themselves. This was also the case with the Shoppers Shuttle in service since January 1984. In order to fund these extra buses, the UMass Transit Advisory Board was granted $3,500 by the Student Government Association and received approximately $2,000 from the Graduate Student Senate. These new routes would not have been made possible without the support of student government. We feel that students should be aware of how their money is being spent, and hope that in the future financing of organizations and events be included in all Collegian articles.

Ratford's 1984 "aptly ghastly"

Directed by Michael Radford
Starring John Hurt, Richard Burton
Coming soon to a theater near you

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

Producer Simon Perry's 1984 has made the leap from bookshelf to movie screen with grace and eloquence. This is no mean feat in an era of such pointless cinematic idiocies as last year's Children of the Corn.

George Orwell's grim tale of the pleasureless, police-monitored life in the State of Oceania hits the screen with despair intact.

Winston Smith (John Hurt) appears to be like everyone else; a law-abiding drone. He works in a factory-like office, doctoring old news stories, rewriting history for Big Brother. He does state-required calisthenics before the two-way telescreen in his dingy concrete room. He even represses his fascination for an intriguing fellow citizen (Suzanna Hamilton).

However, Winston is committing thoughtcrime, not just sucking down the governmental Pablum, as evidenced by his covert diary. And when Julia slips him a note--"I LOVE YOU"--we know it's just a matter of time until all hell breaks loose.

The couple meets in the country, away from the relentless chaperoning telescreens. The dismal, dark gray and brown tones of the film dissipate, giving way to a lush springtime scene, packed with color and passion.

Winston and Julia continue their love affair in a rented room above a dusty antique shop in the proletarian neighborhood, a slum where the "scum" enjoy the unpatriotic pleasures of singing and sex.

John Hurt is perfect as the fearful but questioning Smith. He haunts the film like a reluctant ghost. And Suzanna Hamilton's blunt, sturdy and rebellious Julia is beyond reproach.

In his last role before he died, Richard Burton is wonderful as O'Brien, the seemingly sympathetic administrator who eventually betrays Winston.

A few things that grated: although frank nudity was acceptable in the context of the film, there was a preponderance of female nudity, (namely Hamilton's), while Hurt got to hide under the covers most of the time. Not fair.

Also, the scene in which O'Brien brainwashes Winston, although well-acted and aptly ghastly, is so long and drawn-out that we were tortured as well.

But on the whole, 1984 is a magnificent film, eerily produced at the time and place Orwell envisioned the story: in London, in the spring of--you guessed it--1984.

It is a thoughtful and artistically-crafted movie with a timely message. It's worth your time, energy, and money.

And that's no doublespeak.

Ethiopian 'nightmares' haunt social worker

BOSTON (AP) — A Winchester social worker and 1970 UMass graduate who was drawn by reports of famine to her native Ethiopia said yesterday she was unprepared for what she saw when she returned last month after a 10-year absence.

"I still have nightmares," said Enku Kebede, 36, who spent five weeks in the African nation. She said she is going back this week for a three-month stay to evaluate a United Nations resettlement project for famine victims and to help establish an orphanage.

"I saw a mother who was carrying her infant child, who died in her hands," said Ms. Kebede, a state social worker who handles child abuse cases.

"She was crying, a silent cry. You could see her tears falling. She couldn't move, she couldn't go to bury her child. She sat there for hours without moving.

"I still wake up dreaming about one of those things," Ms. Kebede said in a telephone interview.

Ms. Kebede left Ethiopia in 1970, graduated from the University of Massachusetts, earned a graduate degree at Harvard and is a United States resident.

Automobile fines build scholarships

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students who pay parking tickets or traffic citations may be indirectly reimbursed by a UMass scholarship.

Last year, campus police distributed about 57,000 parking tickets and traffic citations. Between $200,000 and $400,000 are collected each year from these tickets, Lawrence Holmes, assistant director of UMass Public Safety, said.

Fines are collected in Hampshire District Court and turned over to the Bursar's Office,

Holmes said the money is then put into a Traffic Fines Scholarship which gives awards to about 400 students each year, said Jackson, director of the financial aid office.

"It's a need-based scholarship for in-state and out-of-state students," Jackson said. He said the scholarship account has accumulated money for over 10 years, enabling the financial aid office to give away about $400,000 each year.

There are 26 kinds of parking violations and about 100 kinds of traffic violations ranging from speeding to driving without a license or a registration. Parking tickets range from $5 to $10 while moving violations range from $20 to $100, Holmes said.

Campus police issue more speeding tickets than any other kind of citations, Holmes said. "They're given out to improve the safety on campus and to reduce the risk of traffic accidents," Holmes said.

Students can pay their tickets to the campus police or directly to the Bursar's office.

The University does not have to pay a processing fee to Hampshire District Court, unlike cities, towns and municipalities. He said the University and the court worked out an agreement to send the money directly back to the Bursar's office many years ago.

College Basketball

Minutemen proving who belongs where

Peter Abraham

It's been, to say the least, surprising. When the season started the University of Massachusetts basketball team was picked to come in last by the Atlantic 10 coaches. The loss of center Edwin Green and leading-scorer John Hempel were supposed to signal another down year for the Minutemen.

Those same coaches are now looking up at Ron Gerlufsen and Company. UMass, 11-10 overall, sits at 7-5 in the league and solidly in third place with George Washington. They own sweeps of St. Bonaventure (a one-point loser to number-one St. John's) and Rhode Island, a three-game win streak and a lot of new-found respect.

The Minutemen have also, for the first time since 1977, taken two straight on the road. All this with a 6-5 center.

Or does it? Unknown, apparently, to the rest of the A-10 coaches, UMass has a solid team. At 6-5, Horace Neysmith can play with any big man. Bobby Braun, despite not being able to leap over the Sunday newspaper, is averaging close to ten rebounds a game, guards Carl Smith and Donald Russell are good outside shooters and clutch performers, and freshmen Lorenzo Sutton and Matt Ryan have provided valuable minutes and points.

The biggest tasks lay ahead. UMass is one the road at St. Joseph's on Thursday. The Hawks are 6-6 in the league and playing well. Powerhouses George Washington, West Virginia and Temple invade the Springfield Civic Center after that. The next four games decide who does what, plain and simple.

The Atlantic 10 tournament winner gets an automatic berth into the NCAA tournament. Temple, despite its impressive 17-3 record, needed a last second shot by Howie Evans to get by St. Bonaventure. The Owls aren't a sure bet. Any one of six teams, and that includes UMass, has a legitimate shot at getting the championship and berth. It is possible.

So why are there no people at the Springfield games? Who knows? UMass is certainly exciting. Witness Smith's last-second heroics against the Bonnies and Penn State this past week. Maybe the latest wins will serve notice to what has been a lazy student body. Let's hope so, because a 16-12 record isn't out of the question. Add a few wins in the A-10 tournament, even with a loss, and 18-12, 17-13 may get an NIT berth. Maybe I am dreaming, but at least this season it is possible, not like the past few years when being competitive was good enough. Look, if you can't go to your college's basketball games and at least hope, you've got no reason to go. And thanks to 14 gutsy kids who didn't listen to the polls and a coach who wouldn't let them, there is hope again at UMass.

STATISTICS DEPARTMENT—Donald Russell, after combining for 13 points in two games, has 43 in the last two UMass wins. He needs only 33 points to catch Mike Pyatt on the UMass all-time scoring list. UMass has signed 6-5 swingman Beatle Brown of Baltimore to a scholarship. UMass won two games with Neysmith averaging only 8.5 points. So much for my "As Ho goes..." theory. But he still did all the other things very well (rebounding, passing, defense, etc.) Take Georgetown and give as many as six tonight, Villanova won't rebound after St. John's and from what I saw Saturday in the Garden, G-town has returned.

UMass' Donald Russell broke out of his slump with 43 points in the last two games.

Donovan illuminated the pool once agian with his record-breaking 4:40.30 in the 500 yard freestyle. He was followed over 18 seconds later, by Hugo Phillip of UNH with a 4:58.67.

The Minutemen diver came back to prove themselves in the three meter diving. Mullen took first followed by Bryant of UNH, raising the score to 58-38.

With only two events left in the meet, the Minutemen took off, sweeping the 200 yard breaststroke with the team of Hoover, Fred Marius and Chad Stalker. The UMass 400-yard frestyle relay teams blew away the competition, finished 1-2 with times of 3:23.67 and 3:28.74.

"We're not swimming as well as we usually do right now. They (the team) are tapering off right now, training for the New Englands," Yarworth said. The New Englands, Feb. 28 to March 2, are the high point of the season and will determine the overall winners in the New England conference. The Minutemen have one final dual meet before individual competitions. At 7 p.m. tonight, they face Amherst College.

The weekend was also a successful one for the UMass women's Gymnastic Team, as they prevailed over Springfield College on Friday, 160.75-158.45, and then took second place in a quad-meet on Sunday. Both meets were in Boyden Gym.

UMass scored 161.55 points in the quad-meet, behind Temple's 172.70. Vermont took third place, followed by North Carolina State.

Sophomore Patricia Camus took second place all-around in the meet against Springfield. "I feel more confident, and relaxed. I'm finally having fun doing gymnastics," Camus said.

In the quad-meet, the Minutewomen, 5-8, did particularly well in the floor exercise, scoring 42.55 points. Senior captain Jennifer Pancoast went from a disappointing performance on the balance beam to the floor exercise, where she scored a team high of 8.95.

Smith pulls win out in OT, 79-78

Last-second jumper puts UMass over .500, in third in Atlantic 10

By STEVE COOPERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

STATE COLLEGE, PA — When are University of Massachusetts basketball opponents going to learn?

When the Minutemen have the ball with time running out and trail by a point, point guard Carl Smith is going to drive the lane, pull up and drop in a soft 10-17 footer.

He did it three times last year to win games and once already this season, and again Saturday night with a second to go in overtime as the Minutemen came home with a 79-78 victory over Penn State.

The victory puts UMass over .500, 11-10, for the first time this late in a season since 1977. In the Atlantic 10 conference UMass moves into a tie for third place with George Washington at 7-5, also the best mark for a UMass team, at this point, since 1977.

The winning basket made up for a pair of missed free throws by Smith that would have won the game in regulation with a second left.

The Minutemen have now won seven of their past nine and three straight. They have already equaled last seasons number of conference wins with six games to go.

Penn State, 3-9 and 7-12, came back from a 14 point deficit to take a 78-73 lead on Tony Ward's three-pointer with 2:48 to go in the overtime.

Donald Russell then hit a jumper before PSU's Mike Peapos missed a one-and-one. Smith cut it to 78-77 with a hoop with 2:04 left. Penn State ran it down until the 0:17 point when Lorenzo Sutton fouled Carl Chrabasez.

The 6-8 forward missed, UMass called time out with eight seconds to go and set up Smith's game winner, a 17-footer from the wing.

"We designed the play for Carl to go to the gap of their zone like he did, but to kick it back out to Russell," UM coach Ron Gerlufsen explained. "But being the competitor Carl is I'm sure he wanted to redeem himself, and he did."

UMass took a 36-32 halftime lead behind Russell's 11 points and 11-of-22 shooting. The Nittany Lions climbed back into the game behind Dwight Gibson, who came off the pines to score 23 points, and tied it at 69 with 1:51 to go.

Paul Murphy gave Penn State its first lead with two foul shots with 51 seconds left before Sutton hit a layup. UMass called time out and Ward fouled Smith with a second left on a shot.

PSU coach Bruce Parkhill called two time outs and with the 2,622 in Recreation Hall on their feet and screaming, Smith missed both shots.

In the overtime, with center Horace Heysmith out with five fouls and Bobby Braun following just two minutes into the extra period, UMass pulled together and took the victory.

All five UMass starters were in double figures led by Russell with 23. Braun and Neysmith had 13 each with eight and 10 rebounds respectively. Smith had 11 and seven assists with Sutton adding ten. Matt Ryan had seven.

UMass was 26-of-49 from the floor (53 percent) and 23-of-33 from the line (70 percent). They outrebounded Penn State 37-26.

"This was a great win," Russell said. "We really came together and showed we wanted it. We were confident we could win, but really had to concentrate in the overtime. We're just taking them one at a time from now on and hoping for the best. We're really showing how we can play."

Penn State was hurt by 24-of-54 shooting (44 percent). There were a massive 59 fouls called in the game.

Comeback falls short, women edged 66-65

Free-throws and turnovers cost UMass

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

For the second game in a row, poor free-throw shooting and turnovers late in the game cost the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team as they lost to the University of Maine 66-65 yesterday at Amherst College.

The loss came despite an 18-point and 10 rebound effort from UMass guard Barbara Hebel and a late comeback attempt by the Minutewomen that saw UMass outscore the Black Bears 10-3 with 1:26 remaining in the game, capped off with UMass guard Juanita Matthews' basket at the buzzer.

"The comeback pleased me," UMass coach Barbara Stevens said. "But the fact that we allowed ourselves to get that far behind where we had to make that kind of climactic come back was a little dissapointing. We went for a couple of stretches there where we did not score any points. We couldn't afford to do that against this club."

UMass came out strong in the first half. Hebel and forward Tara Lewis provided UMass with an effective pressure defense keeping the Maine offense busy throughout the period. Offensively, UMass was patient, looking for and finding good shots against Maine's tough inside game. At the close of the half, UMass led 33-32 and had out rebounded the Black Bears 24-14.

In the second half it was Maine that showed what its press could do. The Black Bears dominated the first eight minutes of the period and outscored UMass 20-10. But in the next five minutes, UMass used some strong defense of their own and narrowed the score to 54-50.

With a little over a minute to play, UMass finally started to put some points on the board. Hebel and Lewis had some key baskets and provided strong defense again.

UMass forward Jerry Bernier also added some fine defensive work against Maine's Liz Coffin and Kelly Norbert while providing UMass' only clutch free-throw performance as she hit a pair with two seconds to go.

Matthews then intercepted Maine's inbound attempt and tallied her seventh and eighth points of the game from thirty-five feet out

"It seems as though when we lose we do it to ourselves," Stevens said. "Today we did it with some poor free-throw shooting and committing some key turn overs in the second half that caused us not to score for long periods of time. It's what we do to ourselves. Hopefully, with some time and patience we can cure some of the ills we have."

Maine's Emily Ellis led all scorers with 19 points. Also for Maine, 18-7, Coffin had 16 and Norbert scored 16 and grabbed 10 rebounds. Bernier scored 14 for UMass and Lewis scored 10. UMass, 9-14, out-rebounded Maine 46-33. UMass travels to Northeastern on Tuesday for its next game.

Gymnasts and swimmers post victories

By NANCY A. BUKAR
Collegian Staff

Saturday was another easy day for the University of Massachusetts men's swimming team as it chalked up another win, defeating the University of New Hampshire, 68-39.

The Minutemen won 10 of 13 events highlighted by Drew Donovan's breaking of his own school and pool record in the 500 yard free-style, by two seconds.

"I anticipated the win," UMass coach Russ Yarworth said. "We usually beat them anyway."

Once the Minutemen hit the water, there was no stopping them. The always-dependable team of Marc Surette, Mike Hoover, Craig Fuller and Donovan posted an impressive time in the 400-yard medley relay, taking first with a 3:37.39 and beating UNH by almost 10 seconds.

In the 1,650 yard freestyle Mark Waters took first with a 17:32.62 and qualified for the New England championships. Jim Flannery swam a close race with the Wildcats' Gino Margarino in the 200 yard freestyle and came up the winner with a 1:48.13.

Donovan cleared the field once again in the 50 yard freestyle with a 22.00, followed by UNH's Bob Schuter with a 22.85

UMass pulled a 1-2 in the 400-yard individual medley with the team of Paul McDonough and Steven King. Finishing with a 4:29.03 and a 4:32.05 respectively.

The score at that point was clearly in UMass' favor, 31-12. UMass' Keith Pisani and Pat Mullen had stiff competition from wildcat divers Tim Bryant and Al Beaulier. Mullen managed to take third in the one meter competition, and the lead was cut to 12, 32-20.

In the 200 yard butterfly, always a power event for the Minutemen, UMass pulled away with 1-2-3 on the Wildcats with Fuller, 1:55.73, Mike Minutoli, 2:01.04 and Chris Clarke, 2:02.04.

The Wildcats got their first win in a swimming event with Schuter's 50.17 in the 100 yard freestyle. UMass' Brian Life After UMASS???

Be For You

by Segun Eubanks

"Graduate School? Are you crazy? If I never see another classroom again it will be too soon." This is the typical reaction of most students (particularly people of color) after four or five years of undergraduate study at UMass. However, in coordination with Black History Month, The members of the Office of Minority Graduate Student Recruitment (OMGSR) and the The Minority Graduate Student Association (MGSA) are ready to convince you that, "it's not all that bad," and this Thursday, Valentines Day, you may even fall in love with a graduate school.

From 3 to 7p.m. at the Hampden Commons in Southwest, OMGSR and MGSA will present the First Annual Minority Graduate School Fair. The fair, which is designed to provide information to undergraduate students about potential graduate school prospects, is part of an effort to increase minority enrollment in Umass Graduate programs and the enrollment Umass graduates in general.

Other goals of the Graduate school fair include initiating a mechanism to monitor the progress of minority undergrads as they enroll in graduate degree programs and to establish dialogue between minority graduates and undergraduates. To achieve the ladder, University of Massachusetts graduates will act as recruiter for schools participating in the fair as opposed to bringing in professional recruiters from the schools.

There will be information available from over seventy universities throughout the United States (see table), included among them, a large number of traditionally Black schools. Law programs, Medical schools, PH.D programs and more will be featured along with two workshops facilitated by Judy Toyama, Director of the OMGSR. While academic achievement is the major factor in determining admissions into Grad school there are many other factors of which Ms. Toyama wil discuss in the workshops.

Now I'll bet you're just dying to go check out this spectacular event. But wait! There's more! After you are enlightened with the wealth of information provided, you can unwind and have fun with your favorite sweetheart at a Valentine's Dance also in Hampden Commons from 9p.m. to 1 a.m. (a bit early but remember it's a school night). The sounds of the Fred Clayton Quinlet and the music of "Daddy" Neil will provide the entertainment that is sure to bring the entire community together for a fun evening.

A small donation will be requested for the dance, but if you attend the fair and send for more information on at least two universities, the dance is on the house.

With a full schedule of activities that include information, education and entertainment, the First Annual Minority Graduate School Fair is an event not to be missed. So be sure to stop in Hampden Commons, Southwest this Thursday. It may be the wisest stop in your college career.

This Fanatical Call For 'Just - Us'

by Chris Williams
Nummo Staff

When Bernard Goetz shot four Black youths on the Saturday before Christmas in the name of self-defense, many people both Black and White, supported his action. This is not suprising considering the rampart crime that occurs in New York City, especially in the subway system. Black on Black violent crime affects a large segment of the Black population, therefore to a certain degree it can be understood why many Blacks supported Goetz's behavior.

What should be questioned besides the incident of the shooting is the way Bernard Goetz has been treated by society. Hardly anyone can say what exactly happened on the subway except that Goetz was asked for five dollars by four Black youths, but it is the lynch mob mentality that has swept the country that concerns me. White America in particular seemed to applaud Goetz's actions, lacking concern that the screw drivers that the youths possessed were not sharpened or brandished. Furthermore, two of them were shot in the back which means that they were running away, and that several of the bullets that Goetz used were "dum-dum" bullets which means that once they enter the body they explode causing increased damage.

If Goetz was a Black man who shot four white youths, under the same alleged circumstances, I seriously doubt if he would have recieved all of this praise. In fact, a Black person under these circumstances would run the high possibility of recieving death threats. But what the courts have found him guilty for is illegal possession of a firearm, and not for shooting the four youths. Such a decision should send a message to the Black population, especially males, that its "open season" on them. This of course has not been acted out directly, but you can be sure that the subtle implications of this case are noticed by Blacks.

This fanatical call for justice just like everything else in America reaks in white suremacist idealogy. What the white, general public, politicans and judiciary means by justice is "justice for just us!" Black people should remember that in the Dredscott vs Stanford case the Supreme Court ruled that, "They (Blacks) had no rights which the White man was bound to respect."

I suggest that Black people observe this mentality instead of thinking that money, college degrees, light-skin, jerri-curls, and Bill Blass clothes will change the way most White people think about us. If we do not, we might find ourselves in concentration camps.

Bishop Tutu:

Committed to Change

by Christopher Allen
Nummo Correspondnet

Desmond Tutu, winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, was enthroned as the first Black Anglican bishop of Johannesburg after getting special permission to enter the white neighborhood where the ceremony took place.

During the ceremony, Bishop Tutu gave the white minority government a deadline of two years to dismantle Apartheid.

In a service to staid reformation rites and joyous African hymns at the candle - lit Cathedral of St. Mary the Virgin, Bishopl Tutu attacked South Africa's racial segregation as "evil and un-christian." "I am committed to peaceful charge," the 53 year-old clergyman said as he reviewed his offer to serve as a go between with the outlawed African National Congress, the main organization opposing Government oppression. A ripple of applause, uncharacteristic of Anglican services, spread through the 2,000 white and black parishoners at the end of the sermon.

Foreign diplomats joined church representatives from Europe and the United States, as well as impoverished blacks from villages and segregated townships, in the prayers and singing. The South African government sent no representative to the service.

Strick security measures were imposed at the ceremony after death threats were reported. Policemen gathered in groups around the cathedral, and four police riot vehicles were parked on streets crowded with worshippers who could not squeeze into the church. There were, however, no incidents. Right Rev. Merwyn Castle, dean of St. Mary's said the Church had recieved "about four" telephone threats against Tutu's life in the past weeks, the person who took the call said the caller spoke with an Afrikaan accent.

Afrikaan is the Dutch-derived language of the ancestors of white settlers who arrived at the Cape of Good Hope in 1652. Government television and some Pro-Government news media have criticized Bishop Tutu's selection for the Nobel Prize, saying he is a radical using his position as a cleric to hide his intentions of encouraging violence against whites.

Building today's pryamids

February is Black History Month. During this month, which is 'coincidently' the shortest of the calender year, African-Americans are supposed to tell their entire history - an almost impossible feat. Unfortunately, many people who have taken the responsibility for presenting our history have done so without its contemporary relavence. Thus, by presenting our history in this vacum mode it will inhibit us from liberating our minds. However, there are some Africans who do the contrary. Two that come to mind are Dr's John Henrik Clarke and Yosef ben-Jochannan. Having been influenced by these two great men has prompted me to discuss what Black History Month should be.

Black History Month should provide a direction that African people can go in! This direction should contain the following: Community,Respect,Love and Self-reliance.

Black History Month should be a time when African people look back to the past to see where we have come from and to look into the future of the rapidly approaching twenty first century. Without this basic principle it is not adequate to present films,discussions and lectures on Frederick Douglas, the now crippled Civil Rights Movement and on intergration. In order for history to assist us in our struggle today there has to be some sort of analysis from an African perspective in an attempt to relate the past to present conditions.

During this period it is not enough to know that it was the Ancient Africans, now called Egyptians, who built the pyramids. Those of us who are pursuing careers in engineering or the natural sciences should attempt to build some pyramids in the Harlems of the world. However, what do most of us do? We try to brag and boast to the world about working for a business or corporation that rapes and sucks the blood of African people and her resources. With a clear understanding of history we will instantaneously see that this behavior we are engaging in, is insane and morally incorrect.

Furthermore, Black History Month should give us the inspiration to be self-reliant again. In 1985 we can no longer sit back and beg for crumbs; it is now the time for positive planning and meaningful action. As Booker T. Washington said,"cast down your buckets where you are".

UMass rated high in A.A.

But is it enough

by Christopher Allen
Nummo Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst has been declared the highest Black faculty employer presently. The statistics run counter to a national trend of state colleges having appreciably better minority hiring records than private colleges, according to federal data. Affirmative Action specialists attribute the difference to the greater sensitivity of public fiananced schools to political pressure.

The hiring record of Massachusetts public colleges has improved slightly since the election of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, who has made a public commitment to increased minority hiring, and the Affirmative Action officer of the State Board of Regents is optimistic about more progress. As of last July 30th, five of the twenty-eight state institutions (Framingham St. College, Middlesex Comm. College, Quinsigamor Comm. and Mass. Maritime Academy) have no Black teachers.

The all-white faculties at the three community colleges contrasted with the record that such institutions across the country have of hiring more blacks, according to federal records. Affirmative Action specialists say community colleges usually have better records because there is a large pool of applicants with the required Master's degree, rather than the doctorates needed at universities.

Umass-Amherst employs thirty-four Black professors while Umass-Boston and Roxbury Community College employs 32 and 20 respectively.

"I've always been looking for the specific answer why we don't have more black faculty," said Bruce Rose, Affirmative Action Director at the State Board of Regents. "The Board of Regents does not have personal authority over the campuses. Without that, it's a little difficult to get leverage."

At Umass-Amherst, Affirmative Action Director Ron Sinacori said a $250,000 "special opportunity fund" was established as of Jan. 1 to provide salary funds for academic department that have recruited minorities, but do not have job openings.

"A Soilder's Play"

The Negro Ensemble Company, America's foremost black theatre, will present its critically acclaimed production of "A Soldier's Play" on Saturday, February 23, at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Winner of both the Pulitzer Prize for drama and the New York Critics Circle Award, Charles Fuller's myster thriller has been hailed as a triumph in cities throughout America. The 8 p.m. performance is co-sponsored by the New WORLD Theater and the Fine Arts Center at the University.

Set in 1944 at Fort Neal, Louisiana, shots ring out in the night and Technical Sergeant Vernon Waters, a black career Army man, is found dead. In the suspenseful mystery that follows, special Army investigator Richard Davenport finds that to unmask the murderer he will first have to unlock the terrible secret of the dead man's agonized last words -- "They still hate you." A compelling whodunnit, the case takes on a deeper dramatic dimension as it probes a man's search for dignity amid the tangle of old hate and new hope confronting World War II America.

Playing to capacity houses in New York for fourteen months prior to the start of this national tour, "A Soldier's Play" was selected as one of three American productions to appear in Los Angeles in conjunction with the 1984 Summer Olympics International Arts Festivial, after which it was a U.S. representative to the prestigious Edinburgh International Festival in Scotland.

Tickets for the February 23 performance are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, at DATATIX outlets, and at the Springfield Civic Center. For ticket information, call the Center Box Office at (413)545-2511. For phone charge reservations, call 1-800-243-4842. Mastercard/Visa accepted.

Male and female faculty to be polled

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

The final draft of a questionnaire to determine the satisfactions and dissatisfactions of women faculty members at the University of Massachusetts was completed yesterday by the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Women.

The committee, comprised of women faculty and staff and a graduate student, began designing the questionnaire in Fall 1983 to investigate why, "despite affirmative action efforts there has been no significant increase in the number of women faculty at UMass in the last ten years," said Charlotte Rahaim, professor of education and chairwoman of the committee.

The questionnaire, which will be the first faculty satisfaction survey conducted at UMass, was modeled from similar questionnaires used at Amherst and Smith College.

"We looked to see if other questionnaires existed so we didn't have to invent the wheel," said history professor and committee member Joyce Berkman. "We then brainstormed with our own experiences to generate questions relevant to UMass," she said.

The questionnaire, to be distributed later this semester to both male and female tenure track faculty members and departed faculty, consists of 55 questions divided into five major sections:

- Teaching Environment: Questions investigating teaching and advising loads, as well as satisfaction with current teaching evaluation practices.
- Research: Questions investigating satisfaction over the encouragement, support and respect given to faculty research projects.
- Professional Community: Including questions relating to amount of committee and service activities, as well as satisfaction with collegiate atmosphere, merit allocation and salary levels.
- General Information: Age, ethnic background, sex, years at UMass and so on.

According to Berkman, reasons for distributing the questionaire to male faculty are to "find out what is shared by men and women faculty and what is distinct."

"We need to know how satisfied the men are if we want to find where gender makes a difference," she said.

Another purpose of the survey, is to "find out if women and minority faculty are leaving at a higher rate than male and non-minority faculty and if so to explore the reasons," said Marian MacDonald, psychology professor and committee member.

The failure to retain women faculty at UMass makes it paricularly important to "get a handle on the experiences of women on this campus," Berkman said.

According to Rahaim, experiences of the women faculty on the committee suggest that conditions for women at UMass are far from healthy.

"We had a woman from chemistry on the committee and we saw the problems she was facing in a male dominated faculty," Rahaim said. In addition, "we saw women leaving who we thought were super, and women who should have been promoted passed by," she said.

"Women won't come to this campus if it is a hostile community," she said. "With 85 percent male faculty that's hostile."

Berkman is suspicious that a major finding of the survey will show that women are "overworked" by more teaching and advising and committee demands than their male counterparts.

Asked what would improve the climate for women faculty on campus, Rahaim suggested an increase in numbers, more women in positions of power, a stronger network of women on campus and a more balanced reward system, thus giving greater merit for teaching, advising and committee work.

The results of the survey will be reported to the UMass chancellor, provost, faculty senate, Board of Trustees and state Board of Regents, Rahaim said.

Asked if she thought the results would constitute a basis for change, she replied, "Half of me wants to believe that they are simply not aware of the situation, but that once they are they will act as men of good spirit."

Residents endorse housing proposal

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

The majority of about 50 Amherst residents who attended a hearing last night expressed approval for a plan to build two housing units for the mentally and physically handicapped on land owned by the University of Massachusetts.

Although the final decision on the houses is up to the UMass Board of Trustees, officials at UMass have agreed to accept input from the town.

The plan was drawn up by the State Department of Mental Health and calls for the houses to be built next to the Wysoki House on North Pleasant Street in Amherst.

"It'll be good for UMass students to see these people. It's our responsibility as human beings to take care of them," said John Dittfach, who attended the hearing.

And Tim McCarthy, who spent eight years at the Belchertown State School for the handicapped said, "We treat criminals a lot better than people who can't take care of themselves." But, in dissent, Karl Gottschall, who lives near the proposed site, said,"I, as a resident, would not like to see these built. For me personally, it would have a negative impact."

Each unit would cost an estimated $280,000 and would house eight people, up to half of which would be confined to wheelchairs, according to State Mental Health Dept. Associate Area Director, Mark Refowitz.

Ben Ricci said, "How can the physical planning committee (at UMass) choose a site without input from the clients?"

Robert J. Harper, capitol operations coordinator for the Executive Office of Human Services, said the plan will provide an anchor from which the Mental Health Dept. can look at its overall policies.

"It's the first step in solving the overall problem (of adequate housing for the handicapped)," he said.

Refowitz said Amherst was chosen as a possible site because the state already owns the land through the university and because Amherst is generally receptive to human services projects.

UM student arraigned on attempted murder

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
AND GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

A 20-year-old University of Massachusetts student was arraigned yesterday on three assault charges including attempted murder concerning his involvement in a fight at a party in Amherst Friday night.

Arthur J. Papandrea, who was arrested at 9:20 p.m. Sunday, was arraigned in Hampshire District Court on charges of assault with intent to commit murder, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and assault with a dangerous weapon.

Papandrea pleaded innocent to all three charges and was ordered held in Hampshire County Jail on $1,000 cash bail.

According to Amherst police, Papandrea allegedly struck the victim on the head with a beer bottle during a fight that began after Papandrea threatened to stab the victim with a kitchen knife. The victim, a 19-year-old male University of Massachusetts student, was admitted and released Sunday from Cooley Dickinson hospital where he received 130 stitches to his neck and face, according to Monday's Daily Hampshire Gazette.

The Gazette reported that Papandrea was a resident of 16 Cranberry Lane, but a phone call to that address last night revealed that he was only a house guest.

Residents of the house where the assault occurred also said, "This (incident) is a case of mistaken identity. He wasn't the one who did it."

Police were unavailable to confirm the Gazette report.

Also yesterday, police identified the body of a Groton man who was found dead behind the Hampshire Mall Friday.

Kyle Congleton, 19, died of exposure, state trooper Daniel Jamroz said.

Jamroz said Congleton was alone that day and no foul play was involved. The case has been closed.

Students must forget luxury

WASHINGTON (AP) - William J. Bennett, the new secretary of education, said yesterday that President Reagan's budget cuts may force some students to give up their stereos, cars and beach vacations to pay for college.

Bennett acknowledged that eliminating loans and grants for more than 1 million college students would force some families who are already sacrificing "to tighten the belt even further."

But he suggested that other students will simply have to forego luxuries.

He likened it to a "divestiture of certain sorts: stereo divestiture, three-weeks-at-the-beach divestiture."

"I do not mean to suggest this will be the case in all circumstances, but it will, like the rain, fall on the just and unjust alike," said the former philosophy professor.

Bennett, at his first news conference, also said the belt-tightening could make people more cautious about spending $20,000 on a college education. He cited a new report from the Association of American Colleges that concludes the bachelor's degree has lost much of its value.

"More of us might start thinking about the $20,000 investment with the same sort of care we think about when we buy a car: kick the tires and drive around the block," said Bennett.

John Brademas, president of New York University, charged Sunday they amount to "a declaration of war on middle-income America."

Khmer Rouge surrounds city

ARANYAPRATHET, Thailand (AP) - As many as 1,000 Vietnamese troops seized a Khmer Rouge outpost near a major base in western Cambodia to try to drive the guerillas into a vise in the mountains of western Cambodia, Thai military officers said yesterday.

The Khmer Rouge claimed yesterday that they had surrounded Battambang, Cambodia's second-largest city, and forced Vietnam to divert some of its troops to the Cambodian interior. A top Thai military official said the report "could be true."

After an all-day attack Sunday, the Vietnamese seized the hilltop outpost a few miles from the major Khmer Rouge stronghold at Khao Din, said Col. Chettha Thannajaro, deputy commander of the Eastern border Field Force.

But he said in a telephone interview that the guerrillas "withdrew from their outpost after long resistance against heavily armed Vietnamese forces...It doesn't mean they were defeated. The withdrew to set up another defense line."

Khao Din is part of a complex of mountainous guerrilla bases strung along the border with Thailand south of Aranyaprathet. Thai officers said the Vietnamese are trying to trap the guerillas against the Thai border by attacking from the east and south.

Khao Din, the objective of Vietnam's drive from the south, is about 20 miles south of Aranyaprathet.

The Communist Khmer Rouge are part of a resistance coalition fighting to oust the Vietnamese from Cambodia. Vietnam invaded Cambodia in late 1978, ousting a brutal Khmer Rouge government.

Frays highlight weekend

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

An unidentified man attacked a ninth floor resident of John Adams dormitory Sunday morning after the student complained about a noisy party being held in the next room.

University of Massachusetts police said the man beat up the student, who later went to University Health Services. The floor's resident assistant stopped the fight, but could not identify the attacker. The incident is still under investigation.

Police also reported another fight, which occured Friday evening, in the men's room next to the Bluewall in the Campus Center. Two individuals were fighting about a woman, police said. One student was taken to the infirmary and was treated for a bleeding lip and a chipped front tooth.

In other weekend news:

• Police confiscated a metal-studded belt from a man at a dance in the Student Union late Thursday night. Police said the belt was considered a dangerous weapon. When their attention was diverted to a fight the individual ran away without giving identification.

• An unidentified man left several dead roses on doors on the fourth floor of Van Meter dormitory Friday night. He entered an unlocked room and told a student that he was looking for a friend. When he left the room, he began to pound on other doors, and then left the dead flowers behind.

• Two non-students were arrested after they alledgedly stole a chair from Beta Kappa Phi fraternity Friday night. When the two men saw a police car approaching them, they put down the chair and began to walk away from it.

• Malicious damage was done to Herter Hall and the Fine Arts Center sometime last week. The slogan "U.S. Out" and "U.S. for U.S., Nicaragua for Nicaraguans" were sprayed on the buildings with red paint. There are no suspects

• A Volkswagon Rabbit was removed from its parking space in Lot 42 early Saturday morning and replaced by a Chevrolet Camaro. Police said someone may have taken a joyride and moved the cars around. The incident is still under investigation.

• North Village residents complained about a suspicious individual who was peeping into windows Monday morning. Police followed the suspect's footprints in the snow and found that they led to a fence bordering Puffton Village.

Local school texts examined

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Regional School Multi-Cultural Committee, now in its tenth year, seeks to sensitize both teachers and young children to issues of racism and sexism, said committee member Sue Woodfork, librarian at Marks Meadow School in Amherst, yesterday.

The committee, comprised of teachers and librarians from Amherst area kindergartens, elementary schools, and high schools screen all texts for sexist and racist content before the books hit the classroom.

According to Robert Murphy, Director of Elementary Education in Amherst, teachers began to make "conscious efforts" to increase awareness around sexism and racism about ten years ago.

"We would not even consider buying a text if it were racist or sexually biased, if it excluded members of various cultures, or portrayed women in only passive roles," Murphy said in a phone interview.

"We realize that freedom of speech is important in education," Woodfork said, adding that the committee's main role was advisory.

"We just try to help teachers become aware by giving them the tools to do so," she said.

Since the committee's formation ten years ago, it suggested not using several books, including: Charlie and the Chocolate Factory, because it portrayed the oompa loompas, characters of African descent, as inhuman and incapable of taking care of themselves; Mary Poppins, because the main character only meets stereotypical characters; and Five Chinese Brothers, which perpetuates the notion that all Chinese people look alike.

Woodfork also pointed out overt stereotyping in the kindergarten level series See How It's Made.

That literature showed a black hand picking cotton for a white man's shirt, an all-male business world and women as housewives or passive characters.

"Here we see a very loud and clear message without saying a word; done solely through illustrations, which, at times, are much more powerful for children," Woodfork said.

"We have had instances where younger students are really upset about something they saw as racist or sexist," said Murphy. He also said he has seen "considerable change" over the last 10 years in terms of consciousness raising in the schools.

Michael Egan, an English professor at the University of Massachusetts who teaches Children's literature, said parents may subconsciously transmit stereotypes in an otherwise innocent bedtime story.

Rudyard Kipling's Jungle Book, Egan said, perpetuates accepted ideas about patriarchy and racial inferiority by showing male seals saving an island and male snakes killing their worst enemies--females.

Egan said such stories are "not always consciously ideological" but are like the "steady drips of water that wear away at a stone."

According to Murphy, there have also been efforts to bring in female career models for lectures and presentations, which had previously been dominated by male professionals. Murphy said many skilled teachers see the injustice in a sexist education, but some are still unaware of subconscious unequal treatment of boys and girls.

Murphy said the school system tries to give freedom to a child such as not attempting to discourage boys from playing with trucks and footballs or girls from playing house. He said, "We are trying to make it a comfortable environment so a child can do what he or she wants without experiencing name calling.

Lincoln's motives debated

By RHONDA APPLEBAUM
Collegian Staff

Americans observe Abraham Lincoln's birthday today as debate continues over his motivations for freeing the slaves in his legendary Emancipation Proclamation and two University of Massachusetts professors have joined the discussion.

Ernest Allen, chairman of Afro-American studies told the Collegian that, "Following the Emancipation Proclamation, blacks considered Lincoln to be a saviour. In retrospect, it turns out that the freeing of the slaves was more a military move than a humanitarian gesture."

However, history professor Stephen B. Oates, who wrote the book With Malice Toward None: The Life of Abraham Lincoln, said, "Lincoln was a deeply moral man who understood the terrible wrong of slavery and hated it."

"The Emancipation Proclamation was given for a variety of reasons, one of which was military, but there was also a deep moral issue in the Emancipation Proclamation," he said.

Although Lincoln has historically been thought of as an abolitionist, "Lincoln's view was that blacks should be colonized (sent out of the country) once slavery was overthrown," Allen said.

"He did not have the same viewpoint as the majority of white abolitionists of the period who were against colonization. He was not in the forefront of black rights," said Allen.

Allen said that people often forget that the Emancipation Proclamation only applied to the southern states in rebellion.

He added that Kentucky, Missouri, Maryland and Delaware were exempt from the ruling.

According to Oates, his most recent book, Abraham Lincoln: The Man Behind The Myth, "attempts to demolish the myth that Lincoln issued the proclamation solely for military reasons."

New UM motto will appear soon

By TIMOTHY O'NEIL
Collegian Correspondent

The school motto of the University of Massachusetts will soon have its first public introduction since its conception last May.

The Latin slogan, "reipublicae scientia prodest," and its translation, "knowledge is beneficial to the Commonwealth," will be appearing on Classics Department stationary and some of the recruitment literature, according to Roger Roche, department of design and production services director.

The new school motto will not replace the state seal and the state motto which now appear on all UMass material.

The new motto "will not try to compete with the state seal", Roche said.

For this reason, the state seal will appear on the top of the Classics Department stationary and the school motto will be added to the bottom, he said.

Classics professor, Vincent Cleary has suggested that other departments use the school motto on their stationary also.

The school motto was chosen in a contest offering a $100 prize and is the first in the school's history.

Stand by your sentence

Today I was infuriated and you should be too.

Walking across campus between Herter Hall and Bartlett, I was confronted by a sentence. The sentence said, "U.S. for us, Nicaragua for Nicaraguans." The content of this sentence wasn't offensive, however, the way in which it chose to express itself was.

It was spray-painted in large red letters across the side of a white building where it was nothing more than an eyesore, a clear illustration of selfishness and immaturity. "Why am I being forced to look at this?", I thought, suddenly realizing the effectiveness of the advertisement in attracting my attention.

So it got my attention. Big deal. It didn't make me think about Nicaragua or U.S. imperialism. It made me angry to think that students' money must pay to have this stuff regualrly sand-blasted off of the walls. What would our campus look like if every political "artist" took it upon themself to decorate our buildings? Probably like the New York City subway system. I came to Amherst hoping to get away from that sort of self-absorption.

It's very impressive that some people feel they have mastered the political sphere to the extent that they can summarize their final conclusion in one sentence and scrawl it on the side of a public building. I do not condone apathy. However, may I suggest a few other forms of self expression?

For one, there is always the Collegian. Although if one is really stuck on the visual effects of graffiti perhaps they would consider doing their work on a piece of cardboard with which they could stand in front of the building of their choice.

I know I would lend a lot more credit to someone who stood behind their sentence [literally] than to someone who wrote and ran.

Besides, this method of adhering words directly to a building via spray paint is merely vandalism. If the artist doesn't have the time to stand around with a sign all day, maybe they could tape it to the building. This way I could tear down the atrocity with the same righteous vigor they felt when they put it up.

Letters to the Editor

A 'rush job' on MassPIRG?

I am writing in regard to the February 7 article on the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group [MassPIRG].

First, the headline "UMassprig" should have been UMass*PIRG* — Public Interest Research Group.

Second, the article stated that the Pollution Penalties Bill, which MassPIRG has actively supported, passed last semester. The bill did pass unanimously in the Senate, 30—0. But the session closed before it reached the House floor. Unfortunately, this bill is not a law yet — it must pass through both the Senate and House this session.

Finally, the Pollution Penalties Bill would allow the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering [DEQE] to fine illegal polluters. Violators could be polluters of air, water, or land. Although "Clean Air Act" is one law that could be violated, it is not the primary focus of the Pollution Penalties Bill, as the article states. The bill is designed to fine those who dispose of hazardous wastes illegally.

We regret any unclear communication on our part.

We know that newspaper deadlines sometimes require "rush jobs" by the reporter. Yet, does meeting a deadline justify inaccurate journalism?

Poet's exhibition 'special'

Let me correct two misleading statements in the account of the celebration of which June Jordan's lecture was the center-piece. [Collegian, Feb.5] Phillis Wheatley's Poems on Various Subjects [London, 1773] is the two-millionth volume acquired by the University Library as a whole, rather than "the millionth volume of rare books." The library unit where that splendid volume is now on display in an extensive exhibition devoted to America's first black poet is called Special Collections and Rare Books; this unit holds about twelve thousand volumes. [The University Library as a complete system holds well over three million items of library material, of which not all are books: many are works in microform, or maps, or musical scores.]

The way the Wheatley Poems came to the Library was this: when the Library, by great good luck, had located a copy [not in London, but in Austin, Texas], Dr. Bromery, long a good friend of the Library, provided the funds to purchase it. It is thus his gift to the Library and to the University, for which we are very grateful.

The Phillis Wheatley exhibition, which we believe to be the first on so comprehensive a scale, incorporating as it does manuscripts, pamphlets, books, periodicals, and photographic reproductions from many of the strongest collections of Wheatley materials, was designed and assembled by Lisa Baskin of Leeds, with the assistance of Professor Emeritus Sidney Kaplan. It will be on view through March 14 in the Special Collections and Rare Books Reading Room, Tower Library, 25th Floor.

Empathize, don't stigmatize

Diane Lane is a very good writer and it is exciting to see issues of great significance addressed in a thoughtful and genuine manner. Nonetheless, her article, "A generation lost in space" merits a similarly heartfelt response.

I feel rather like an oracle who has drunk deep from the now mythologized and slandered epoch known as "the hippie era." There was a good deal of drug usage in the anti-Vietnam era. However the sharing of this illegal substance frequently had both a group bonding and an anti-establishment aspect to it; this dimension seems rarer today. Although sentiments of dread and isolation are part of the human condition — especially felt in the sensitive and the idealistic — one crucial difference between 1970 and now is that then there was a specific, identifiable focus for disenchantment with the status quo, viz., the Vietnam War and that anti-war sentiment [enhanced by the various trappings of counterculturism ie., dress, songs, rap sessions, etc.] united its members thus ameliorating those feelings.

For Lane to cite an entire generation for "betrayal" though seems excessively harsh. This belief combined with the second part of her title: "...with no time to start again" supplies two vital clues to our current malaise. Can you recall Dr. Martin Luther King's "Letter from a Birmingham Jail" when he expresses "the agonizing loneliness of the pioneer"? The task of creating vital social change, though perhaps more in vogue in an earlier time, has never been easy. Howard Zinn gives innumerable examples of the sufferings of a people in The People's History of the United States.

So then Lane, I can deeply empathize with your feelings but would suggest we not further stigmatize any particular group. Each moment we have the choice of creating anew or clinging to the old and the familiar [but how the world craves the former while seldom letting on it does!] The potential for healing each other and the world can never be extinguished. But as Erich Fromm says in The Revolution of Hope, there are strong forces operating against human beings. Shall we recant?

Sociological view is basis of ruling

"The question of abortion grips our nation...Tonight I ask the Congress to move this year on legislation to protect the unborn."

And so with this quote from the Feb. 6 State of the Union address, President Reagan weighed in on the side of the pro-life movement yet again. Still, it remains to be seen whether Reagan will do more than pay lip-service to his friends of the pro-life persuasion–as he did in his first term–or whether, unchained by the 23rd amendment he will pursue legislative repeal of Roe v. Wade.

Andrew M. Paven

Already the neanderthal fundamentalists are out of their caves proclaimining their morality and sanctity for all to see. What heartbreaks they will endure if their man Reagan sacrifices the social issue on the altar of political deal-making.

Meanwhile, the fundamentalists prattle on demanding strictly literal interpretations of the Constitution–as they do with the bible. [Do you think many of them have read William Jennings Bryan's testimony in the Scopes Trial?] They argue that the decision in Roe v. Wade sprang from whole cloth, and thus should be immediately overturned. They ignore, however, the history of constitutional interpretation.

The Roe decision was, as opponents claim, not based on a strict definition of the Constitution. It was however written with what might be called a sociological view of the purpose of law. The justices ruled 7 to 2 that, because of the horrific consequences of thousands of illegal abortions, and because such consequences obviously were not being prevented by the existence of abortion laws [and that the poor suffered much worse in back alleys than the rich did in illicit clinics], that the most Solominic decision was one that would make the decision of abortion a private one, between a woman and her doctor.

Further, those who argue for "strict construction," calling for the Court to be true to the "intent of the founders," might be interested to find out that abortion was widely legal when the Bill of Rights was written. Thus, to prohibit abortion, conservatives must call not for judicial restraint, as they have historically, but for judical activism. [Heaven help us if it is of the fundamentalist stripe].

One argument that can be made against Roe v. Wade, however, is that its conditions for legal abortions, relying on trimesters, are arbitrary at best. Though the Court set 28 weeks as the fetus's age of viability, progress in medicine has doctors and jurists arguing between 25 weeks, 21 weeks and 27 weeks. The question remains: At what point does a fetus's right-to-life supercede a mother's right to control her body?

If we answer, as pro-lifers do: From the moment of conception. We are left with a situation where the fetus's right-to-life supercedes even the mother's right-to-life. Legally, one may not take an innocent person's life even to protect one's own life. Abortion of a fetus, under the absolutists' [read, fundamentalists] claim, would not fall under the Court's definition of self-defense even if the mother's life were in danger. This likely was part of the Court's thinking when it decided not to confer full rights to fetuses in 1973.

And according to recent public opinion polls, the majority of Americans still favor legal abortion–hard as that may be to believe after watching the pro-life hordes night after night on the evening news.

But perhaps the time restraints should be re-considered in light of medical progress. But who should re-consider them? The Courts? Fundamentalists who still insist on literal interpretations of the Bible [did Methuselah really live 969 years]? The medical community? The polity?

In the meantime, in this age of nationally televised sonograms that air without comment about the producing-doctor's assumptions, the following quote from a lawyer-journalist seems to me a fount of common sense: "I am not overly impressed by the recent spate of grotesque demonstrations that ever-younger fetuses can smile or wave their limbs. So can dogs. Until you prove to me that a three-month fetus has a greater sense of itself than, say, a cow, I am going to continue thinking that the best solution to this impossible problem is to leave it in most circumstances to the woman who's got to live with the result."

Since the 14th Century and probably earlier, this special day has been observed in nearly the same manner it is today. Love letters, cards decorated with satin and lace, and small tokens of affection are sent, often anonymously, to the object of the heart's desire. Whatever its origins, Valentine's Day is a day for remembering that special someone.

UM 'sluggish' in swim rout of Jeffs, 67-46

By NANCY A. BUKAR
Collegian Staff

In their final dual meet of the season, the University of Massachusetts men's swim team easily defeated Amherst College last night at Amherst, 67-46.

Pool and school records were broken by backstroker Marc Surette and Craig Fuller and the Minuetemen took first in seven out of thirteen events. Absent from the meet was butterflyer Mike Minutoli out with a concussion.

"They're sluggish right now because they're training for the New Englands.. they don't quite have the speed and snap that they usually do," UM coach Russ Yarworth said.

UMass cleaned up in the 400 yard medley relay, taking first and second. Amherst's Andy Epstein took the 1000 yard freestyle with a 10:15.86 followed by Paul McNeil, with a personal best of 10:20.10. Drew Donovan, with a 1:51.09, won the 200-yard freestyle and Amherst's Lee Smith placed first in the 50-yard freestyle with a 21.70.

Gary Anderson of Amherst stole the 200 yard individual medley but the Minutemen divers outclassed the competition with Pat Mullen taking first, followed by Keith Pisani. Chris Clarke pulled away in the 200-yard butterfly with a 2:02.29. Smith finished .05 of a second ahead of Donovan with a 47.50 in the 100 yard freestyle. Surette set the pool record in the 200-yard backstroke followed by Fuller's dominatin of the 500-yard freestyle.

It was the first time that Donovan, an Iowa transfer, was beaten in individual competition this season.

Pisani and Mullen pulled another 1-2 in the optional diving. Anderson rook the 200-yard breaststroke and the Lord Jeffs took first in the 400-yard freestyle relay.

The Minutemen travel to the Atlantic 10 Championships in West Virginia next weekend. "I'd like to get third there," Yarworth said.

The swimmers are a blur off the blocks, last night at Amherst College. The Minutemen whipped the Jeffs, 67-46.

Dan Conway and the UMass men's ski team beat BC in the giant slalom on Sunday.

Umass ski teams stay in first with strong weekend

The University of Massachusettswomen's ski team once again proved that they are superior to the other teams in the conference. This past weekend the Minutewomen won both the slalom and giant slalom races at the Brown Carnival led by sophomore Kathy Smiley. UMass now leads the league with 34 points over second-place Plymouth State College with 27.

In the slalom, Smiley finished first with a two run combined time of 101.95 seconds. Captain Sue White was both second for UMass and second overall with a time of 104.92 seconds. Next off the hill for UM was Lisa Luczkow who posted her best finish of her college racing career in fourth place. Also steady in the gates was Colleen Sweeney close behind in fifth place. Julia Wells, Tricia Higgins, and Kara Mullen finished 11th, 12th, and 19th.

Smiley once again took the top honors in Sunday's giant slalom, increasing her winning streak to three straight races. Colleen Sweeney raced to a third place finish to contribute to UM's victory. Also skiing well were Luczkow, Wells, and Kara Mullen.

The men skiers are back on track winning both races at the Brown Carnival, held at Loon Mountain in New Hampshire. Dan Conway paced the team with a first and a second place finish. This was the first time the men won a giant slalom race this season over a strong Boston College team.

In the slalom, Conway led the Minutemen in first place. UMass secured the victory with Jonathan Segal (5th), Bob Faigel (6th), Andy M. Clarke (7th), Mark Dennis (15th), and Kris Vanderzee (20th).

After the first run in Sunday's giant slalom, the difference between the first and third place teams was only 1.3 seconds. UMass was first and managed to hold onto that spot with fine racing by Conway, Billy Davidson, Faigel, Craig McCordic, Clarke, and Vanderzee. This race marked the first time in the 1985 racing season that the Minutemen beat the BC Eagles in giant slalom.

Women at NU, track runs second

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

In an attempt to recover from two consecutive losses, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team travels to Northeastern tonight to battle the Huskies.

The Huskies, 16-6 overall and 5-1 in the Sea Board Conference, come into the game ranked as the nation's No. 1 defensive team (52.1 points per game) and lists national powers Maryland and Cheyney St. as two of their more prominent victims.

"They really come at you defensively," UMass head coach Barbara Stevens said. "We'll have to be very patient in making sure we get the high percentage shot. We'll have to be at our offensive best."

Northeastern has four players in double figures, led by 5-9 forward Pam Green, 15.6 ppg., and 6-1 so. center Carla Singleton, 11.3 ppg.

"We'll have to force them to play a perimeter game," Stevens said. They score a lot of their baskets off their fast breaks which can be attributed to their defense." Game time is 7:30 p.m.

In track action over the weekend the UMass men placed second in the Eastern Championships at Colby College in Maine.

Powerhouse Southern Connecticut won the meet with 124 points with the Minutemen scoring 76. Maine was third with 65.

UMass winners included Mark Themea in the 880 at 1:56.43 and the distance medley relay team of Jack Marinilli, Todd Johnson, Craig Moburg and Chris Axford with a 10:17.15.

Other UMass places came from Eric Winer in the 600, second at 1:13.89. Ted White was third. Steve Tolley was second in the 1,000 with a 2:13.90. Bill Stewart was fourth. John Pannaccione was second in the two mile with a time of 8:56.19. The two mile relay team was third at 7:55.07. Johnson was also third in the high hurdles with a 7.80.

"It went pretty much as expected," UM coach Ken O'Brien said. "Southern is a strong team and when we scored well in the 1,000 and 600 we grabbed second and they maintained the lead. It was a good meet for us."

The UMass women also took a second, they trailed only Holy Cross in the Crusader's Invitational Meet on Sunday.

UMass winners and meet and fieldhouse record-setters were Barbara Cullinan in the 600 (1:37.4) the 4 x 800 relay team of Maureen O'Reilly, Sue Goldstein, Julia Ott and Sarah Kitchell (9:39.4) and Kitchell in the 1,000 (3:01.7).

O'Reilly was second in the 1,500 at 4:44.1. Diedre Doyle was second in the 5,000 at 18:26.3. Chris Pratt and Sally Howes were third and fourth.

Kari Fleischman was third in the long jump at 15-5 ½. Leah Loftis was third in the 660, Bridgette Booker won the 55 meter dash in 7.2 and third in the 220 (27.4).

"We could've won, but we put people in the events I felt they would do well in and saved a few of the girls for Dartmouth (a dual meet on Saturday)," UMass coach Kaleleni Banda said.

"They (Holy Cross) picked up a lot of fifths and sixths to beat us. I was happy with the way we ran, people like Maureen O'Reilly and Barbara Cullinan are starting to show how well they can run."

The UMass women's swim team dropped a tough 111-29 decision to a strong New Hampshire team on Saturday in Durham.

Senior Liz Feinberg remained undefeated in individual competition, winning the 100 in 55.36. UMass' only other winner was Sue Freitas in the 500 with a 5:44.32 clocking.

Several UMass swimmers qualified for the New Englands (next Friday) in the meet. Margaret Cameron had a 2:23.93 in the 200 individual medley. Melissa Rice swam a 1:09.18 in the 100 backstroke and Lori McCluskey swam a 2:06.54 200 freestyle qualifying time.

Tonight the women swim in their final duel meet of the season at home in Boyden Pool against Mount Holyoke. The meet is at 7 p.m. and the women, 2-9, hope to finish up on a winning note.

"We should beat them and I hope we can qualify a few more swimmers for the New Englands," UM coach Bob Newcomb said.

"They (New Hampshire) are a very good team, probably third in the New Englands," Newcomb said. "We are overmatched by them, but Feinberg and Freitas showed they could keep their pace and win. They did well as did the swimmers who made the New Englands."

Reid a finalist for UMaine job

University of Massachusetts assistant football coach Jim Reid is one of the seven finalists for the University of Maine-Orono head coaching position.

Reid, the UMass defensive coordinator and interim coach last spring before the hiring of Bob Stull, joined Washington and Lee Head coach Gary Fallon, Harvard assistant Lawrence Glueck, Rhode Island offensive coordinator Niles Nelson, Augustana College head coach Robert Reade, Gettysburg head coach Barry Streeter and Buddy Teevens, Boston University's offensive coordinator as the other finalists for the job opened when Ron Rogerson took the Princeton job.

Reid, 34, a UM coach for 12 years, graduated from Maine in 1973.

Teacher sues the University

Claims denials of freedoms

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts assistant professor, who was denied tenure last year for what he claims are biases against his liberal views of alternative sexuality, filed a $165,000 federal lawsuit against the University Monday in U.S. District Court in Springfield.

Roger W. Libby, a family researcher, theorist and sexologist, is suing the Board of Trustees, President David C. Knapp, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and other administrators and faculty members for their alleged suppression of his First Amendment right guaranteeing freedom of speech.

The suit, filed by Libby and Northampton attorney John J. Green Jr., also includes a demand for an injunction to prevent Libby's dismissal this May.

Libby said the University made "a concerned effort" to suppress and restrict his non-traditional sexual views. Libby said these efforts, in the form of poor faculty evaluations and oral criticism from department superiors, affected the decision to deny him tenure.

University officials and administrators were unavailable for comment.

In a phone interview Tuesday, Libby said, "In short, they're canning me because I'm outspoken. They will not accept the fact that I teach what they consider non-wholesome subjects. The (home economics) department will not acknowledge that these subjects are valid in today's society."

Board of Regents reject student member

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

GARDNER — The state Board of Regents of Higher Education yesterday failed by one vote to pass a motion to endorse the presence of a student on its board, but student lobbyists will still try to push their bill through the legislature.

The board, at a meeting at Mount Wachusett Community College attended by student representatives of the State Student Association of Massachusetts and members of the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association, voted 7-2 in favor of the motion, one vote short of reaching a majority. Regent Edward T. Sullivan left the meeting before the voting took place.

Also at the meeting, Chairman David J. Beaubien announced the retirement from the board of Foster Furcolo, a former U.S. congressman and governor of Massachusetts from 1957-1961. Furcolo, who is now a federal administrative law judge, was instrumental in establishing the Commonwealth's community college system.

Beaubien said Furcolo's reason for retirement is "additional assignments" related to his work.

Debate about the endorsement of the student regent position centered around whether students represent a special interest group and whether their presence would segment the board.

Regent Hassan Minor, who opposed the motion, said the governor, who appoints all regents, has always had the power to appoint a student to the board if he wanted to. He recommended that the governor appoint a student on the basis of his or her qualities, and not solely as a representative of the students.

Chancellor of Higher Education John Duff said that based on his experience with student members of the Board of Trustees, he believes students "tend to behave and act like other regents" and should not be labeled as a special interest group. They, like the other regents, will have broad concerns," he said.

"I don't think it's the most pressing issue before the board, however," Duff said. "Students are getting more representation from the Student Advisory Council than they could from one student."

But Stacy Roth, co-chairwoman of the SGA Public Policy committee, which has sponsored a bill calling for a student regent, said the committee will continue to lobby at the statehouse and may even re-address the regents.

"I really think it's going to pass eventually," Beth Harrington, Public Policy co-chairwoman, said. "But if the board of regents had supported the motion, it would have been no problem."

Groups on both sides of the issue of whether to allow the United States Air Force to construct radio communications towers in the area voiced their concerns last night during an open forum at the Northampton County Courthouse.

The Hampshire County Commisioners sponsored the forum to allow local citizens to air their opinions before the commisoners make an advisory decision to present to the Air Force.

The Air Force has proposed the construction of a radio transmitting tower which could be part of the Ground Wave Emergency Network (GWEN) to be used in the event of a nuclear attack.

Air Force officials backed out from appearing at the forum apparently after learning of the appearance of William Arkin, a defense analyst from Washington D.C., brought here by groups opposed to the tower.

In a prepared statement, the Air Force said that though they "welcomed the opportunity of meeting with you...to further discuss the project as it may affect your citizens," they would not attend because of the inclusion of "people outside the communities involved."

County Commisioner Chair Patrick Goggins expressed disappointment about the absence of Air Force officials, but decided to hold the forum anyway.

Arkin, who is the director of the Arms Race and Nuclear WEAPONS Research Project, said that the Air Force's absence demonstrates their contempt for the citizens and concerns of Hampshire County.

"GWEN is the mindchild of war fighters," Arkin said, adding that the Air Force is abandoning the hope of preventing a nuclear war by preparing for one with the communications system.

But Arthur Quinton, representing the Committee for Civic Responsibility, which supports the Air Force plan, refuted Arkin and his supporters, the No GWEN Alliance.

Advisor to assess homosexual needs

By PHIL SERAFINO
Collegian Staff

The administration announced yesterday the hiring of a human relations planner and advocate to assess the services available to homosexual and bisexual students.

Felice Yeskel, former lesbian and gay awareness trainer for UMass Residential Education East, will hold the temporary part-time position until June. She will be responsible for collecting data concerning student needs and problems, such as anti-homosexual acts that occurred last semester during Gay Awareness Week.

The data will be incorporated into a report for Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs.

Sarah Boy, a special assistant to Madson, said the appointment is not solely a result of demands made by the People's Gay Alliance last semester to have a professionally staffed office for gay, lesbian, and bisexual affairs. By the time the demands were made, she said, "It was becoming real clear to the administration that the climate of civility wasn't there for this population of students."

Boy cited the "heterosexuals fight back" march and the threat by heterosexuals to hang a homosexual in effigy as an impetus for hiring Yeskel.

Yeskel said a lot of the problems between heterosexuals and homosexuals have been the result of "a lack of understanding." She said she hopes to "facilitate an educational process" on campus and "build connections with other people who are concerned with ending oppression."

Boy said that Yeskel's main job will be as a planner, collecting data to determine what services are required. To do this, Yeskel will work with various agencies on campus to find out what students want. Yeskel will also research how other colleges and universities deal with problems such as homophobia and the oppression of homosexuals.

She said this would give a more accurate picture of student needs rather than just relying on a vocal minority such as the PGA.

In addition, Yeskel will be a liason to campus agencies to coordinate services for gay and lesbian students, and also advocate for the concerns of these students on campus.

Boy said Yeskel will try "to put in a real coherent package, what the University isn't doing that needs to be done, and then make some recommendations" to improve the areas found lacking.

MAYORS RESPOND — Hartford Mayor Thirman Milner speaks at Boston's City Hall yesterday before more than a dozen New England mayors on the President's proposed cuts in federal aid to cities. Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn is behind Milner.

Many New England mayors rap Reagan's proposed cuts

BOSTON (AP) — More than a dozen New England mayors joined Boston Mayor Raymond L. Flynn yesterday to criticize President Reagan's proposed cuts in federal aid to cities.

"The budget makers are spending money on star wars in the heavens while I'm worrying about drug wars in the streets of Boston," Flynn said at a City Hall news conference.

unacceptable but unconscionable."

The news conference was sponsored by the U.S. Conference of Mayors, which held a similar session in Chicago on Monday and plans news conferences in Atlanta and San Francisco next week.

If Congress approves Reagan's fiscal 1986 proposal to eliminate federal revenue sharing and the Urban Development Action Grants, Boston could see a slow-down in its building boom and the elimination of police foot patrols, Flynn said.

Added Hartford Mayor Thirman Milner, "It's not just the poor people who are going to suffer."

In addition to eliminating the two federal programs, Reagan has proposed substantial reductions in federal aid to mass transit, housing and nutrition programs.

Flynn said Boston's bill to the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority could double—from $42 million to $84 million—if the cutbacks are approved. In addition, he said, the city would lose $40 million in housing funds.

He said the harm to Boston from the cuts may be unique among the nation's larger cities because Boston must gain approval of the state Legislature before raising taxes to compensate for any shortfall.

"We have an institutional, structural deficit," he said.

Newton Mayor Theodore Mann said that even affluent cities such as his have residents living below the poverty level for whom services must be provided.

Ernest Morial, mayor of New Orleans and president of the 'mayors' conference,' said the federal cuts come on top of other federal reductions in aid to cities over the past several years.

Schools don't apply for aid as federal deadline nears

NEW BEDFORD (AP) — At least $225,000 in federal funds is available to help Massachusetts school districts with asbestos removal, but no one had applied for the money with the deadline just a few days off.

The money is part of a $50 million asbestos abatement program approved by Congress that provides grants and no-interest loans for schools nation-wide to remove or cover the substance.

"I don't know why they're not applying," John Calabero, administrator at the state School Building Assistance Bureau, told The Standard-Times of New Bedford.

The grants would cover 50 percent of the costs, whereas the loans would pay up to 100 percent of the expense, according to Paul Heffernan, regional asbestos coordinator for the federal Environmental Protection Agency in Boston.

The federal program guarantees each state where there is an asbestos problem at least $225,000, and more money is available where there is greater need, he said.

Until 1973, asbestos was applied in the walls and ceilings of buildings as a fire retardant and insulator. Scientists now say the material can cause lung cancer when the fiber crumbles and the particles are inhaled.

Korean dissident's new party makes headway in election

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The new political party was running a strong second in nationwide elections today--no threat to the majority of President Chun Doo-hwan but presaging a strong opposition voice in South Korea's future.

Chun's ruling Democratic Justice Party was certain to retain firm control of the National Assembly, but the showing of the New Korea Democratic Party has exceeded even its own expectations.

With 42.5 percent of Tuesday's vote counted, the Central Election Management Committee said government candidates were running first or second in 88 of 92 two-seat districts, and the new party's candidates in 47. Two moderate opposition groups--the Democratic Korea Party and Korea National Party--had only 24 and 18 leaders respectively, and the other seven top contenders were from smaller parties.

An additional 92 seats in the 276-member body are decided proportionally, with 61 going to the party winning the most seats in the direct ballot. A total of 439 candidates ran in the direct-ballot districts.

The two leading parties dominated all 14 districts in Seoul, the capital, shutting out the Democratic Korea Party.

The new opposition group, which calls Chun a military dictator, was formed only last month and is backed by South Korea's two leading dissidents--Kim Dae-jung, who returned from self-exile last week, and Kim Young-sam. Both are under the equivalent of house arrest and have been blacklisted politically since 1980.

CHICAGO (AP) — Joseph "Pops" Panczko is hardly shy and police say he apparently isn't retiring either: They just arrested the 66-year-old burglar for at least the 150th time.

Panczko, whose eight-page police record goes back nearly five decades, was released Monday after posting a $25,000 bond on a burglary charge.

"He is more or less a living legend," said Sgt. Phil Watzke, who works the district where Panczko's latest arrest took place. "He's notorious--armed robberies, bank robberies, burglaries, you name it."

Panczko has often regaled arresting officers and reporters with his gift of gab, once offering the alibi, "I don't know nothing and I can prove it."

And rather than shy away from the notoriety that followed in the wake of so many arrests, he once told reporters his reputation as a lawbreaker had its advantages.

"I buy watches legitimately for $11 each and sell them for $20 after telling people the're 'hot,' " he said outside a courtroom during one of his trials.

And that business, he continued, was easier than driving a soda truck, the job from which his nickname "Pops" stemmed.

Panczko's latest arrest came Saturday at his Northwest Side home. Also arrested and charged with burglary was his nephew, Richard Grygiel, 40. Grygiel was released after posting a $7,500 bond. Both men are to appear in court Feb 27.

They were taken into custody after police officers watched two men break into a parked car and traced the license plate of the getaway car to Panczko, said Sgt. Patrick Heenan.

Heenan said stakeouts were set up in the area because of an increasing number of car burglaries.

Panczko is the senior member of a family that has logged more than 200 arrests and a dozen convictions on charges ranging from counterfeiting and bribery to a string of jewel robberies.

The youngest and perhaps most notorious brother, Paul "Peanuts" Panczko is said by police to have organized the family and some friends into a gang during the 1940s.

Soviets confirm Chernenko ill

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet officials confirmed yesterday that President Konstantin U. Chernenko is ill and said he canceled a scheduled meeting with Greek Premier Andreas Papandreou, a Greek government spokesman said. Chernenko has not made a public appearance in nearly seven weeks.

Greek government spokesman Dimitrios Maroudas later told a news conference that a planned Tuesday meeting between Papandreou and the 73-year-old Soviet leader had been canceled by Soviet officials who said Chernenko was sick.

"The planned meeting of the premier of Greece with the general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party could not take place due to the illness of Mr. Chernenko," Maroudas said.

When Yvonne John, manager of Yvonne's Restaurant in the basement of the New Africa House, came to the United States from Guyana nine years ago, she started from scratch. Now she has a bachelor of arts degree in food management and is working toward her doctorate in multi-cultural education.

In addition to running her restaurant and catering business, she teaches a class on West Indian cultures at the Malcolm X Center. She also has published her own cookbook, has another one on the way, and is planning to open a restaurant in the Amherst area with her brother which will serve five different kinds of ethnic cuisine.

Yvonne describes her native Guyana as "tropical, where there is plenty of everything and people get along without regard to race. People love one another as brother and sisters; there is no prejudice." She said Guyana is a mixture of several cultures and ethnic groups, including British, Chinese, American Indian, East Indian, black and Portugese.

Women on Campus

Yvonne began working in her father's restaurant at the age of six. "My father is Chinese and East Indian. He owned three restaurants. We also had the largest coconut estate in the county of Berbice, where I worked from a very young age."

When Yvonne, who has 18 brothers and sisters, first came to live in the United States in 1976, she attended a trade and technical college in Los Angeles for a short time and then moved to Amherst to attend UMass.

"When I first came here I couldn't get any financial aid, so I worked for Food Services at Amherst College. I wanted to buy a house so I could bring my six children here, so I worked on the weekends cleaning houses."

Yvonne now owns her own home in Hadley. For the past eleven years, she has raised her six children as a single parent.

"People think if kids don't have a father, they won't grow up right. But a single parent can bring up kids and do a good job. Discipline is very important. Shelter, food and good education come first--everything else is secondary."

In the future, Yvonne would like to work as an international food consultant in ethnic foods for universities and hotels.

Administration hope to reduce drop-outs

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

The administration has formed a committee of faculty, staff and students to try to reduce the number of students who drop out of the Universtiy of Massachusetts.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson said yesterday the committee was assembled to improve retention at the University, "but not to study it. We want this to be an action group."

Madson and Provost Richard O'Brien held an initial meeting with the group Monday. They have one faculty position on the committee left to fill.

"We're looking for motivated, quick-thinking people," Madson said. "This committee is not necessarily representative of the campus."

The committee is comprised of four faculty members, three staff people and two students.

Madson said UMass graduates about 40 percent of its students in four years and about 50 percent in five years.

"That's not an unusual rate for an institution this size, but it's not good," Madson said.

The goal of the committee is a three to eight percent improvement in retention over the next two years, Madson said. The entire committee will meet for the first time Feb. 26.

advising. Madson said he would like to increase the standards by which advisers are chosen and rewarded for their efforts.

"Clearly, publications and research are rewarded. I want to see how we can reward good faculty advising when it comes time for raises and awarding tenure," Madson said.

The committee is chaired by English professor Charles Moran. Other faculty representatives on the group are Lee Edwards of the English and Women's Studies departments and Seymour Shapiro, a botany professor. Beth Elam and student government co-President Rick Patrick are the student members of the committee.

Sarah Hamilton, director of the New Students' Program, Arthur Jackson, financial aid director, and Leona Sidman-Philips, from the Everywomen's Center, are the staff people on the committee.

Madson noted the economic benefits of keeping students at the University. "Obviously, it's better than spending a lot on recruitment," he said.

"But, more important than that is the human value of helping people to be successful. A lot of people leave for the right reason, so the goal is not 100 percent retention. But we do want people to stay here," Madson said.

Student is accused in drug deal

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

A John Quincy Adams dormitory resident was accused of dealing drugs by a man who posed as a University of Massachusetts police officer, police said.

The student received a phone call late Monday night from an unidentified person who claimed to be from the police department. The man accused the student of selling drugs and asked to meet him in the lobby but when the man did not show up, he called the police.

In other police action, a UMass student, 20, was arrested at his home Monday night on a warrant issued in 1983 by UMass police. The warrant was issues in October 1983 after the student failed to show up in court on a charge for breaking and entering with intent to commit a felony. Campus police had been looking for him since the court date, but every time they went to look for him, they were told he was not home.

SGA may face revenue reduction budget committee report says

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

A special report will be presented tonight to the University of Massachusetts undergraduate student senate which will disclose a significant reduction in the funds available to the senate next year, the senate Budgets Committee chairman Joseph Sparks said yesterday.

Details of the amount of the reduction were not available, Sparks said, because the full report would not be available until today. Some details haven't been finished.

The report, on the general status of the Student Activities Trust Fund, will show there will be much less money available for student activities than in past years, Sparks said.

"People will look at this and understand why we were against the concerts," he said.

Sparks had opposed SGA funding of the spring events at last week's senate

Students face PVTA fares, loss of aid in Reagan proposals

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

A reduction in service time and the introduction of a fare for students on the PVTA may be the results if President Ronald Reagan's proposed budget cuts in public transportaion are approved, a UMass spokesman said last night.

The University also stands to lose up to seven million dollars for student financial aid if Reagan's budget cuts are approved, a financial aid spokeswoman said.

Bill Barrett director of parking and transportation at UMass, and Lana West of the UMass financial aid office explained the effects of Reagan's proposed budget cuts on the PVTA and student financial aid to 40 members of Students Advocating Financial Aid (SAFA) at Memorial Hall to help SAFA prepare for lobbying efforts in Washington D.C. next month.

Barrett said, "The impact of a 20 to 30 percent reduction in funding would be devastating. Service time would be cutback, students would have to pay a bus fare reducing ridership by 50 percent, many student jobs would be lost, and others would not be able to get to and from work."

"Presently, the PVTA receives its federal funding through two sections of the Urban Mass Transit Act, sections 9 and 18," Barrett said. Section 9 covers funding for Amherst while section 18 covers funding for Belchertown and Sunderland.

Reagan's present plan would cut section 9 funds by 25 percent while section 18 funds would be cut by 50 percent, Barrett said.

Talking about financial aid, West said, "At the very least 10,220 students will be effected by the cutbacks."

Programs that will be affected are the work-study, direct student loans , Pell Grants, and Supplemental Educational Grants, West said.

The office recently raised $1,000 for scholarships and the office is trying to find ways to distribute the money to more students, West said.

Libby, who was hired six years ago to develop UMass' Center for the Family, a program in family studies, now teaches "Family Violence" and "Alternative Lifestyles." Both courses review such subjects as divorce, marital separation, monogamy, homosexuality, bisexuality and the role of alternative lifestyles in modern society.

Last year, the Home Economics Personnel committee voted unanimously against granting Libby, and another professor who has done extensive research in the area of bisexuality and homosexualtiy, promotion for tenure.

Libby said successive votes backing the initial vote did not conform to University standards for establishing promotion and tenure. He also said that the University ignored recommendations of other faculty members that Libby be considered for promotion.

Libby is a member of the board of consultants of Forum magazine and author of the award winning textbook Sexual Choices, now in its second printing. He alleges his achievements are continually slighted by people anxious to discredit him.

I'm just trying to prove that there has been a whole history of discrimination against me. This has been going on for three years, at least. They tell me my achievements don't merit promotion, but on the other hand, they restrict me in my academic pursuits because they just don't like me. It doesn't make any sense."

Libby also charges that his superiors "ignore" the "positive feedback" and "support" he receives from his students.

"The problem with this is that the conservatism of the department is preventing these very necessary courses from being taught. My students should have a say in my tenure decision–they seek my courses and clearly, that says something."

★ Funding

meeting, but a motion approving the funding passed.

There are several reasons for the reduction in available funds, Sparks said. These include an expected enrollment decline, which will reduce the incoming student fees; cost of living and insurance increases for professional Student Activities staff, and budgeting to pay for full costing.

Full costing is the cost that "the University incurs on the running of trust funds," Sparks said. "They're general administrative type things."

Sparks estimated full costing will cost the SGA $81,000 next year.

Other items on tonight's agenda include a motion to create a fund for next year to pay for the spring events, and a motion to offer $100 reward for "information leading to the arrest of those responsible for the defacement of University buildings."

A note on the blues

The other day I ran out to get my mail. I was wearing jeans, a T-shirt and socks. When I ran back — without mail — I saw that I had locked the door behind me. I stood there, looking through my window, wondering how long it would take to freeze to death.

Occasionally, our efforts are like those of small birds hurling themselves against a clear window; it is not that we are blind or stupid, but often we run into something that no one told us about. So we work. I write a column. You do your thing. All of us try to rise above the greedy commotion of living day to day (also to make a buck); and to become — against the history behind and the world around — something new. Often the odds against us are staggering.

You may wonder: What am I doing here? Why school? Why work? Is it just to make money? Or a way to give your effort meaning, keeping away the hopeless feeling that you might be headed nowhere? What about ideals? What of those goals and standards that lure us toward the clear window? They are ideals we have seen worn by time, passed over by super-organized government, and left powerless from disinterest. So why do anything? Why protest? Why sit in class and listen to that damn professor? The injustice of it!

We may never obtain our ideals; never get that 4.00, never get that job. Yet, with all that weighing so heavily on our minds, we are never more endearing and right than when we try.

I broke the window with a brick, and now keep my key under the door mat.

Understanding how precious life is to her

Watching Surviving, Sunday night's ABC movie about teen suicide, brought back some painful memories for me. For although I've never attempted suicide, I've been in a similar situation where I was forced to look at death straight in the face. Last summer, I was in a near-fatal head-on collision and spent several days in the hospital. I hope the realizations I gained from that experience will make someone thinking about taking his/her own life think again.

When I regained consciousness in the emergency room, my doctor told me that I was lucky to be alive. Dazed as I was, a trembling feeling of relief and joy came over me as I thought of the one thing we all take for granted, "I'm alive." Suddenly, all those "important" anxieties of last month — finals, pressures, and dates — were trivial and meaningless. Hours later, I realized that I wouldn't have missed the great events of my life, but rather the little things which mean so much: playing with my cat, eating peppermint stick ice cream and laughing with friends.

I realized that people loved me just because I was me. I saw it in the pale, shocked face of my older brother. I heard it in the hushed voice of my best friend. No matter how alone and helpless we feel when problems hit us, we are never really alone. People do care. All we have to do is reach out to them.

I was furious at those people who purposely take their lives, and who abuse themselves with drugs and alcohol. Didn't they know how precious life is? But they had never been as close to losing it as I'd been. That's the only unfortunate thing about life I can think of. The only time we realize how beautiful it is, is when we've nearly lost it.

I'm convinced that each and every one of us has a purpose in this world though we may not know what it is. No one's life is hopeless or worthless. Live life, enjoy it and be greatful for it. God didn't want me to die at 18. He has plans for me and for all of us. Think about it. I was one of the lucky ones. I got a second chance at life. Most people don't.

Students are key to Campus Center

There has been some discussion lately about eliminating the Campus Center Board of Governors. The man behind this move is Vice-Chancellor John L. DeNyse. I have one question for Mr. DeNyse. Whose interest are you trying to serve? Let's face facts, there would be no university without students. There would be no Campus Center without students, and particularly, student fees.

As I understand it, the Campus Center was built with student money. Students pay a Campus Center fee each semester.

In fact it seems to me that students should probably be responsible for complete management of the building, and all its activities. That would be fair. Instead we have an administration, embodied by DeNyse, which seems to regard students as a nuisance. I for one think it's about time the University administration and Campus Center management get their thinking straight. They exist to serve us, the students, not vice versa.

Cartoon contributes to negative stereotype

It is with a sense of moral outrage and idignation that I protest the decision of the Collegian to print such an offensive, abusive, and sexually obnoxious cartoon yesterday about fraternities.

The fundamental issue is ethics in journalism. Regardless of one's view of the Greek system, everyone should be concerned about the Collegian's overt disregard for enforcement of credibility, truth and intellectual objectivity in journalism. Although the cartoon was on the opinion page, it was so explicit in its suggestion that fraternity men engage in sexual relations with sheep that all moral boundaries — journalistic and societal — have been shattered.

Over the years, the Collegian has prided itself on its support of open discussion of social issues such as racism, sexism, anti-semitism, and other forms of oppression. Yet it has seriously compromised that quality by a refusal to encourage that same intellectual discussion in regards to stereotypes of the Greek system.

As a mass communications major I am concerned about the Collegian's journalistic ethics, as a member of a fraternity I am appalled by their implications, and as a progressive I am concerned about the Collegian's abuse of perspectives other than their own.

Rather than continue this hostile relationship with the Greek area, the Collegian would benefit from an examination of it's journalistic obligations and moral perceptions regarding the fraternities and sororities of the University of Massachusetts. This could be accomplished by meeting with the Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils, visiting individual chapters, examining the history and traditions of chapters, discovering the numerous charities many chapters sponsor, and in general becoming more activily involved with the Greek community. I believe the Collegian and the University community as a whole would benefit greatly.

We can all work together to erase old and outworn stereotypes that hang over the the heads of minority groups within the University community. Whether they are political, social, economic or cultural in nature — the way to move forward is through open, intellectual discussion and not through the perpetuation of negative stereotypes.

Misconceptions regarding Lincoln and slavery

The Collegian story, "Lincoln's Motives Debated" yesterday which quoted me and Afro-Am Professor Ernest Allen. As it happened, the reporter invited me to comment on only one of Professor Allen's assertions — namely, that Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation more for military than for humanitarian reasons. Applebaum did not inform me of Professor Allen's additional remarks. Because they reflect popular misconceptions about Lincoln, let me respond to those remarks here.

First, Lincoln was not a lifelong supporter of colonization. Before the Civil War, it's true, he thought colonization the ultimate solution to the race problem because he feared that white Americans of his day were too prejudiced to allow blacks to live among them as equals. Yet Lincoln hated slavery as an abomination — "if slavery is not wrong," he said repeatedly, "nothing is wrong." After the Emancipation Proclamation, which he issued for moral as well as for military reasons, Lincoln abandoned colonization. Modern scholarship has demonstrated that he never again mentioned colonization in public, and that there is no reliable evidence that he defended it in private either. With 186,000 black men fighting in his armed forces to save the country, Lincoln had concluded that blacks and whites in this country must somehow learn to live together.

By the War's end, moreover, Lincoln had grown and changed in the matter of black rights: he now supporting political and legal rights for the three and a half million blacks emancipated by his Proclamation. Lincoln's position, incidentally, put him ahead of most other whites in April, 1865.

Not all black academicians subscribe to Professor Allen's view of Lincoln. In fact, two of America's most distinguished historians — Professors John Hope Franklin and Benjamin Quarles, both of whom are black — have written scholarly works which point out that Lincoln had always hated slavery, that his views changed dramatically during the Civil War and that the Emancipation Proclamation was "one of the most far-reaching pronouncements ever issued in the United States." Franklin's "The Emancipation Proclamation" and Quarles's "Lincoln and the Negro" are in the library for students interested in getting the facts.

Bad message for a child

Dan Miller

I was reading the paper with my friend Stan who is known for his poker face. He can get his face to look like that of a fetus in the womb seen in a human development textbook — utterly stiff and blank but alive.

Stan is also called Dead-Pan Stan. But a lot of people, like myself, call him Pan.

"This couple from New York is suing the infirmary for misdiagnosing her pregnancy," I said. "They wanted to have an abortion performed but they couldn't because they first found out that she was pregnant when she had been pregnant for six months."

"Adoption: beautiful alternative," Pan said.

"Not quite," I said. "She lives with her parents. She's four years old. I hope she never hears about the lawsuit; she'll believe they wanted her dead."

"Nonsense," Pan said. "My parents told me that they had wanted to abort me when I was six."

"What did you say?"

"I said, 'well, it's too late now.'"

"Don't pull my leg, Pan," I said. "That's a too sarcastic and bitter response from a child of six years."

Pan looked at me with his sharpest dead-pan face and said, "Not any more it isn't."

"Six years is a little too late for an abortion, though," I said.

"Heck no," Pan said. "I wasn't aborted. I only felt aborted. How could I have been aborted? By that time my eyes and ears were in full bloom, so I was ready to feel anything. But I was a smart little six years old. I was able to empathise, at that age, with my parents when they told me that the only reason they wanted to abort me was that they couldn't afford a baby at that time in their lives."

"Why weren't you aborted?" I wanted to know.

"The doctors didn't know Mom was pregnant until it was too late."

"Don't kid me, Pan," I said.

"Scout's honor," Pan said. "They couldn't afford litigation, otherwise they would have sued."

The Wenners are suing UMass Health Services because Jessica Colonna Wenner's pregnancy was allegedly misdiagnosed by the infirmary past the term of a legal abortion. The Wenners are saying that this constitutes denial of the right to an abortion.

An abortion, however, is still possible. In fact right now the Wenners are aborting themselves from their child. They are publicly cutting the implicit tie between parents and child that obligates parents to show their children that they are loved, wanted and have a legitimate, meaningful existence.

By suing, they are telling their child that she is a result of medical malpractice, and not one of love, and that her life was extenuated for a legal reason.

Women have a right to early, safe abortions — but only the old-fashioned kind. Women — parents — however have no right to taint the process of nurturance; they have no right to injure the emotional development of their children when they can prevent themselves from doing so. Emotional development cannot be put to risk for the sake of a lawsuit, or made a casualty of an irreversible medical error.

"Come on, Pan," I said. "You're pulling my leg."

"Okay, you got me," Pan said. "No one in their right mind would do a thing like that."

Audience reaction something to think about

This is in response to the movie Clockwork Orange shown last Friday sponsored by the Republican Club. I went to see the movie with an open mind knowing that it was extremely violent, yet supposedly carried deep social implications about the violence in our society. Sorry, people, it didn't cut it. Within the first 20 minutes of the film there was a murder of an old man, an attempted gang rape, and an especially tortuous rape of a woman.

The audience laughed and cheered as the woman was being dehumanized with the calculated removal of her clothes. Another burst of laughter came from the audience when the woman's tied up husband was kicked in the stomach to the beat of the music. Even when the assailant prepared himself for the rape the audience laughed.

What the hell is funny about a rape?

If you are a woman you may be able to put yourself in the actress' place and feel the lack of freedom and terror. If you are a man you may be able to empathize with the husband who was powerless to aid the woman he loved. Think about it.

My main question about this film is who got the deep social meaning it supposedly had? Certainly not the people who laughed, cheered and joked through the violence. The movie won "Best Picture of the Year" not for being a comedy, but for making a statement about the violence in our society. If the majority of the audience didn't pick up that statement, then I consider that film just another media depiction of violence, and specifically violence against women. The audience's reaction was more of a statement about society's view on violence than the movie was.

'The only real solution'

In response to the Feb. 7 column, "South Africans Need Our Support," there are several relavant points that I would like to bring up: In 1983, 4 million white voters approved representation of "coloreds" and Indians in Parliament, although this still prevents a black voice from being heard, as they are considered part of neither of these groups. Only the whites can vote, own property, etc. While the educational budget has increased by 123 percent. 60 to 70 percent of that money will be funnelled into white education. Education is still segregated, and the only concessions were brought about by the successful boycotting of schools by black students. They are protesting for more qualified teachers (78 percent of the professors are underqualified,according to former Minister of Black Education Barend duPlessy). They also want a curriculum that isn't dictated by the white government and is more objective (the present curriculum perpetuates the myth of white supremacy). Any public statement advocating divestment is considered high treason, punishable by death or imprisonment, according to Nomazizi Sokudela, secretary of the African National Congress, who spoke recently on campus. She assured the audience that divestment is making a difference by boosting the morale of the blacks and shaking the confidence of the white minority. Keeping these points in mind, I urge readers to continue to view divestment as the only real solution.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Black-Jewish forum to be held

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

A forum discussing Black and Jewish relations will be held tomorrow beginning at noon in room 805-809 of the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts.

Cherie Brown, Director of the National Coalition Building Institute and author of The Art of Coalition Building: A Guide for Community Leaders, will discuss her experience working on campuses across the country leading Black and Jewish discussions.

"Generally, both Jewish and Black students see themselves as minorities on campus. This leads to much greater understanding of each other. At other times, it leads to tension," said Rabbi Saul Parlmutter of Hillel, a Jewish organization at the University.

The relationship between Jews and Blacks are worsened by the national media, he said. "Whenever something negative is done, we hear about it. The media is happy to play up Jews against Blacks. We never hear about the positive," Rabbi Parlmutter said. For example, there was an organization during Jesse Jackson's presidential campaign called "Jews Against Jackson" which was denounced by the Jewish community, not mentioned by the media.

Another positive feat the press neglected to highlight was the fact that not only was there considerable Jewish support for the famine victims, but the Israeli government brought Black Jews from Ethiopia to Israel.

"It's important to mention this because it reminds people that Jews themselves are multi-racial," he said.

Blacks and Jews have many things in common with each other. In the last presidential election, Blacks and Jews voted very similarly for Mondale and both groups support Affirmative Action.

Rabbi Parlmutter believes that both groups have more positive communication now than three or four years ago.

'Movements are not repeated,' says activist

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

Tracing the history of the Civil Rights movement and the Black Power Movement of the 1960s, a Civil Rights activist stressed what today's Blacks should do to maintain their rights, Monday at the University of Massachusetts.

Paul Robeson, Jr., son of the forefather of the Civil Rights Movement spoke on "What ever happened to the Civil Rights Movement."

Robeson began by comparing Black slaves to white indentured servants. "Indentured white servants served their masters for seven years. When they were freed, they got 40 acres of land and a mule. However, when the slaves were freed by the Emancipation Proclamation, they got their freedom plus zero," he said.

Skilled workers who were slaves when freed, "were driven up North and destroyed as a group," Robeson said.

The Emancipation Proclamation issued on September 1862 freed Blacks, but any right to vote that they had was taken away. It was not until 1964 when the Civil Rights Law was passed that Blacks right to vote was fully restored in the South.

Robeson said "if King hadn't succeeded in getting the Civil Rights Law passed, the Black people were ready for a tougher struggle."

After the law had passed, many young Blacks became impatient. They wanted more than the right to vote. Blacks wanted to be completely separated from whites and they wanted power. The black power movement was a radicalization of the Civil Rights Movement with a separist ideal.

While the Civil Rights and black power movement were the main issues of the sixties and early seventies, today's Blacks are concerned about affirmative action. Robeson called affirmative action, "the biggest hoax ever played on the American public. Affirmative Action," he continued, "guarantees to give blacks an equal opportunity to compete, not a job. When someone challenges it, they are against equal opportunity, not a quota system."

He cited Ronald Reagan as "one of the most racist presidents in history." Robeson told a few of the racist remarks that Reagan has made in the past. "He is ignorant but not stupid. The basis of his position is very shrewd. He says that there is no racism against any group of people. Only individuals are targets of racism," Robeson stressed.

The median income for Blacks has decreased from 62 percent to 58 percent while Black unemployment has increased double of white unemployment. If Reagan gets his way, student loans will be cut in half and enrollment will drop 50 percent for Black students by next fall.

"Movements do not repeat themselves. You can learn from the past but you can't go back to it," Robeson ended.

A video presentation of Robeson's lecture will be shown Friday in the Campus Center.

Savage is honored by former pupil

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Augusta Christine Savage, who many have come to know only as a name attached to the gallery in the New Africa House, came to life when her only private pupil gave a personal profile of her at the rededication ceremony of the gallery on Sunday.

The ceremony started with a blessing by UMass's Afro-American studies professor Dovi Afesi and a dance performance by Patti O'Neal. Ironically, while Afesi spoke of the African belief of the bondage "between the dead, the living and the unborn," Maurice Poplar Lavender, who lived with Savage for 12 years, spoke of experiencing a "high plane level of consciousness" in art between herself and the renowned sculptress.

Lavender is a sculptress, painter, author, illustrator and an art teacher in the Gary, Indiana public school system.

She met Savage at seven years old when her art teacher invited her to hear Savage speak at Roosevelt High School in Gary.

"She was my childhood and adult idol," Lavender said. She added if Savage had not taken it upon herself to beat the odds set against her becoming a sculptress, "I would not be here today...she had the ability to attract the gifted."

A high achiever, Savage successed in a climate that tried to discourage her from becoming a sculptress. She had a strong father figure, poverty and racial prejudice going against her, but "she grew up on the faith," Lavender said.

It was not until twelve years later when they met again. Lavender lost Savage's address and coincidentally found her through a priest whom she met in New York.

During this time laspe, Savage had been very ill and was once pronounced dead. Meanwhile, Lavender said she had held on to Savage mentally in hope of finding her. "My talent was transferred on to you. I could not sculpt if I wanted to," Savage told Lavender.

Savage believed Lavender was the other part of her. Lavender said she was never frightened by Savage's intuitions because some incidents led her to believe the same.

For example, Savage told Lavender that she would establish an art institute. Lavender founded the Gary Art Institute and Children's Art Institute. Savage also predicted that Lavender's work would become religious. It did.

Lavender and Savage's relationship was very intimate and fully respected by Savage's daughter, Irene. "There was always a lesson to learn from Savage," she said.

She said Savage had a good sense of humor. "She once said I was her real daughter." They also shared secrets, like Savage's falling in love with James Walden Johnson.

Before Savage died in 1962, she commanded Lavender "to take over," in encouraging others to pursue their artistic talent. Lavender said sh was honored to attend the rededication ceremony because "she is fulfilling that commitment."

She hopes the rededication "brings about a new beginning, a new awakening of binding together of arts "and the many struggles Augusta Savage had to go through."

Student complains against professor

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts graduate student has written a complaint against a Spanish professor claiming the professor made a derogatory remark against Puerto Rican people in his class.

According to a letter dated Nov. 24 that Brent Greiner sent to Professor Harlam Sturm, chairman of the Spanish and Portuguese department, professor Fernando Fernandez-Turienzo said, "Puerto Rico has no language. The Spaniards came in in the 16-15-1400's and that was it. Anybody who thinks differently does not belong in this class."

The alleged incident occurred when Fernandez-Turienzo asked the Conversational Spanish class, Spanish 303, for suggestions on topics to discuss. Greiner, an English as a Second Language student, came up with the topic of Puerto Rico, the letter said.

"When no one else in the class suggested another topic, he (professor Fernandez-Turienzo) mumbled a few words about why it would not be so feasable to use my topic," the letter said.

Fernandez-Turienzo refused to make any comments.

Greiner, a Chicago native, said he felt personally offended by the remark because his wife and children are of Puerto Rican descent. He has also been a community organizer and has worked with various ethnic groups. In addition, he has taught at an all-Black school and has been a bilingual teacher and an ESL teacher.

In an interview, Greiner said he interpreted Fernandez-Turienzo's remarks as saying, "history stops here (with the coming of the Spaniards), as if culture has nothing to do with the people's history.

"If you learn two languages, you acquire two cultures and identities," he said adding Fernandez-Turienzo had a "dim view of Puerto Rico."

Responding to Greiner's complaint, Sturm said in a letter dated Nov. 30, that "it would seem that my duty (sic) as chairman of the department in this case is to duly note your concerns and see if your perceptions are shared by others as expressed in our only official student evaluation on department forms."

The department's teacher's evaluations for the class, released to the Collegian by Sturm gave high praise to Fernendez-Turienzo, with no mention whatsoever of Greiner's incident. "I would definitely recommend him to anyone because I think he is what made the class," one respondent wrote.

A student in Fernandez-Turienzo's conversational Spanish class who requested anonimity said Fernandez-Turienzo "cares about students," but is "aristocratic" and inconsistent when talking about Puerto Rico.

"I like him...but I feel he has a prejudice toward Latin America and Puerto Rico," the student said.

"It's an unfortunate misunderstanding. I will not shove it under the carpet," Sturm said in an interview.

Sturm said he waited "to find out what had happened, then deal with the perception." He hoped "there was at worst a statement, at best a misunderstanding. He added that Fernandez-Turienzo "is one of our best teachers."

Greiner's complaint about Fernandez-Turienzo is the first the department has received in the professor's sixteen years at the Universtiy. Fernendez-Turienzo won the Distinguished Teacher's Award in 1979.

A student's evaluation in the 1982 issue of On the Other Hand, an evaluation guide for UMass courses and professors, said Fernandez-Turienzo "didn't allow students to speak enough (and was) not sensitive to students."

Two of the three respondents of the Spanish conversation course said he was "helpful in all areas."

A Black doctor and scientist made one of the most important single contributions to the Allied victory in World War II, when he developed a process of changing blood into plasma.

Dr. Charles Drew, a native of Washington D.C. saved the lives of thousands since 1940, with his process.

Self-discipline, work and intelligence earned him honor in everything he did, including sports. As a student at Amherst College, he earned national recognition as a halfback. He graduated as the student who had brought the greatest honor to the college.

Drew died from a loss of blood, after an automobile accident in 1950.

Simon's play evoked nostalgia

By COUNT RAMIN ZAHED
Collegian Staff

There are times when a production can capture the intensity of emotions felt by a playwright when he chooses to write about his own family and sexual awakening. It is impossible to watch such a show and resist its honesty. Add to all this Neil Simon's rich sense of middle-class humor and you have the success of Brighton Beach Memoirs at the Fine Arts Center last Sunday.

The play is set in Brooklyn, New York at the eve of the Second World War, and deals with a week in the life of a hard-working family seen through the dreamy eyes of the youngest son, Eugene.

Played with unusual energy and wide-eyed innocence by Patrick Dempsey (the role Matthew Broderick played in the original Broadway production), Eugene often steals the show with his commentaries on what it is really like to be the youngest in a family. He jumps across the stage; is ecstatic about the blooming body of his cousin Nora (Lisa Waltz) which he aptly calls "the golden palace of the Himalayas"; and is horrified when his brother (Brian Drillinger) reveals to him that girls do "it" to themselves five times more than boys.

In the role of Eugene's mother, Lynn Milgrim delivers her lines so perfectly that one cannot help but love her as one's own mother. Like all real mothers, she is strict, stubborn, makes her son feel all the guilt in the world, always catches him red-handed, and loves her family to death. She even makes spaghetti with ketchup. (Neil Simon isn't Italian!)

Then, there is the story of Eugene's cousins, one struck with "flutters" in her heart and the other dreaming of becoming an actress, and the story of their mother who is striving for her independence after her husband's death. All of this is interwoven perfectly with the plot and moves with the smoothness of a baseball Eugene would dream of throwing.

Gene Saks (who won the Tony Award for his direction) manages to evoke nostalgia without the schmaltz; some sort of a pastiche uniting Thornton Wilder with the Waltons. His timing is superb, and he makes every little joke get its due laugh and each little nuance bloom into an honest emotion.

Beach Memoirs basically works because it touches certain chords in all of us. It might be 1985, almost six decades later, but we all have memories of being like Eugene, of being horrified by the pangs of puberty, of stealing oatmeal cookies, abusing ourselves, and hating and loving our families at the same time.

Patrick Dempsey starred as Eugene in Neil Simon's Brighton Beach Memoirs last Sunday at the Fine Arts Center

History re-examined

By LAURA BLANCHARD
Collegian Correspondent

Heritage is a fine example of what is commonly referred to as as a coffee table book. It is a companion volume to the PBS series of the same name. The book is filled with beautiful illustrations, photographs and maps. It does an amazing job of covering the history of civilized people's with a special emphasis and examination of Jewish history. It does a wonderful job of filling the void in historical books which examine events with a generally Christian outlook. As the author points out "...There is virtually no civilization that does not have a Jewish component, just as there is no Jewish civilization that does not bear the mark of another culture."

Heritage looks at the impact that the Jews have had through the centuries in such diverse areas as religion, philosophy, drama, science, art, politics and ethics. It has the expected references to Masada and the Holocaust. However, it also covers less well-known facts. There is a possibility that Christopher Columbus was a "Marranos" (Spanish for swine), a term used for those Jews who converted to Christianity to avoid the repressive codes that bound Spain's professing Jews in the 17th-century. I also found it a pleasant surprise that the contributions of Jewish women were not overlooked. For example, Rosa Luxemburg, who was a founder of the Spartacists--the forerunners of the German Communist party in the 18th-century is mentioned.

The main thrust of the book is the irrepressible spirit of the Jews in the face of centuries of oppression and discrimination.

The author, Abba Eban, is presently a member of the Knesset (the Israeli Parliament). He is a statesman, diplomat, scholar, and writer. He has been Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Ambassador of the United Nations and the United States. He has lived a life of awesome achievement, making him uniquely qualified to write this book.

This reader found the book to be good for casual perusal, as a reference volume and as fascinating reading for anyone who wants an added dimension to their general knowledge of history. I recommend it highly.

Return of the Master Mime

Marcel Marceau
at the Fine Arts Center
Saturday, Feb. 9

By MICHAEL PHILLIPS
Collegian Correspondent

Once again Marcel returned to UMass. The world-wide mime hero makes this annual pilgrimage apparently just so he can stay at the Lord Jeffry Inn, or so the rumour has it. For whatever reason he chooses to come here, he certainly is appreciated. The majority of the FAC audience loved him, giving him two standing ovations. One was spontaneous, after the incredible rendition of the David and Goliath tale. The other was born of respect for the old master, the "king" of mime.

How can anyone add to or subtract from the mind-boggling legend Marceau has built up over the years? Such comments come to mind as "too perfect for words," "close to perfection" and "the greatest mime in the world." Maybe the praise printed on the pamphlet, "surpasses one's greatest expectations," raised expections and hopes a little too high, for the audience response was not totally unanimous. It would be too easy to call those who fell asleep and those who found it boring uncultured philistines (though I know that at least one of them is). Marcel is a classic, a traditionalist, more than that, he is a tradition. I defy any one else to stand up on a stage in a white leotard and hold an audience for as long as he did. But all the classics fade a little and are unfairly cast in shadow by the over bright illumination of contemporary wham bam instant just add water unsophisticated lipsmaking, etc. entertainment, that appeals to the lowest common denominator.

It is quite a surprise, when watching his lithe body, that Marcel is in his sixties. In fact it's quite a shock to think that this subtle form that dominated and controls the stage is an old man. The fluidity of his movement, his liquid hands, the versitility of his facial expression, show life and death, ecstacy and tragedy, captured and reflected in his white mask. His presence on stage was gigantic; those in the front row looked like midgets from my perspective. The stage was Marceau's space. Each office block, house or cafe was delicately mapped out in the air and projected into the viewer's mind.

The format of the show was exquisitely simple. Each mime was preceeded by the presentation of a flag boldly labeled with the title. From the mundane office life portrayed in "The Bureaucrats," to the ambitious and abstract "Creation of the World," everything was as clear as silence itself. The plots often left a little to be desired, but knowing the end of the story almost before it began left you free to meditate the stylized rendition.

There was the odd moment when the pain in my derrier became a little noticable, and the whole event was slightly marred by a running commentary from the row behind. But the memories of that pathetic face, the glowing figure fading into the darkness, still haunts me. Would I have missed the event? Well I would have to second Marceau's famous one-liner from Mell Brooks' Silent Movie.....

Gymnasts stop Cortland, face MIT Saturday

By KATHLEEN HANNAN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team travels to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology on Saturday. The men are optimistic concerning the results, along with coach Roy Johnson who will take the opportunity to try different performers in the line-up.

The Minutemen, now 5-3, triumphed over SUNY-Cortland last Saturday by the score of 262.95-258.8. This is a record breaking score for away meets for UMass, almost touching the overall high of 263.5.

Freshman Roberto Weil took first on the still rings with a dynamic 9.25, his season's high score in the event. Weil also took first on the parallel bars with an 8.95. Senior co-captain Tony Sbarra captured first on the high bar with an impressive 9.45, his high score for the season as well, with a back sommersault with ½ twist over the bar, then regrasping the bar again.

Phil Gorgone stole first on vaulting (executing a front handspring double sommersault in a pike position) earning a well deserved 9.5--UMass' high score for the meet.

For UMass, Gorgone again executed a solid routine on floor to take first and a 9.25. Steve Baia jumped into the line-up to take first on the pommel horse with a 9.35. "I would've loved to see a 9.0; I had no idea I'd done better," says Baia.

In the all-around were Weil, taking second with a 53.35, his high score for the season, and junior Joe DeMarco taking third with a 51.05.

"As coaches we're really scrambling to put together a line-up, due to sudden sickness and injury. I'm really thankful to have an assistant coach like John McCurdy to approach all our alternatives to distribute substitutes. If it weren't for McCurdy, and the team's overall ability to persevere under sudden pressure, we may have lost the meet," says Johnson.

UMass diver Jean Cowen is caught moments before hitting the water in competition last night with Mount Holyoke. The Minutemen finished the dual meet season at 3-9 with an 88-52 victory. Liz Feinberg set a school record in the 200 IM with a 2:17.69. Carolyn Collins, Liz Barrett and Margaret Cameron and all qualified for the New England championships.

Football recruits sign today

University of Massachusetts football coach Bob Stull will announce his first recruiting class today, national letter-of-intent signing day.

Stull has already enrolled three junior-college transfers in UMass, a fullback, linebacker and wide receiver. The 20-25 member freshman class "has potential to step in and make a difference with the team," according to the coach.

Assistant coach Steve Telander said that UMass went to other states for players due to the University's poor in-state football reputation.

"A lot of people will be surprised at who we signed," Telander said. "This is a great class."

Both Stull and Telander said that the Minutemen were strong on the lines and recruited mainly skill position players. The returning players have been working out using the University of Washington's conditioning program. Stull was a Husky assistant before coming to UMass.

and Russell (71 percent) are the team leaders. Braun, with 79-of-149 shooting, leads the squad from the field. Rebounding leader Neysmith is second in the league to George Washington's Mike Brown, according to league statistics. Braun is averaging 9.3 in the conference and should be second, Neysmith, with 8.9, should be third. Smith, with 6-of-13 shooting, is the team's leader from three-point land. Russell is 14-of-34. Russell also leads the team with 35 steals.

CREATIVE PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT: The George Washington statisticians keep track of Brown's dunks-per-game and the Colonial's sports information department has dubbed the 6-10 center "the New Washington Monument" and has a picture of Brown on the cover of the media guide leaning on the monument. Seems like there's this center at another Washington school...a kid named Ewing at Georgetown.

Donald Russell was named co-player-of-the-week in the A-10 for his 43 points against St. Bonnie and Penn State. He shared the award with St. Joseph's Bob Lojewski.

St. Joe's is actually 8-4 in the league, not 6-6 as reported earlier. That puts UMass, 7-5, in a tie for fourth, not third. Temple, at 11-1, is first. West Virginia (10-2) is second. St. Joe's is third, UM and GW reside in fourth. UMass could go into third with a victory at St. Joe's on Thursday. They already own a 89-80 victory at Springfield.

The UMass games can be heard on the radio on WMUA-FM (91.1) and WHMP-AM (1400).

The Minutemen are ranked sixth in New England. Teams UMass have beaten (including sweeps of the Bonnies and URI) are a combined 67-113. Teams that have beaten UMass are a combined 100-102. Only seven of the 17 teams UM has played have winning records at the moment.

The Minutemen were termed "suprising" by the Atlantic 10 hotline, a 24-hour a day number that spits out conference information (800-524-0546). St. Joe's coach Jim Boyle talked at length yesterday about how tough UMass was going to be. Good try at buttering them up coach, but it won't help.

Minutewomen dump Northeastern, 55-53

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

BOSTON--The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team had four players in double figures to upset Northeastern 55-53 last night.

Junior guard Barbara Hebel had 14 points for UMass, 10-12. Susan Burtoft, Jerrie Bernier and Taara Lewis each had ten. Lewis also had 12 rebounds with Burtoft getting seven.

The Minutewomen fell behind 23-22 at halftime but took the lead for good with ten minutes to go and went up by as much as six before the Huskies, 16-7, managed to crawl to within two.

Bernier connected on a jump shot to make it 53-49 before NU scored. Hebel was then fouled with 22 seconds to go. She made both ends of the one-and-one to seal the game for UMass.

Northeastern scored at the buzzer to make it a two-point game. The Huskies were led by Pam Green with 21 points.

The Minutewomen went to the boards well against nu, the top-rated defensive team in the nation, holding a 36-35 rebounding edge.

UMass shot 23-of-48 from the floor (48 percent) and 9-of-14 from the line for 60 percent. The Huskies were 37 percent from the floor (21-of-37) and 11-of-20 from the line.

"This was a major win for us," UMass assistant coach Dawn Handerson said after the game. "Sue (Burtoft) played very well defensively and off the boards. We had balanced scoring and were patient on offense."

Burtoft shut down Northeastern center Carla Singleton in the second half, allowing her just six of her game-high 17 rebounds. She also held her to nine points.

"We had to control the boards to stop their fast break," Henderson said. "We did that in the second half and were able to control the tempo because of it. We did a lot of things well out there."

Russell and Neysmith near UMass all-time records

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts men's basketball captains Donald Russell and Horace Neysmith are closing in on several Minutemen records.

Russell, with 1,470 career points, needs only 33 to pass Mike Pyatt on the all-time scoring list. If his 16.2 average holds up he will break the record against George Washington on Saturday at the Springfield Civic Center.

Neysmith, with 1, 3-8 points, needs 85 points to pass Edwin Green and move into third place. He is 61 points behind Clarence Hill and 62 points behind Julius Erving.

The Doctor spent two seasons with UMass before signing with the ABA. He will have his number (32) retired, if plans can be made, when the Curry Hicks cage (under renovation) opens for the first game next season.

Russell is currently third in career field goals, 63 behind Green and seemingly stuck there, he would need nine a game over UM's remaining seven games (unless they advance in the league tournament) to catch up.

Neysmith needs but 44 rebounds to take over second place for the career rebounds record, held by the Doc with 1,049. Neysmith has 859 and trails Tim Edwards and Jim Town.

If both play in all seven-plus remaining games they will overtake Green in games played for UMass. Horace currently has 107 and Russell 103, Green has 111.

Neysmith also needs only 174 minutes to play the most in Minutemen history, a honor held by Green with 3,627.

Russell already holds the career foul shots record with 422, Neysmith has the foul shots attempt mark with 603.

Sophomore point guard Carl Smith, in just one and a half seasons, is fourth on the all-time assists list with 306, just 14 behind Al Skinner in third. Alex Eldridge's record of 518 should fall easily to the 5-10 lead guard.

Seniors Bobby Braun, Ron Young, George Ramming, Russell and Neysmith will join a select list of nine players that lettered four seasons at UMass.

Fitzgerald makes change from small to big time

By STUART GOTTLIEB
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team is in the midst of a mediocre season, but the 9-14 Minutewomen feel that respectability is right around the corner. One of the keys to this goal is the coming of age of sophomore center Karen Fitzgerald.

Fitzgerald's making it in division I competition is a Cinderella story of sorts. Even though she led Chelsea High (Chelsea Vt.), to four straight championships, it was in high school division 4 competition. As UMass coach Barbara Stevens put it, the transition is no easy task.

"It was certainly an adjustment," Stevens said "Coming from a small division 4 high school to the highest level of collegiate competition where she faces the best women in the country takes a lot of hard work and dedication."

If there is anyone who gives a lot of hard work and dedication it's Fitzgerald. At 6-2 Karen, a HRTA major, is the tallest player on the team. She has started 18-of-20 games, and is currently second on the team in scoring (9.6 points per game), and rebounding (4.3 a game). These stats coming from a division 4 high school show the type of competitor Karen is. Although she's having a good season, she feels a little disheartened at the teams' poor intereonference play.

"We haven't fared too well against Atlantic 10 competition," Karen said "but hopefully we'll win our last three conference games and seed higher in the tournament."

The team, 10-12, defeated Northeastern last night, 55-53, to snap a two game losing streak. The Minutewomen finish off the season with Atlantic 10 opponents West Virginia, Rhode Island and Duqueesne. They own wins over New England rivals Harvard, New Hampshire and Boston University, twice.

So, through this season of ups and downs, what keeps the team spirit and aspirations high? It's due to the fact that all indications point to a better season next year. No players graduate and the players feel more comfortable playing together every game. Also, the fact that players like Fitzgerald become more mature and learn what coach Stevens calls "The non-skill aspects of the game."

"The biggest lesson Karen has to learn," Stevens went on to say "is the intensity level and aggressiveness of division 1 play. Karen is a very good natured person and stometimes she takes that attitude on the court. Once she gets more aggressive she will be a complete player and there will be no telling how far she'll go."

Hopefully she'll take the rest of the Minutewomen with her.

Report says student's rights violated

Committee finds officials at fault in Crampton Fire investigation

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts violated the civil rights of a resident assistant charged with one of the fires that plagued Crampton dormitory in the fall of 1983, according to a report by a faculty senate committee, obtained by the Collegian

The Committee on the Status of Minorities, consisting of 12 faculty senators, was commissioned by the Rules Committee in February 1984 to examine the events surrounding Yvette I. Henry's arrest on Dec. 2, 1983. Six individuals who were "present and involved" on the night of Henry's arrest were interviewed in an attempt to explain the "apparent breakdown of the normal process of running the University," the report says.

Henry has two $6.5 million lawsuits pending against UMass and law enforcement officials for the alleged violations of her civil rights during and after her arrest.

Following her arrest, Henry was suspended from the University, prohibited from taking classes, barred from the residence halls, fired from her job as an RA, and as a result, was unable to graduate as expected the following spring.

The six people who appeared before the committee included: Gerald T. O'Neil, director of Public Safety, Paul Barrows, director of the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black and Minority Students, John Lopes, a staff member of CCEBMS, Thelma Griffith-Johnson, the Affirmative Action officer, Dean of Students, William Field and Charles DiMare, director of Legal Services Office. Several others involved in the case declined to be questioned.

The report, completed in May 1984, has not yet been publicly released, although Castellano Turner, chairman of the Committee on the Status of Minorities, said the public release of the report would make the committee's job "complete."

"The committee was disappointed that the report was not made public," Turner said, "It was created to prevent such an incident from happening again."

The report states that Henry was "subjected to grueling interrogation for several hours after her arrest, without the benefit of legal advice." An attorney was not contacted until the director of the Affirmative Action Office arrived at the police station, several hours after Henry had been taken into custody. There is no indication in the report whether Henry was ever read her Miranda rights.

In addition to concluding that Henry's civil rights had been violated, the committee also found Henry's "minority status may have played a part in the conduct of the investigation and in the arrest," that the Dean of Students Office "did not act properly with respect to Henry," and that "Henry's minority status may have played a part in the way the Dean of Students Office behaved" in the case.

"The ruse used by police to get her down to the police station could be construed as attempted entrapment," the report said.

Henry's room was searched the afternoon of her arrest, without a search warrant or her knowledge. Several hours after the arrest, Henry consented to a search of her room.

The report also focuses on Henry's treatment as a minority student. The basis of the arrest was a computer-generated "psychological profile" compiled by the FBI, which, among other things, warned that the person responsible for the fires could be "suicidal or that he/she would try to do something very spectacular as a final

UMass prof sues school over tenure

Most of the University administrators or faculty members involved with or cited in home economics sexology professor Roger W. Libby's lawsuit declined comment yesterday.

President David C. Knapp, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, Assistant to the Chancellor James Leheny and members of the Home Economics department were unavailable for comment, or, when reached, offered nothing but a quick "no comment" when asked their responses to Libby's allegations that he is being denied tenure because of his controversial views on sex.

The sole response came from Vice Chancellor for Research Samuel F. Conti, who initially said he knew little about the case but after informed he was a defendant said, "I can't say much else than 'no comment' because I don't in any way want to prejudge anything that might happen in the case."

Conti served as Acting Vice Chancellor during the period in which Libby's tenure case came up for review.

"I'm delighted," Conti said, "to hear that he is exercising his rights as a citizen. He should. But my actions as vice chancellor during that time should speak for me. Roger Libby brought the case—he should get all the press."

Roger Libby has other opinions: "They're not speaking, naturally, and they won't ever speak, because they know my case won't come up for a while and they want the whole thing to blow over, because my tenure denial shows there are serious defects in the setup of the administration of this university. No one communicates with each other anyway, why should they talk to reporters?"

SGA budget decreased 25%

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate will have about 25 percent less for an available budget next year, according to the Budgets Committee report delivered to the senate last night.

The senate will have about $519,788.30 in allocated funds for Fiscal Year 1986 (July 1, 1986 - June 30, 1986) compared to $695,147.50 in Fiscal Year 1985, Joe Sparks, chairman of the Budgets Committee, said.

Sparks attributed the decrease in funds to many sources, including lower enrollment, budgeting for full costing and deficit liquidation, increased benefits and mandatory pay increases for professional staff in the Student Activities Office.

"When you get hit by five or six things, it's a big setback," Sparks said.

Student input to continue in CC operation

BY VICKI A. SPAGNOLI
Collegian Staff

Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse presented a memorandum yesterday to the Campus Center Board of Governors reaffirming his earlier committment to replace the BOG with an advisory council as part of his trust funds consolidation plan.

But after reviewing a counter-proposal submitted by the BOG, DeNyse confirmed that student input could continue, following some redrafting of the BOG proposal.

DeNyse said the Division of Administration and Finance would consider the BOG proposal "with some reservations,...There is a lot there that we should sit down and make negotiations with," DeNyse said.

The proposed Auxiliary Enterprises Trust Fund is a combination of the trust funds of the Campus Center, Conference Services, and the dining commons. The consolidation was proposed by DeNyse Dec.26.

The BOG proposed that the administration permit the continuance of the BOG in addition to the proposed advisory council. The board would exist "to maintain the rights of the students in the Campus Center," BOG chairwoman Jane Donohue said.

The board also proposed alternative funding for their $145,000 budget. The BOG budget is now financed through the $84 Campus Center fee, which will be eluminated under the proposed Auxiliary Enterprises Trust fund. The BOG proposes funding through an increase in graduate and undergraduate student fees. The increase would be about $6 per student.

DeNyse disagreed with some of the wording in the BOG proposal. He called for a sub-group to redraft the proposal before he would accept it. "I certainly can't agree with the entire proposal at this time...I think there are some things here that are subject to negotiation," DeNyse said.

"I was definitely disappointed that nothing concrete came out of this meeting," Donahue said.

"The tone of today's meeting was more positive than the last few times I met with Mr. DeNyse," Donohue said. "I have not yet received any concrete committment from him that the BOG will exist next year and that the division of Administration and Finance will be responsive to the voice of the BOG."

U.S. and Soviets to view Mid-East

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States and Soviet Union will sit down to discuss the Middle East next week, but U.S. officials tried yesterday to dampen expectations in advance by insisting they expect no change in Soviet policies.

Nevertheless, the two-day session in Vienna beginning Tuesday represents an increase in the dialogue on such troubiespots as Afghanistan, southern Lebanon, the Iran-Iraq war and the Arab-Israeli conflict.

"These talks should not be seen as negotiations," State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb cautioned after announcing the discussions.

"They are merely an exchange of views," he said. "They do not represent any change in the U.S. position regarding issues affecting the region, nor do we expect them to result in changes in Soviet positions."

The U.S. delegation will be led by Richard W. Murphy, assistant secretary of state for the Near East. The Soviet team will be led by Vladimir P. Polyakov, who is Murphy's counterpart in the Soviet foreign ministry.

The USSR spokesman confirmed that Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin met for an hour with Secretary of State George P. Shultz at the State Department, but he would not say what the officials discussed.

Bank of Boston refuses comment

BOSTON (AP) - The embattled First National Bank of Boston refused to comment yesterday on reports that it handled thousands of dollars in cash for a reputed New England Mafia chief and had the transactions listed as exempt from federal reporting requirements.

"The bank does not comment on past, present or future customer relationships," said spokesman Barry Allen. "I can't tell you about anybody's business. If I had an account at the Bank of Boston, I couldn't tell you."

The Boston Globe reported yesterday that two companies owned by alleged mob boss Gennaro Angiulo were placed on a special list at the bank exempting their cash transactions if more than $10,000 from federal scrutiny.

All banks must report cash transactions of more than $10,000 to the government as part of an ongoing federal program to crack down on money laundering by organized crime.

The Globe said the retired head teller at the bank's North End branch, Howard K. Matheson, said Angiulo and his four brothers regularly bought checks of more than $10,000 at the bank but were not reported to the federal government. The newspaper said Matheson's story was confirmed by a second, unidentified bank employee.

The five Angiulo brothers are scheduled to be tried in U.S. District Court in Boston next month on charges of loansharking, racketeering and conspiracy to obstruct justice.

Utah Senator Garn joins Doonesbury

Lawmaker not hurt by cartoon

WASHINGTON (AP) - Cartoonist Garry Trudeau calls it "the most extraordinary junket in the history of Congress, but Sen. Jake Garn isn't offended by the down-to-earth humor about his impending space shuttle trip.

"That criticism was raised almost from the moment he was asked to entertain the possibility of a flight," said Bill Hendrix, Garn's press secretary. "He takes his mission much to seriously to be bothered by that."

The Republican lawmaker from Utah, readying for a four-day mission scheduled for blastoff March 3, was in training in Houston and unavailable to reporters who tried to reach him Tuesday and yesterday.

But Garn has seen the comics.

"We showed him the strip and he thought it was pretty funny," Hendrix said, referring to Monday's installment, which noted that one of Garn's main jobs will be to conduct experiments in motion sickness.

In the strip, Garn is interviewed by Doonesbury television correspondent Roland Hedley aboard a KC-135 military aircraft being flown to simulate weightlessness.

Hedley is investigating whether Garn, "no stranger to weightlessness," is qualified for his mission - "to throw up on request."

As a floating Hedley poses that question, an off-frame voice warns, "Heads up!"

Garn has called himself a "medical guinea pig" for the space agency, and Hendrix says, "He's amused by it just like everybody else."

Garn did notice, however, that Trudeau and his wife, "Today" show anchorwoman Jane Pauley who interviewed Garn last week, both called the senator a "space sickness specialist."

"The senator said maybe they're ganging up on him," Hendrix said.

Polish authorities hold Solidarity heads in raid

WARSAW, Poland (AP) - Polish security police detained seven prominent Solidarity activists today after raiding a meeting in a Gdansk apartment that was attended by Lech Walesa, an aide to the Solidarity leader said.

Walesa was released immediately after about 20 plainclothes and uniformed policemen forced their way into an apartment in the Baltic port city to break up the meeting of Solidarity leaders, said Grzegorz Grzelak, a Walesa aide.

Alcohol policy open to public for review and suggestions

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

A preliminary draft of the University alcoholic beverage policy is available for public review and input before being submitted to the Board of Trustees for approval, Student Government Association co-President Rick Patrick said yesterday.

The policy has been under review since December by the Alcohol Policy Subcommittee of the Chancellor's Committee on Alcohol Use. The committee left some points of the policy undefined to gain public input before reaching a final decision, he said.

One point still undecided is whether to allow open alcoholic beverage containers on campus.

"The state leaves drinking in public up to the communities," he said. "If people feel there should be a prohibition on open containers, we should get feedback."

The new policy will attempt to stress alcohol education and responsibility as well as regulation, Charmaine Wijeyesinghe, judicial liason for the dean of students, said.

"The entire community can benefit from this policy," she said. "We want to educate the community not only about the rules, but of the consequences (of breaking the rules)."

Wijeyesinghe said the proposal is being revised mainly because of the raising of the state drining age to 21, which takes effect June 1.

"The vast majority of on and even off-campus students are under the drinking age," she said.

The new policy will apply not only to students, as the last one did, but to staff, faculty and alumni as well, Wijeyesinghe said.

The new policy follows quite close to state laws regarding alcohol, she said, and will include regulations concerning the advertising and promotion of alcohol on campus.

Copies of the policy are available at the SGA presidents' office in the Student Union, Patrick said.

Alcohol education receives association Award of Merit

By JODI McNAMARA
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts received an award last month for activities held during National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness week.

The National Association of Student Personnel Administrators selected UMass as the recipient of the Award of Merit for Outstanding Programming during Alcohol Awareness week, Oct. 7-13, 1984.

Carlene Riccelli, coordinator of the alcohol education program at the University, organized and participated in the work and activities that went on throughout the campus during that week.

The activities were designed to promote the responsible use of alcohol on the UMass campus, Riccelli said. Inuded were workshops, information tables in the Campus Center, mini-grant programs, bartender training sessions and breathalyzer demonstrations.

"I think it's exciting to get national recognition for the educational efforts the students and staff are making to promote the responsible use of alcohol," Riccelli said.

"Because of the size of the University and the rapid turnover of the students, it's difficult for them to become aware of the quality of the services available to them in terms of the alcohol education program, Mental Health and the Dept. of Public Safety. Receiving an award like this provides an opportunity for getting the word out on campus," she said.

The program has been at the University since the late 60's. In 1975, the University received a grant from the National Institute of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism to develop a model program for college alcohol education efforts, Riccelli said.

When federal funding ended in 1980, the program continued and was funded by the University Health Services.

The program involves 22 UMass students who learn about the responsible use of alcohol and convey the information to other students in the form of structured workshops given in the dormitories, fraternities and sororities.

Grad student receives burns

A chemical explosion in a Lederle Graduate Research Center laboratory caused minor burns to a female student Tuesday afternoon, University of Massachusetts police said.

The explosion ignited a small fire when the student poured a mixture of chemicals into a laboratory sink, according to an Environmental Health and Safety official. He said some of the chemicals splashed on her body and burned her. She was treated at Health Services for minor skin burns. The fire was put out by laboratory technicians with a fire extinguisher. There was no property damage at the laboratory.

In other police action:

- An Amherst man was arrested Tuesday night for driving while intoxicated on South Pleasant Street. He was stopped after he was observed driving on the wrong side of the road by campus police. The driver was also charged with failing to stop at a stop sign and operating a vehicle without a license or registration. The passenger in the car was placed in protective custody.
- Amherst police arrested a passenger in a car which was stopped for a motor vehicle violation Tuesday night. The passenger was arrested on an outstanding trafffic warrant issued by Hampshire District Court.

UM honor society chapter celebrates 25th anniversary

By BRION McALARNEY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts chapter of Alpha Lamda Delta, the honor society for first-year students, will celebrate its 25th anniversary next month.

Alpha Lambda Delta was founded at the University of Illinois in 1924 as an honor society for women. Men were first admitted in 1975.

"It encourages freshman students to maintain academic excellence," said Amy deRoade, president of the University of Massachusetts chapter.

The society gives first-year students the feeling they are being recognized, she added.

Students must have a grade-point average of 3.7 or higher to be admitted, said Gladys Rodriguez, assistant dean of students at UMass and campus advisor for the local chapter.

Students also pay a $15 fee, added Rodriguez.

Students are formally admitted at annual initiation ceremonies. Last year, a record 106 students were admitted.

Alpha Lambda Delta also admits members of the faculty and the administration as honorary members. Past honorary members include former Chancellor Henry Koffler and Dean of Students William Field, Rodriguez said.

There are 201 chapters of Alpha Delta Lambda nationwide, and 300,000 members, Rodriguez said.

"Fourteen graduate scholarships of $3,000 are offered nationwide," Rodriguez said. One-hundred dollar cash awards are also awarded at the University chapter for the graduating member with the highest grade-point average, Rodriguez said.

The University of Massachusetts is one of the few institutions in this country that offers courses in Slovak, the language spoken in the eastern part of Czechoslovakia, according to UMass Slavic Professor Robert Rothstein.

The Slavic department at the University, through its faculty and the Fulbright exchange program, offers students and community residents an educational opportunity that few institutions in the country provide.

History of valentines

By JEANNETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

February 14 is traditionally set aside for the thoughts of love and the sending of gifts of candy, cards, and flowers to lovers. But this was not always so.

The first Valentine was not written for romantic reasons. St. Valentine, a young Roman, was martyred for refusing to give up his Christianity. He died in 270 A.D. on Feb. 14. On the day he died, St. Valentine sent a farewell note to the jailer's daughter whom had befriended him in prison. It was decorated with hearts and signed "from your Valentine."

There is a belief that there was another St. Valentine in ancient Rome, who married young couples against the orders of the emperor.

"Around the Civil War period everybody made their own Valentines. It was a more personal society," said Gerald McFarland, a history professor at the University of Massachusetts.

When the card companies came out with the commercialized Valentines, there was "customer resistance against them," McFarland said. "The whole thought behind it (the card) was making it yourself," he said.

The actual origin of this holiday is not known, but it is thought to have originated with the festival of Lupercalia, which the ancient Romans held every Feb. 15. On this day the men struck people with strips of animal hide. The women gladly took the blows because they believed it increased their fertility.

The English also traditionally believe the birds choose their mates on Feb 14. The idea that spring is reserved for lovers contributes to this holiday.

BEER WASN'T MEANT TO BE COOKED.

Back in the days of rag-time music, there was no such thing as bottled beer or beer in cans.

Those were the great days of draft beer, fresh from the keg.

Like the draft they brewed at Frederic Miller's old Plank Road Brewery. It had a taste as smooth and fresh as the new jazz music itself.

A taste that's hard to find in today's bottles and cans. Because most beers, in bottles and cans, are pasteurized. Cooked to 140 degrees to preserve their shelf life. So they lose that fresh, draft taste.

But now there's a bottled beer that's not cooked. It's specially cold-filtered instead. To keep the true taste of fresh draft.

Introducing Plank Road Original Draught. It tastes as fresh from the bottle as it does from the keg.

gesture." This threat, coupled with the description of the arsonist as being "a woman between the ages of 18 and 26, a middle child craving affection, who lost a parent when she was young, was extremely intelligent or had below average intelligence, was most likely to be black or Hispanic, would be depressed on Friday night."

According to the report, the purpose of an FBI profile is to narrow down the number of suspects, "not to effect an arrest. It is not considered evidence that a person is guilty."

The local police, the report states, "assumed that the arsonist had to be a minority person. Nothing has been told to our committee which would in any way justify such an assumption on the part of the police."

Also, according to the report, "it is clear the FBI computer was fed a great deal of misinformation, the most striking being that a black person had written the notes (which were found in bathrooms) because of the syntax of the notes."

The committee also suggested that the $10,000 bail set in the case "seemed completely out of line," under the circumstances.

"It was clear that in the past, students who have been accused of much worse crimes were not dealt with by local law officials as harshly as was Henry," concluding that the treatment "accorded to Henry was different from that accorded to non-minority students."

The committee also addressed the conduct of the Dean of Students Office with respect to Henry's case. No statement of general responsibilities for the office was obtained, but the committee assumed "that responsibilities of the Dean of Students include protection of individual student welfare and rights and the enforcement of University Regulations and Policies."

The committee reached the conclusion that the Dean of Students Office acted improperly by giving "minimal importance to Henry's rights." Henry was questioned for two and a half hours before her arrest, with the full knowledge of the Dean of Students, who allowed it to continue without knowing if her (Miranda) rights had been read to her.

The report mentioned a procedure which was developed by the Dean of Students Office, staff of the office of Student Affairs, members of the Department of Public Safety, and representatives of minority faculty and staff in the fall of 1983.

The procedure was planned to "facilitate the involvement of respected members of the minority community in any situation in which a minority student was in serious difficulty." Henry's arrest presented the first opportunity to use the procedure, and it was "completely ignored by the Dean of Students Office, in spite of attempts to implement it by minority administrators.

"We believe that the Dean and his staff should have been able to remain calm and exercise proper judgement in order to protect the welfare and rights of Ms. Henry."

"We feel that both the spirit and the letter of the University Code of Student Conduct were broken."

Recommendations by the committee to ensure that future "panic among University administrators" does not happen include: a thorough investigation of the role played by off-campus agencies, involved in on-campus investigations; a clarification of the responsibilities of the Office of the Dean of Students; related to the welfare of all students; and a need for more crisis training of campus police, "to help them keep perspective and avoid being entrapped by their own assumptions."

1. We feel that the pre-arrest room search and the lengthy pre-arrest interrogation raise questions of civil rights violations.

2. We feel that Ms. Henry's minority status may have played a part in the conduct of the investigation and of the arrest.

3. We feel that the Dean of Students Office did not act properly with respect to Ms. Henry.

4. We feel that Ms. Henry's minority status may have played a part in the way that the Dean of Students Office behaved in this case.

5. We feel that there may be some impact on the recruitment of minority students in the future, but we do not at this time have a firm basis for making such a judgment.

6. Throughout the deliberations of the committee two themes seemed to characterize much of the activity surrounding the series of fires and the arrest of Ms. Henry. First, there appears to have been panic among University administrators. Second, University administrators claimed to be helpless, because the investigation was not in their hands. Both of these themes are most disturbing and seem to fly in the face of the very essence of a University.

Conclusions reached by the faculty senate Committee on the Status of Minorities about the administration's handling of the Yvette Henry case.

Examination of uproar one year later

The campus fires: a look back

It started out as a small item in a local newspaper. At the time, September 23, 1983, no one involved knew the small fire in a trash room in Crampton dormitory would be the beginning of a three month period when the nation's eyes were focused on the University of Massachusetts and a campus tried to solve mystery of who set over 40 fires.

A year later, the debate continues on the events leading to the arrest and subsequent withdrawal of all charges against Yvette Henry, a resident assistant in Crampton House. What follows is a chronological listing of the fires and key events surrounding the wave of fires during that semester, compiled from Collegian staff reports, the majority of which occured in Crampton.

The details of the first fire are simple enough. A trash room on the second floor is ignited at 10:17 p.m. and reported to have caused $500 worth of damage, the most expensive damage, interestingly enough, of all of the Crampton fires. Officials now assert no damage was done. A smoke detector alerts two residents and two floormates who see smoke seeping out from underneath the door and inform Resident Assistant Jeanne Gonsalves, who opens the door and attempts to extinguish the fire but is driven back by smoke.

UMass fire official Keith Hoyle says the fire is "suspicious" and under investigation.

Tuesday, Oct. 8th, 1985: Resident Assistant Yvette I. Henry, conducting a routine security check, discovers at 9:21 p.m. a fire in the second floor trash room. Hoyle rules the fire "definitely suspicious" the building evacuates while four engines dispatched from the Amherst fire department to the site extinguish the fire.

Wednesday, Oct. 12, 1985: UMass police receive a report of a fire at 8:57 p.m. Crampton, again. Again "suspicious," again "under investigation," again, no suspects. This fire: number seven.

Attention from Crampton is sidetracked when on Wednesday, Nov. 2, Cashin Dormitory in the Sylvan Residential Area is hit with its own fires, shortly after 8 p.m. This time the UMass department of Environmental Health and Safety is summoned and fire officials label the fire "suspicious" and "under investigation."

Fires beginning at this period, are considered by some to be "copycat" occurrences.

(By Tuesday, Dec. 6, more than 20 fires will occur in other dormitories on campus, including Cance, Coolidge, MacKimmie, Brown, Patterson, Grayson, Mary Lyon, and the Student Union/Campus Center complex.)

Thursday, Nov. 17: Crampton 1:08 a.m. Bulletin board on the second floor, south wing, is reported afire. Still, no suspects. Police now reveal all fires were on second or third floors.

Monday, Nov. 21: Tenth fire strikes Crampton.

Tuesday, Nov. 22: Fear heightens as another fire occurs when a bulletin board in the second floor of the east wing is set afire and two more fires occur within an hour of each other. Papers hung on a wall in the third floor bathroom in the south wing are set on fire at 10:53 p.m. and a plastic trash container and its contents in the third floor bathroom of the north wing are ignited at 11:47 p.m., according to police.

Executive Director of Housing Services Joseph Zannini says his staff is doing as much as they can and reveal their collaborative investigative efforts with state and campus police. There have been no requests from Crampton residents to move, according to Zannini.

State and regional papers and television stations now pick up the story. As the Daily Collegian continually presents the fires as its lead story, the regional dailies such as the Daily Hampshire Gazette, and the Morning Union of Springfield pick up the story, University residents think maybe the coverage may be instigating the fires.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis expresses his concern, after which state Fire Marshal Joseph O'Keefe visits the campus to meet with University and local officials to determine a solution to the problem. O'Keefe notes that Dukakis had received calls from concerned parents of residents. He expresses his own concern. Some residents are quoted as saying the fires bother them and say they want officials to catch the instigator, but have no plans to move from the building. Six other Crampton residents express their desires to move. Requests are granted as Zannini and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson say all requests for a move can be granted. Twenty-four hour security is instituted. Residents wait outside building in below-zero temperatures while police question their housemates after a 12:37 a.m. second floor bathroom fire.

Sunday, Nov. 27: Northwest District Attorney asks Crampton residents to aid him in catching firestarter, saying his staff has a few leads, but no information from students. Students stress increasing difficulty in maintaining grades; become reluctant to discuss the matter.

Monday, Nov. 28: Frequency of fire escalates and assumes an eerie quality after crayoned note warns of fire fourteen. Residents stand in freezing rain after a 3:12 p.m. evacuation prompted by a fire alarm. State trooper denies presence of notes, refuses further comment. Freshman Donna Murphy, who with a sister conceived a petition requesting a full refund of the $606 housing fee, expresses intentions of presenting the petition circulated among residents to Zannini.

Tuesday, Nov. 29: Crampton residents are informed during a private meeting that five suspects have been chosen. Officials do not discount the possibility of there being a "ring leader;" they reveal all notes have been found in the same handwriting. Locks are changed and six to eight guards are added. A second floor student's desk is set ablaze shortly after 10 a.m.; this spurs more fears because fires are considered now to have personal nature.

Wednesday, Nov. 30: Fires climb to sixteen. Student senate offers $1000 reward for information leading to arrest of firestarter.

Friday, Dec. 2: Yvette I. Henry, 20-year-old second floor resident assistant and chemistry major from Philadelphia, is arrested shortly before 8 p.m. after taken for questioning at 5 p.m. and a press conference by Duffey at 3:30 p.m. Charged with two complaints of "burning the personal property of another," Henry is held at the Franklin County Jail in Greenfield until Sunday night when she is released on $1,000 bail, partly raised by Crampton residents.

Director of Public Safety Gerald O'Neil says Henry will not be able to return to campus. Police refuse to comment on the evidence that lead to Henry's arrest.

Monday, Dec. 5: Henry pleads innocent during arraignment in Hampshire County District Court. State is still considering placing Henry under a psychiatric examination, according to assistant district attorney. Dean William Field says Henry was sent a letter of suspension dated Dec. 4 and will not be permitted on campus until she and her attorney meet with him.

Tuesday, Dec. 6: Henry's case will resume Jan. 26. Board of Trustees requests chancellor to review suspension policy, as suspensions are permanently recorded.

Dec. 22: Charges against Henry were dropped.

May 8, 1984: Henry and her lawyers file two lawsuits totaling $13 million against the University and more than 15 other defendants, charging that her rights were violated in connection with her arrest and subsequent suspension from the University in December 1983.

Writer Ephron speaks about her 'evolution'

BY FRAN WEINBERG
Collegian Staff

Nora Ephron, successful journalist, novelist and screenplay writer, talked warmly and humorously Tuesday night to a Smith College audience about her evolution as a Jew, a writer and a woman.

Ephron, author of the novel "Heartburn" and the screenplay for the movie "Silkwood," described the various stages of her life as filled with transitions.

As a college student, Ephron described herself as "girl, funny, Wellesley student, ambitious and Democrat." She said 10 years later, "reporter, woman, feminist, single and happy" would have described her.

To sum up her present life she would choose the words "mother, writer, sister, Jewish, single...again."

Ephron's evolution did not happen overnight. She believes her passage from "girl to woman, to mother" and from "ambitious to reporter, to writer," happened through many experiences and the natural process of maturation.

Ephron's first interest in her heritage came while she was attending Wellesley College where she noticed that all the Catholic women were put together and all the Jewish women were put together.

She described her experience at Wellesley as "not anti-semitic; just dumb." People would make such comments as "Oh, you're so lucky to be Jewish, Jews are so smart, Leonard Bernstein is Jewish." Her reply to them would be "come home with me and I'll introduce you to some stupid people," she said.

These experiences were reinforced when she moved to New York City and began to recognize a certain kind of language and literature that related back to Jewish history in her surroundings.

Ephron told the audience that while growing up, her mother taught her to find the humor in her own misfortune. "In the Jewish tradition, what is tragic today will be funny later on," she said.

As a writer, she advised the audience to begin slowly and not attempt not to be too ambitious too early otherwise "you'll fail early and feel inadequate" she said.

She advised starting with "something you feel confident about being able to do and work you way up."

Ephron also explained her transition from girl to woman and said, "there was no move I made more happily than the one out of girldom. I was never very good at it."

She said the title "woman" should be earned, adding "a woman is understanding that you're it, you're responsible for your life and no one else it."

"If we truly want to be equal then we have to take responsibility for the decisions we make" she said.

Although Czech and Slovak languages are very similar, historical developments have created different cultural, linguistic and literary traditions between these two major peoples of Czechoslovakia.

A Slovak culture course is being offered by the UMass Slavic Department and will be taught by Dr. Toska Mistrikova from Comenius University in Bratislava, Czechoslovakia.

Mistrikova was brought here through the Fulbright program, which brings foreign lecturers to American colleges and universities and sends American lecturers abroad, Rothstein said.

The culture of the Polish has been an important element in Western Culture and also to the United States, these people have come here and helped build the country, he said.

"With the importance of the Soviet Union in the present world, a better understanding of how they think can only be useful, one achieves the best understanding by learning the language," Rothstein said.

The teaching of the Slavic language at UMass is also appropriate because of the large population of Slavic residents in western Massachusetts. There is a high population of Polish, Slavic, Ukrainian and even Russian-Americans within the Connecticut River Valley area, Rothstein said.

The Slavic Department is also very active with the cultures around the area. "We have a mailing list about 100 people, mostly the Polish culture, who get announcements of films and lectures at the University," Rothstein said.

Rothstein, the head of the department is a Harvard graduate and has spent two years in Poland studying and lecturing. He visited the Soviet Union on two occasions to study and research, and has been to Czechoslovakia to study and lecture a few times.

A forecast decline in student enrollment will result in a decrease from last year of $306,540 in revenue from Student Activities Fees, according to the report. About $80,839 will be eaten up by full costing, a University required administrative fee.

Senators questioned why they had not been informed of the predicted drop in funding earlier and debated about what could be done to alleviate the situation.

"We should have known about this two or three years ago, why wasn't it brought to the senate then and not now, when it's too late," Bill Collins co-senator from Moore, said.

Chris Sullivan, speaker of the senate, said that the officers of the senate had known there would be some change in allocable funds, but not how severe they would be until the report was finished.

In other action, the senate voted 27-30 not to offer a $100 reward "for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible for the defacement of University buildings on the weekend of Feb. 1, 1985."

The senate also voted 18-29 not to create a spring concert fund for Fiscal Year 1986.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

The right to know

The Collegian has obtained a copy of a special faculty committee report concerning the December 1983 arrest on arson charges of Yvette I. Henry, the former student who currently has two multimillion-dollar lawsuits pending against law enforcement officials and University of Massachusetts administrators for alleged violations of her civil rights surrounding that event.

The report, completed last May by the faculty senate Committee on the Status of Minorities, is based on interviews with six persons who were "present and involved" the night Henry was apprehended, questioned for several hours and then arrested and charged with setting one of a series of fires in Crampton house, her dormitory. The six include Dean of Students William F. Field and Director of Public Safety Gerald T. O'Neil, who are defendants in the lawsuits, Affirmative Action Officer Thelma Griffith-Johnson, and one of Henry's attorneys, UMass Legal Services Director Charles J. DiMare.

Henry, a senior chemistry major and resident assistant at the time, was also immediately suspended and barred from campus by Dean Field in a very loose—illegal, many say— interpretation of the Code of Student Conduct. All charges against her were subsequently dropped. Last May 8, she filed two lawsuits totaling $13 million which charge Field, O'Neil, the FBI, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, and more than a dozen others with offenses including civil rights violations and illegal suspension.

The committee's conclusions do not speak well for the administration's handling of the affair, so it surely lends support to Henry's case against the University. Robert E. Jones, faculty senate secretary, would not say whether this is the reason that the faculty rules committee has withheld the findings from the senate and hence from the public. Jones would say only that since the report was originally requested by the rules committee, "it belongs to the rules committee," adding, "we're not trying to hide anything."

To prove this, the rules committee must release the full contents of the document. If the report remains suppressed, it will most likely be subpoenaed anyway when Henry's lawsuits come to trial. And to restrict access to it defeats the motive of the Committee on the Status of Minorities, which, as committee chairman Castellano Turner has said, was not to determine guilt but to assess what went wrong in the Henry case and how to prevent such misfortunes in the future.

The committee's conclusions, in part:

•That the lengthy interrogation of Henry without an attorney present, despite her repeated requests to contact one, and the search of her room without a warrant constituted violations of her civil rights;

•That Henry, who is black, was treated more harshly than nonminority students "who had been accused of much worse crimes," including murder and rape, in the past;

•That the dean of students office displayed insensitivity in the case;

•And that "there appeared to have been panic among University administrators, "who let the FBI and state officials take over the arson investigation and then "claimed to be helpless, because the investigation was not in their hands." The report warns especially of "the dangers of turning over complete control of any activity on this campus to any outside organization," adding, "The images of Kent State are still all too clear in our memories."

The report also contains potentially damaging indictments of certain UMass officials which could influence a jury. But it is unlikely that a document so relevant to the litigation, prepared by an impartial panel, would not be admitted as evidence in any event.

More important, Turner's committee aimed to stimulate debate—to determine the Henry episode's effect on minority recruiting at UMass and to clarify what the University's position should be toward outside law enforcement agencies and toward accused students. Last August, Jones sent a letter to Duffey asking the chancellor for his imput on these questions. Duffey has yet to respond.

The Rules Committee should make the report public—not in the interest of winning or losing a lawsuit, but of making sure what happened to Yvette Henry never happens again.

Despair down on the farm

Diane Lane

There are, it seems, not enough hankies to go around these days to stem the tide of tears and protest which have arisen throughout the country in the aftermath of President Reagan's 1986 budget proposal. Though the poor and disadvantaged remain Reagan's favorite guinea pigs for his experiments with laissez-faire government, they and their lobbyists have been strangely silent. Having voted against the current administration in November, it appears likely they were only too well aware of what the numbers would tell come January and are, perhaps, resigned.

However, the bellows of dismay that represent the nation's farmers are loud and clear indeed. According to a recent Boston Globe article on the crisis in the farm belt, 37 rural banks have already closed, with more threatening to follow suit, while at least 10 percent of all farmers in this country face the imminent prospect of bankruptcy.

Reagan's Richie Cunningham smile and apple dumpling cheeks helped him slide by the persistent questioning by reporters and Democrats during the summer months prior to the election with a promise of $650 million in emergency debt money. Wrapped in the American flag, he faced huge crowds of farmers and spoke only cliches of patriotism and family. Then, he ran away to count his "mandate" and hide from insincere promises. As of January, only $25 million had been allotted, and much like relatives left out of their senile great-uncle's will, the farmers are only now beginning to realize what a dirty trick has been pulled at their expense.

Yet, to these farmers, and with apologies to those who voted Democratic, I can only ask with some annoyance—what on earth did you expect?

While Walter Mondale was being soundly thrashed by the voters for even daring to suggest that a tax increase just might, possibly, be needed to alleviate the enormous deficit, and newspapers and magazines ran story after story on the threat of that same deficit, a resounding majority of Americans voted for Reagan's slim-down-the-budget-and-let-strange-and-bizarre-economic-theories-do-the-rest plan. Farmers among them, and God help us, we have proved the old saying true—you get what you pay for.

Anyone of even moderate intelligence who read just the bumper stickers touting the Republican party will recall that this is an administration which will not, under any circumstances, reduce the size of military defense spending; nor will it raise taxes, having allowed itself to be goaded unmercifully by Mondale's schoolyard chants of secret tax increase plans. Without wanting to say I told you so, the only thing that remains to be seen is whether the farmers and the middle class and the poor can absorb enough of the budget cuts for it to even make a difference in the ever-rising interest payments on the red ink of our national debt.

Perhaps a deep cynical streak was needed to get through the rhetoric-filled campaign season with one's head on straight. It's sad to think the farmers really believed the president when he assured them they are the backbone of the country and that he would not see them lose their family farms. It's even more disturbing that he did not have the courage to tell them himself that they might indeed lose the farm; instead sending his intellectual hatchetman to accuse them of bad faith in borrowing and greedily "trying to get rich."

It adds insult to injury, especially now, with the administration determined to have the most expensive and fancy military equipment available to defend a nation from an outside threat, while taking away the inner security that makes a nation worth defending.

Letters to the Editor

Why ask such a simplistic question?

I would like to pose a question to the Collegian. What is the intention or motivation of the Collegian in asking Ann Landers' question (Feb. 7)?

It is a simplistic, misleading and unfortunate question. Sexuality has been reduced to only its physical aspect. It also represents an "either/or" situation. Perhaps this is what most women experience—either cuddles or "the act." Perhaps relationships can offer sexual intimacy with tenderness, respect and genuine acknowledgement of one's personhood; in the case of Landers' question, womanhood.

This type of question alludes to the symbolic images of women as Madonna and whore. Women are neither of these. They are a complexity of thoughts, feelings, physical presence and much more. To ask this kind of question perpetuates ideas about women that are detrimental to their health. It is a question cloaked in liberal thinking. Many people believe in comparisons. Some women may criticise themselves for which side of the question they come out on. This question raises age-old issues that should not be simplistically viewed.

My question, dear Collegian, is "Why ask?" And with the answer I want to know, "What significance do you deduce from the replies?"

Bringing home the truth

Recently the U.S. press has been full of stories about Nicaragua. These stories tend to inundate us with contradictory facts and figures that do not clarify but serve only to bewilder. Having just returned from four weeks of living in Nicaragua, we would like to share a few of our personal experiences. We hope that these actual experiences will cause you to ask what we feel are more appropriate questions regarding the current situation in Nicaragua.

As part of a program to study the current situation in Nicaragua, we spent four weeks in January living with families in the northern city of Esteli. The war currently being waged against the Nicaraguan people is a daily reality for the people of Esteli, and it wasn't long before we were also confronted with it. In the afternoon of our second day in Esteli, we were informed that the contra, or counterrevolutionaries, had ambushed and brutally murdered 13 people on the road between Esteli and the town of San Juan de Limay. These 13 civilians were a group of agricultural and construction workers who were killed on their way to work. Several of these people were burned beyond recognition and three had been decapitated. This mutilation made it next to impossible to match the heads with the bodies. The bodies, such as they were, were brought back to Esteli and the coffins were lined up along the edge of the park. We then participated, along with the Nicaraguans, in a community repudiation of this senseless violence. We could not have had a more graphic introduction to the reality of this war and the human suffering that it is causing.

The four-year-old contra war has robbed almost every household in Esteli of some family member. Our families were not exceptions. Angela Torres' 14-year-old son was killed by the contras two years ago. Antonia Ordones has lost two sons in the war. The second was killed on Christmas Eve, just two weeks before we arrived in Esteli. As we learned these facts from our families, we were moved by their strength and generosity in opening their homes to citizens of the country that is largely responsible for their suffering. That strength comes from their desire for peace, and from the great hope in the conscience of the American people. Knowing that we were sleeping in the beds of the dead sons made it impossible for us to ignore our responsibility—both our implicit responsibility for the deaths of those sons and our explicit responsibility to prevent further deaths.

These two experiences shocked us into recognizing the reality of the war in Nicaragua and its personal affects on people we now know and love. A further event that served to personalize this war occurred during our third week in Esteli. On Saturday we visited a cooperative about 40 kilometers north of Esteli, called Pueblo Nuevo. There, the people shared with us their accomplishments over the past four years: increased crop production, improved housing, medical programs, etc. They also shared their hopes for the future. It is questionable, though, how many of those hopes they will be able to realize. Three days after our visit to Pueblo Nuevo, the contras attacked the cooperative. It is disheartening to realize that these people are being denied the opportunity to better their lives. It is frightening to realize that should we return to Nicaragua, these people may well be dead.

Our experiences in Nicaragua served to change our perspective on the situation there. We now realize that the debate that rages here in the United States focuses on the wrong questions. The question is not whether the Nicaraguans are socialists or whether they receive Soviet weapons. The question is whether the U.S. has the right to assist in the killing of innocent civilians and to attempt to overthrow a democratically elected and popular government. The mountains of facts and figures and the misdirected questions presented by the media serve to hide the reality of the situation in Nicaragua. People are dying. Ronald Reagan has decided that Nicaraguans should continue to die because they have chosen a government that is not to his liking.

Our mothers in Esteli have sent us home with a message: the Nicaraguan people want peace. They want the freedom to govern themselves as they choose. They want their sons and daughters to be safe. They want an end to the killing.

Say it isn't so

Jason Talerman

I woke up this morning with an empty feeling. It wasn't the kind of a feeling that could make one sick but nonetheless, it hurt, deep inside where no physical ailment could possibly be felt. I winced a bit, shook my head and perplexedly went about my morning routine.

There were no bright and sunny skies to free me from my ills. The skies were grey and forbidding. By the time I had the energy to raise my head I realized that something was definitely wrong in the land where everything had been so perfect and simple just a few short days before.

The entire campus looked like the set from Dawn of the Dead. Every person I glanced at seemed like they had just lost a close friend. They walked straight but slowly and looked feeble and disconsolate. Their eyes were fixed but had no definite focus. I dared not ask anyone what was going on for fear of catapulting their system into a deathly state of shock and paranoia. What had happened to the people who, just a few short days ago, had been so happy and so lively? Where was the glitter in the eye; the bounce in the step?

Was it drugs? I wondered. No, everyone's senses seemed to be working at normal acceptable levels. Maybe there was a coup or an invasion of...

Just then, I saw an incredibly large man wearing a Massachusetts Football shirt sway, teeter, and drop, face first, to the ground. What the hell was happening? I rushed over to him as fast as my weary legs could carry me. I knelt down and managed to turn his hulking body over. It pained me to look at the misery that was etched into this falled man's face. I ripped a swatch from my shirt to wipe the blood and dirt away from his face. I looked into his eyes, which were glazed over with fear and disappointment, and asked, "What happened?"

There was no reply. I started beating on his chest in a rage of bewilderment, "What is it dammit! What has happened?"

His lips trembled slightly as he muttered, "D...D...Do...Doug." Evidently he had summoned up all of his remaining strength to utter this one word for upon its completion he lapsed into unconsciousness. Two white jacketed men who were apparently ready for just such a crisis quickly made their way over to the scene and carried the "wounded" man away.

I was no longer bewildered. It became evident that the entire campus had taken ill with the dreaded "fallen hero syndrome." For a few, all too short years Doug Flutie had a large impact on us—mind, body, and spirit. He had been everything to us, even the things he was not capable of (thanks to the media). He was a sporting underdog, who triumphed with smart speech and a perfect smile.

So what were we to expect? Was Doug Flutie not supposed to sign the inevitable multimillion dollar contract? But, shouldn't Doug play for nothing just for the love of honor, the game, and all of humanity?

So, what now? Does Doug Flutie lose his hero status now that he gets paid over a million dollars per year? Flutie will still excite us with artful scambles and miraculous T.D. passes but what about all that money? Does Doug Flutie go down in the books as just another sell out? When his athletic days are over will he head straight to Vegas and get up on stage with the likes of Sammy, Frankie, and Dean?

Well, nobody is slicing their wrists over the whole sordid deal but all I know is that my Doug Flutie tee-shirt has been spending a lot more time at the bottom of my drawer.

Jason Talerman is a Collegian staff member.

What's the fuss all about?

Moira Smith

Could someone please tell me why Valentine's Day is such a big deal? Yah, I know it's all about love and blissful, mutual affection between people romantically enthralled with one another.

But did they have to go and make it so important? Valentine—some saint. Thanks to him, insecurity and panic strike the heart of every person facing February 14th without a substantial love interest.

You might as well bag the ego for this one.

Cripe, we've got enough to worry about in the '80s: the economy, people starving in Africa, herpes, nuclear war, to go new-wave or stay preppy—do we really need someone giving us the hairy-eyeball if we don't get something on Valentine's Day?

I mean, how many Valentines have you received in the past couple of decades? Me? Next to none. I did get one back in 1972 when some goober in third grade dealt me in with a Hallmark original.

I'll admit, I am guilty of buying armfulls of cards at the University Store and sending them, yes, to my own address. Come on— you've got to save face. My friends haven't caught on because I always sign them "Your Secret Admirer," with my left hand. Who cares if it looks like a five-year-old sent them. It's quality that counts—right?

Another thing—those little heart-shaped candies? You know, the rock hard ones with the little sayings like "be mine," "you're hot," "kiss me," "wow," etc. printed on them? I hate those things. You could do some serious damage to your dental work chewing them babies. And to actually swallow those things—it's like a death wish. I mean, is this happiness?

And let me tell you, those Fannie Farmer chocolates in the heart-shaped boxes? I am honestly relieved that I have never been given one of them. The gross cremes and bad tasting nuts that they disguise with the chocolate are fillings I wouldn't even force on my worst enemy. Scary.

Let's face it, next to New Year's—Valentine's Day is the most over-blown holiday of the year. It makes you feel weird all over if you don't have a special someone to send you a mushy card—like you aren't lovable.

Cripe, we've got enough to worry about in the '80s: the economy, people starving in Africa, herpes, nuclear war, to go new-wave or stay preppy—do we really need someone giving us the hairy-eyeball if we don't get something on Valentine's Day?

So, today, when you're the only roommate who didn't get a card, or candy, or flowers—like I will undoubtedly be— just keep smiling.

After all, St. Patrick's Day is just a month away. On that day you don't have to be loved—just Irish.

Oh, brother.

Cotton: ambassador superharp

By JACK BRESNAHAN
Collegian Staff

Finally a new James Cotton album. It has been nine years since his last release. That's not to say that he hasn't been touring or recording with others, but that is a long dry spell without a record. Who knows why it took so long, but here it is.

James belongs in the blues hall of fame. He left home at the age of twelve per order of his father because he was making more money playing harmonica on one Friday than his father made in a week as a sharecropper. After striking out on his own, he caught up with his mentor, Sonny Boy Willamson, and inherited his band when he was 15. He later played harp for 12 years for the late-great bandleader, Muddy Waters. In 1976, his notoriety rocketed with a new live double album, and in '77 he teamed up with Muddy and Johnny Winter on the gold record Hard Again, and a critically acclaimed world tour which included Eric Clapton. Now a youngster at 50 years old, Cotton is celebrating his ninth album.

This record is not simply a rehash of his old harmonica riffs and that is an understatement. Cotton's release of stored-up energy and his noteworthy participants makes this a collossal recording. Two separate bands play five songs each, The Chicago Blues All-Stars, and the regular touring James Cotton Band. The former features guitarist Magic Slim, presently one of the most popular in Chicago.

Joining them is Pine Top Perkins (you remember the Legendary Blues Band), and bassist Aron Burton, who plays on the new Fenton Robinson LP. Together they bop through "Diggin My Potatoes," and blues it to Eddie Boyd's "23 Hours Too Long." If you want to hear how good a chromatic harp can sound, this is it. Thumping piano and harp rips can be heard on "No More Doggin," as well as how a woman can give a man the blues. Pianist Lafayette Leake's tune "Sunny Road" is also covered, with Magic Slim coming to the forefront. Their final song together is "High Compression," which has perhaps the best harmonica solos Cotton has ever done. I wonder when he finds the time to breathe.

Most of the airplay this record has been getting comes from songs with his regular band. They are a younger group who are comparatively funkier. This is evident on Rice Miller's "Ying Yang," with the horn's short blasts and the bass and drums' syncopation. The same is true with "No Cuttin Loose," on which the keyboards especially add to the funkification. In my opinion, "Superharp" is one of Cotton's all-time best. It embodies the character of James in the lyrics, and the virtuosity of his harmonica playing. If you can't boogie to that, you've got your underwear too tight. They finish off with James sentimental singing on "Easy Loving," and reaches notes on the harp that'll leave you wondering how he does it.

Scientifically it takes a lot of energy to attain high compression. It occurs when air is pressurized into an object, creating an explosive situation. This reminds me of James Cotton, blowing wind through his Marine Band, he creates High Compression.

Pearl St. blues with Clements

By HEATHER LEVI
Collegian Staff

The combination of Texas bluesman Clarence Gatemouth Brown and Louisiana bluegrass-fusion fiddler Vassar Clements at Pearl Street Thursday night promised to be an eclectic show, and eclectic it was. Their repetoire ranged from swing to cajun, from bluegrass to blues, and just about everything in between. While Vassar Clements was more than adequate (shocking his fans by playing his signature tune "Orange Blossom Special" third instead of last, gasp!) the real treat of the evening was Gatemouth who proved himself not only an amazing guitarist as expected, but (sorry Vassar) an amazing fiddler, and a reasonably good harpsman as well.

Judging by his habit of sitting on a stool, and playing only when he seemingly absolutely had to, he did not appear to be a contender for the "hardest working man in showbiz" title, but whenever he did play, it was with great spirit and originality. His guitar technique of popping the strings with his fingers instead of using a pick sounds really hot.

The band also played well all night, especially trumpeter Mark Wells who blew some very nice solos throughout, despite the weather.

Centerfield scores

CENTERFIELD
John Fogerty
Warner Brothers
By JIM TAYLOR
Collegian Staff

The best occurance in modern music of the mid-eighties is the return of one of the late-sixties' greatest songwriters. Of course I mean John Fogerty, the creator of Creedence Clearwater Revival. CCR was the best-selling band of the sixties and early seventies in America. A greater percentage of their singles were bigger hits than Elvis and the Beatles. After Fogerty's retreat to the bayou from the corruptions of decadent society, Creedence no longer existed. Despite Fogerty's attempt to reform the group into the greatest rock and roll band of all time, nothing happened. The group got back together for one day in 1980. But that's enough reactionary criticism.

Fogerty is back with his third solo album, in which he produced, composed all the songs, and played every instrument, hence the significance of the title, Centerfield. It appears that John has gone commercial, probably because his last two solos were not financially successful. Many of the riffs are variations of earlier Creedence.

"Searchlight," a song lyrically in the Creedence fashion, opens with a variation of "Born on the Bayou" and "Run Through the Jungle." The song involves a man lost in the darkness of a world where he can't find himself. The guitar riff from "Who'll Stop the Rain" can be found at the end of "I Saw It On T.V.." In this song, John remembers back to his childhood and recalls moments from someone else's life, who is confused about why certain things happen.

The biggest hit on the album is "The Old Man Down the Road." This is an excellent song about the inevitable occurance in life. The guitar work proves that true Southern rock and roll can still exist against the computerized music of this modern decade.

There's only one complaint I have against this album. John's voice sounds like it has regressed into the puberty stage. The raspy tones still emerge from the soprano sound. The voice is useful in conveying the songs, though. The best example is "Rock and Roll Girls," which could not be sung in the old screaming tenor fashion.

"Big Train from Memphis" is another recollection-of-the-past song about the present drowning the past. This is one of the best songs Fogerty has written, allowing his personal emotions to flow through the song.

The entire album follows a linear pattern of great tunes. Some songs bear elements of modern music, such as "Zanz Kant Danz" and "Centerfield." These sounds are used creatively, not exploitatively.

Centerfield proves what can happen when a great songwriter returns unscathed. This album has been number one in this country for the past two weeks. John Fogerty has remained on top against the corruptions of modern generic music.

ARTS

live wire

by Peter Wissoker

Well as you may have noticed this column can be hit or miss. This week's miss rather or last week's was the Roches at Mt. Holyoke, yes two nights ago. But who would have known. Read the review tomorrow. Also I missed Link Wray. So once again in case you have forgotten newspapers only give you some or most of the news so watch out.

This week there really is a trivia question, I think. Tonight there are a few things going on. Guitarist June Millington is playing at Valentine's day benefit dance at the Hampshire College Dining Commons. She'll be playing with local stars Marty Gwynn, and Leah Kunkel of The Coyote Sisters, Adrienne Torf, Toshi Reagon and others.

Also tonight is perhaps the best living blues guitarist Albert Collins. He's playing at the Rusty Nail tonight, tickets are pretty cheap.

The Lines are playing at the Blue Wall Friday night, local and cheap.

Saturday, tough choice. Musicwise a trip to Springfield to see my favorite band, Mongrel Puppy, opening up for Boston's Salem 66. Also playing are the cleverly named Stately Wayne Manor. These three merry psychedelic bands are playing at the Zone. The Briar Hill Ramblers, a local string band, will be playing at the Iron Horse. The group features Vandy Kaynor, Debbie Fish, Rudie Weeks, and Diane Sanabria. And for you TV buffs, Shari Lewis and Lambchop will be playing with the Springfield Symphony tonight, or am I showing my age. The other option Rock and Roll fans is the 24-hour sci-fi marathon at the Amherst Cinema midnight to midnight.

And if that really is all we can now get on the ill-fated Trivia Question: What is Stately Wayne Manor? The first respondant who is right will win a copy of the Sixtomania trivia game. Bring your answer down to the arts desk with your name and the time of day you brought it down.

Punk mumbles

By ADAM BRIGHTMAN
Collegian Staff

This is a very good American rock and roll record. Here hardcore slams into the Byrds and country rock, thrashes around for about 41 minutes, and zooms off again. Kind of like a punk R.E.M. with ripsaw guitar.

"New Day Rising" is yet another recent release from Minneapolis' newest claim to fame, Husker Du. The comparison with R.E.M. makes sense considering both bands' flirtations with the "new American music," which is in fact music based in American folk and country with punk sensibilities and attitudes applied to it. Husker Du leans more into the hardcore punk, but moans, wails, and spits out thoughtful and convincing words with simple, memorable melodies attached to them.

Another aspect of this newly-made popular music are the ragged, spontaneous sounding harmonies, born out of heartland America. The vocals range from a bark to a low mumble, but unlike a lot of hardcore Husker Du is really singing most of the time.

The lyrics resonate with hate, humor, confusion, and reflection. "I never look back at it, but it's always in front of me/It's always worth the hurt, but I know it's hurting me/I'll never let go of it, because it's all that's going for me." One member of Husker Du, lyricist and singer Hart, echoes another famed Minneapolis rocker with his words and mannerisms, Bob Dylan.

The record ends with two straight and furious hardcore songs, closing the album on a note of complete chaos. The one mistake on this record is 1:52 of sonic silliness and guitar crunch, "How to Skin a Cat." If you old Doors fans remember what "Horse Latitudes" did for the "Strange Days" album, you know what I mean. A thought for today: "If you feed the rats to the cats and the cats to the rats, you get the cat skins for nothing.

The current faculty exhibit Anything Goes will be on display at the Student Union Gallery, UMass, through Friday. Gallery hours are 11-4 Monday - Friday.

This exhibit represents an unusually fine quality of work done by five-college faculty from departments such as political science and journalism. The works, done in a variety of media, have a freshness and represent hidden talents of faculty in departments other than art.

The university of Massachusetts Department of Theater will hold open audition for Peter Handke's THE RIDE ACROSS LAKE CONSTANCE, from 7:00 to 11:00 PM in room 201 of the University's Fine Arts Center on February 25 and 26. Blacks at Harvard urge divestment

CAMBRIDGE (AP) - Breaking a long silence on Harvard University's ties to South Africa, black faculty and administrators are now urging school officials to sever financial links with companies that operate in the racially segregated nation.

In its first letter to President Derek Bok on the subject, the 200-member Association of Black Faculty and Administrators at Harvard asked the university to divest of stock held in companies that do business in South Africa, which adheres to a system of strict racial separation called apartheid.

"Harvard's investments in companies that do business in South Africa is a cause of deep personal embarrassment and pain to us," Charles Willie, a professor at the School of Education, said yesterday.

"We have waited a long time to call for divestiture," he said.

"But we are done giving Harvard the benefit of the doubt. At this point, Harvard is becoming tainted because it engages in activities that support an immoral, repugnant regime."

Bok has reviewed the letter from the association and plans to meet with the group very soon, Harvard spokesman David Rosen said yesterday.

In the past, Bok has resisted pressure to divest, saying that the school can better affect social change in the African nation by remaining financially linked to companies that do business there. Students first called upon Harvard to divest in 1977.

"The university said it would divest if they judged companies were doing more harm than good," Willie said. "In our judgement they haven't done that.

"The time has come to take action," Willie said.

Rapists ask for new trial

BOSTON (AP) - Attorneys for two of four men convicted in a highly publicized barroom rape case argued yesterday that a Superior Court judge should hear evidence on why the men deserve a new trial.

"There is a dispute as to some of the fine points as to who knew what, when," said attorney David Waxler, who represents defendant Joseph Vieira.

Waxler said the victim's testimony during the 1984 trial differed substantially from statements she gave police shortly after the incident at Big Dan's tavern in New Bedford.

Judge William Young said he will decide by Thursday whether to grant the request for a hearing to present evidence on why a new trial is warranted.

Waxler and the attorney for defendant Daniel Silva already have filed briefs requesting a new trial, but have asked for the hearing prior to a ruling on that request.

Patricia O. Ellis, an assistant Bristol County district attorney, argued there is no need for a hearing because changes in the victim's statement were of little consequence.

POT LUCK— Singer-actress Cher was honored yesterday with Harvard University's Hasty Pudding Club award for Woman of the Year.

Air Force ducks hearing

NORTHAMPTON (AP)— Air Force officials shunned a public hearing on its plans to build a nuclear-defense radio tower in western Massachusetts after learning the director of a national anti-nuclear lobby would speak, county commissioners said.

The Air Force said in a prepared statement read at Tuesday night's meeting that it objected to the inclusion of people from outside the communities involved.

William Arkin, director of the Washington-based Arms Race and Nuclear Weapons Research project of the Institute for Policy Studies, was the only outsider to speak at the meeting.

The statement and Air Force spokesman Les Levinson yesterday did not name Arkin as the reason.

"We can address only the mission and makeup. We cannot become involved in foreign policy, in philosophical discussions. That is not our mandate," said Levinson, spokesman for Hanscom Air Force Base in Bedford.

Hampshire County Commissioner Pat Lewis Sackrey and Commission Chairman Patrick M. Goggins said Air Force and Defense Department officials said they objected specifically to Arkin's presence at the meeting.

Longer lives will lead to higher rates of cancer

One in three newborns at risk

NEW YORK (AP) - One in three people born this year will eventually develop cancer, chiefly because they will live long enough to reach the ages when cancer is more likely, the American Cancer Society projects.

About 22 percent of those born this year are expected to die of the disease.

The projection that one in three people will get cancer is up from about one-in-four previously calculated for people born in 1970, essentially because of increased life expectancy, Lawrence Garfinkel of the society said yesterday.

Long-term declines in death from the nation's top killer, heart and blood vessel disease, have let more people live long enough to get cancer instead, he said. That is reflected in the projection, which uses cancer rate data from past years.

Cancer is generally an older person's disease, especially for some forms, like prostate cancer.

The projection assumes no change in cancer rates, but if enough people quit smoking or adopt diets that help resist cancer, the actual cancer rate could be lower than projected, Garfinkel said.

For people born this year, the projection says, the chance of developing cancer someday is 36.2 percent for white males, 34.0 percent for white females, 34.7 percent for black males and 29.2 percent for black females. Figures exclude two highly curable forms of skin cancer.

The most common cancers in the projection are lung, prostate and colorectal for men, and breast, colorectal and lung for women.

The society's projection considers lifetimes up to 110. "There's very little of the upper end" that contributes to the data, Garfinkel said.

The National Cancer Institute has published an estimate based on data from 1973 to 1977, saying anyone alive at that time had a 30 percent chance of developing cancer by age 75.

The cancer society says a 30 percent figure means about 71 million Americans now alive will have cancer someday.

Since the 14th Century and probably earlier, this special day has been observed in nearly the same manner it is today. Whatever its origins, Valentine's Day is a day for remembering that special someone.

Day care centers closed in inquiry

NEW BRAINTREE (AP) - State officials confirmed yesterday that they closed the Caring for Kids day care centers because of allegations that children had been sexually abused while attending them.

Meanwhile, state officials met Tuesday evening with parents of some of the students to teach them ways to detect sexual abuse among children. The meeting was held at a church in Gilbertville.

"It was important to make the state officials immediately accessible to the parents, to answer their questions and to explain to them as best we could why the action suspension was necessary and what the potential impact would be to them and their children," said Michael Coughlin, spokesman for the state Office for Children.

Coughlin, speaking to the Worcester Evening Gazette, also confirmed that Worcester County District Attorney John Conte has been informed of the allegations.

"At this point the DA is involved. I can't discuss for them what they may or may not do," Coughlin said.

The license for the centers located in New Braintree and Hardwick, was temporarily suspended late Monday afternoon "to protect the health and safety of the children involved at the center," said Coughlin.

Twenty-two children attended the New Braintree center, eight the Hardwick center.

The closure came after an investigation by the Department of Social Services that began at least a month ago, according to the Gazette.

Officials have declined to reveal how many children were involved in the allegations. They also refused to identify the accused.

Redgrave's award reduced by judge

BOSTON (AP) - A federal judge yesterday threw out a $100,000 jury award to actress Vanessa Redgrave, ruling the Boston Symphony Orchestra could not be held liable for damages to her career that might have occurred after it canceled her performance in a 1982 concert series.

Instead, U.S. District Judge Robert Keeton said the orchestra must pay Redgrave $27,500 - slightly less then the fee she would have received if she had narrated Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" with the symphony.

He also ordered Redgrave to pay the BSO's court costs.

A spokesman for the symphony said those costs have not been determined.

In a trial last November, Redgrave sued the orchestra for $1 million, claiming her civil rights had been violated. She alleged that she had been fired for her strong support of the Palestine Liberation Organization and that the BSO was trying to stifle her political views.

She also asked for $166,000 for lost income she claimed resulted from the publicity surrounding the canceled concert series.

Gov't phone hunting

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government, the world's largest long-distance telephone customer, started shopping yesterday for $4.2 billion worth of service by opening the bidding process for a contract that will go to one—and only one—vendor.

The General Services Administration, the government's procurement officer, asked telephone executives to come up with a plan for replacing the 22-year-old Federal Telecommunications System, essentially provided by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

"We want only three things," said Bob Bushelle, one of the team of GSA officers briefing the 350 executives interested in the contract.

What the government wants is a one-stop telecommunications company, operated by a single prime contractor, that can provide and manage a total system service for 1.3 million government workers for 10 years starting in 1989.

Those federal employees and their computers talked long-distance for 1.5 billion minutes last year at a cost of $424 million.

NEWMAN CLUB "SAY IT WITH A FLOWER"

If your name is on the list:

1. Come down to the Newman Club Table in the Campus Center Concourse
2. Tell us EXACTLY how your name appears on the list and under which letter column
3. Bring an ID. We will then present you with your flower
   Red means "I love you", Pink means "I like you", White means "I want to get to know you"
4. Bring 50¢ in case you cannot guess who sent the flower
5. We apologize for mispellings, they are based on the writing of the senders.

reserves Matt Ryan, Tom Emerson, Wilbert Hicks and Jackie Sheehan as keys for UMass in the upcoming games.

"The starters need a blow now and then, and these guys are coming through for us," Gerlufsen said. "They all have contributed to certain situations and done the job."

From the free throw line, UMass has upped its team percentage to 65 percent, far above the 59 percent they once suffered through.

"It's another indication how we've come together and played with intensity," Gerlufsen said.

Starting for UMass will be Neysmith (14.2 points-per-game) at center with Bobby Braun (9.7 ppg) at forwards. The guards will see Russell (16.2 ppg), Lorenzo Sutton (7.3 ppg) and Carl Smith (8.7 ppg and 94 assists).

"We have to play tough defense and keep up the patient shot selection we showed against St. Bonaventure and Penn State (the two road wins). When players like Neysmith take just three shots a game (against the Bonnies) it's because the shots aren't there and he's playing smart, not because the offense is failing. It's actually a good indication that one of our best players can score far below his average and we win," Gerlufsen said.

Minuteman Mutterings: The recruiting wars continue for the Minutemen as they are now actively recruiting ten players, seven of which are front-line players. When UMass travels to Philadelphia, they well be seriously looking at two players from Ben Franklin High. Locally, Jason Lobo, 6-10 from Southwick is being recruited by UMass, Rhode Island, Navy, and the Ivies. Springfield's Chris Bailey is being sought by several schools. UMass, Boston College, Northeastern, Fordham, and Colorado State have all shown interest in the guard. Neysmith and Braun continue to provide a one-two punch of the boards. Neysmith and Braun continue to provide a one-two punch of the boards. Neysmith is second in the A-10 (8.6) and Braun is fourth (8.1).

Cheevers resigns as coach GM Sinden takes B's over

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Gerry Cheevers resigned as coach of the Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League and was replaced by General Manager Harry Sinden, the Bruins announced Wednesday.

Cheevers stepped down as coach of the Bruins after 4 1/2 years, following a 16-year career as a goalkeeper with Boston in the NHL and Cleveland in the World Hockey Association.

The team's recent record was cited as a reason for the coaching change. It was tied for the NHL's best regular season record in 1983-84, but has struggled this season and lost three of its last four games.

The Bruins are in fourth place in the five-team Adams Division with a record of 25 wins, 24 losses and 7 ties.

The change was announced at a hastily-arranged news conference at a Los Angeles hotel. The Bruins issued a press release in which Sinden said he would take over the coaching for the remainder of the 1984-85 season, including Thursday night's game in Los Angeles against the Kings.

Minutemen swimmers prime for Atlantic 10 meet

Fuller and Donovan lead UM to UVW

By NANCY A. BUKAR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swim team is traveling today to Morgantown, West Virginia to compete in the Atlantic 10 Championships.

Coach Russ Yarworth and 11 members of the team plus two divers left yesterday morning to compete against Temple, Rutgers, Penn State, St. Joseph's, URI, Duquesne, George Washington, St. Bonaventure and West Virginia.

"I'd like to get third there. Penn State and Temple have good programs and they should finish ahead of us," Yarworth said.

The power team of backstroker Paul McDonough, breaststroker Mike Hoover, butterflyer Craig Fuller and freestyler Drew Donovan have a best time of 3:37.70 for the 400-yard medley relay. Tri-captain Paul McNeil will swim the 1,650-yard freestyle (that's 66 lengths of the pool).

In the 200-yard freestyle, Donovan, 1:44.80, Fuller, 1:45.90, Jim Flannery, 1:47.80 and McNeil, 1:52.00 are qualifiers. Hoover, 2:01.70 and possibly McDonough, 2:05.00, will swim the 200-yard individual medley and Tony Baker, 4:29.00, will swim the 400-yard individual medley.

There are four UMass entries in the 200-yard butterfly: Fuller, 1:55.30, tri-captain Chris Clarke, 2:01.00, senior Mike Minutoli, 2:00.40 and King, 2:01.80. Clarke, Minutoli and King will also swim the 100-yard butterfly.

Marc Surette and McDonough are entered in both the 100-yard and 200-yard backstroke. Hoover, 2:15.20, Fred Marius, 2:18.30, Baker, 2:17.30 and Clarke, 2:20.00 have qualified in the 200-yard breaststroke. Hoover, Marius and Baker will also swim the 100-yard breaststroke.

Fuller, Donovan, Flannery and McNeil will swim the 500-yard freestyle and Flannery, McDonough, Fuller and Donovan are entered in the 800-yard freestyle relay. Fuller, Donovan and two out of Flannery, Hoover and McDonough will swim the 400-yard freestyle relay. The best Minutemen time is 3:13.70.

Divers Pat Mullen and Keith Pisani are competing in both the one-meter and three-meter diving contests.

"They're swimming tired and sluggish right now," Yarworth said in an interview Tuesday afternoon, "but I expect them to do well."

Contracts worth over 14 million

Rice, Stanley sign with Sox; Boggs wins arbitration suit

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Red Sox have signed long-term contract extensions worth more than $14 million that make Jim Rice one of baseball's highest paid players and Bob Stanley at least the fourth highest paid relief pitcher.

The signings were announced Wednesday, the same day on which the club lost a salary arbitration case with third baseman Wade Boggs. Arbitrator Arvid Anderson awarded Boggs the $1 million he requested for 1985 rather than the $675,000 offered by the Red Sox.

The developments gave the American League team its first three players with salaries of more than $1 million per year and reportedly increased its payroll commitments by more than 15 million through 1989.

Rice, the slugging left fielder, and Stanley, Boston's best reliever, each had one year remaining on their contracts and could have become free agents after that. The new deals reportedly give Rice an additional $10 million and Stanley $4.4 million more for the four seasons after 1985. The club has an option on their services for 1990 which, if exercised, would increase the value of the deals.

"It's fair to say in Jim's case he's going to be among the top paid players" in baseball, his agent, George Kalafatas, said at a news conference. Rice, who signed Wednesday, said the contract put him among the top five highest paid players.

Rice, the 30-year-old three-time American League homerun champion and 1978 most valuable player, is coming off what he considered a subpar year when he batted .280 with 28 home runs and 122 RBI. Rice, who has a .303 career average with 304 homers and 1,076 RBI, earned $640,000 last season and reportedly received a signing bonus of more than $1 million in his new contract.

Stanley, 30, also had a below average season in 1984. He had a 9-10 record with a 3.54 earned run average and 22 saves. His 97 career saves are just seven less than Dick Radatz' team record.

University of Massachusetts football coach Bob Stull took the first step toward rebuilding the Minutemen's program yesterday, in a large, quick way.

Stull announced his first recruiting class: 22 players with the size and speed to put UMass back among the leaders of the Yankee Conference, as Stull promised when he took over last May.

"It's always hard to say how much of an impact a certain kid, or group of kids, will make until you see them play," Stull said. "But I like all of these players and several of them are legitimate Division I prospects. I really think they will help the team improve."

The class, which includes two junior college transfers and two prep-school players, is made up of six wide receivers, five running backs, three linebackers, two quarterbacks, two offensive linemen, two defensive linemen, one defensive back and one tight end.

"We looked for speed at receiver, good-sized linemen and for every position we wanted smart players and players that have good attitudes and leadership qualities," Stull said.

"We got some kids that schools like Penn State, Boston College and Pittsburgh were looking at. I can also say that of our primary list of players, we didn't lose any to the other Yankee Conference schools."

UMass, 3-8 last season, graduates its leading receiver in split end Bob Simeone and returns no player that caught more than ten passes. To fill the void left by Simeone's departure, six potential receivers were signed-up.

Brian Douglas (6-0, 185) from Rumson-Fair Haven high in New Jersey is a receiver/defensive back that was a team captain and all North Shore Conference Selection.

Tim Nye (6-4, 200) from Madison Hand High in Madison, Conn. was a star of the State Class M champions, was all-shorelinne and all-state.

Dan Rubinetti (6-1, 195) was a three year letterman in football and baseball, was all-metro, county and state in both sports and can play safety.

Lonny Brock (6-1, 190) from Nassau Community College on Long Island caught 38 passes and was an all-East Coast juco selection.

Raymond Lay is the last receiver, a 6-4, 180 pounder from Amityville, NY, he has great size and good speed and once long jumped 23-6 and triple jumped 45 feet.

At the other positions UMass signed—

Running Back: UM picked up graduating senior Todd Comeau's brother Drew (6-4, 213). Comeau was also all-shoreline out of North Branford High in Conn. He was heavily-recruited by professional baseball teams. He will fight for position at either back or linebacker. He also bench presses 400 pounds.

Clifton Mitchell (5-11, 175) was all-South Jersey out of Willingboro High. He averaged 6.5 yards-per-carry his senior season and was team captain. Mitchell was a member of the national champion sprint medley team and shuttle hurdles state

Minutemen face big test tonight

Battle St. Joe's for third

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts basketball team knows that three straight wins and an 11-10 records do not make for a season.

Coach Ron Gerlufsen, although pleased with the progress the team has made, wants more-much more.

"We have the potential to keep on winning, despite the competition getting tougher. We're in fourth place in the league and want to go higher," Gerlufsen said.

Tonight (8 p.m. WHMP) the Minutemen take on third place St. Josephs University in Philadelphia in one of their biggest games this season.

The Hawks, 8-4 in the A-10 and 12-8 overall, lost to UMass 89-80 in Springfield last month as Horace Neysmith scored 24 points and scoring-leader Donald Russell added 26.

UMass, at 7-5 in the conference and tied with George Washington for fourth, has won two straight games on the road and found the confidence they previously lacked to play before unfriendly crowds.

"It's a matter of each individual player getting his concentration up and then the whole team is together," Gerlufsen said. "We proved we could do that and we just have to keep on proving that. This is a big game for us."

The Hawks, coached by Jim Boyle, were a NIT participant last season behind the play of Tony Costner, Bob Lojewski and Maurice Martin, one of the final cuts from Bob Knight's Olympic team.

Lojewski, a player-of-the-week with Russell in the A-10 for his play in the past few games, and Martin return for St. Joe's and the Hawks will be looking for revenge for the loss.

"We don't really match up that well, but we don't with anybody," Gerlufsen said. "They're bigger than us and we have to play together and with intensity to beat them again.

The Minutemen have won seven-of-nine games after a two-of-10 streak and are solidly back in the A-10 race.

"We're finding a few respect us out there among teams, and I expect the same with St. Joe's," Gerlufsen said. "It comes with the territory."

Gerlufsen also mentioned the play of Women swimmers stomp Mount Holyoke, 88-52

By ERICA PEREL
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Women's Swim team finished their season with a strong victory over Mount Holyoke College, 88-52, with many of the swimmers qualifying to compete in the New England Championships in Springfield this Sunday.

Liz Feinberg put in a good showing in her last dual meet for the Minutewomen. Feinberg took first in all events she entered. She continued her undefeated pace in the 200-year freestyle, swimming a 1:57.72, while continuing on to break the school record in the 200 IM with a powerful 2:17.69.

"This is our final meet and everyone is really psyched. We are all looking forward to the New Englands. I am glad it's over, all the hard work, but I had a great time on the team," Feinberg said.

Taking first place for the Minutewomen were Julie Wilkins, Margaret Cameron, Maura Skelley, and Feinberg in the 200 medley relay with a time of 1:58.99. Nancy Stevens swam a strong race in the 1000 yard freestyle as she won it with a time of 11:47.15. Other winners were Cameron in the 100 breaststroke (1:14.97) and Feinberg in the 100 yeard freestyle (55.28)

The depth of the team helped to secure the victory against Mount Holyoke. Many of the swimmers took in second and third places to ensure the win.

"We have had a losing season, but this was a great meet to end with. We are looking forward to the New England Championships. This is the place where everyone is going to come through," co-captain Lori McCloskey said.

Just a few thought...

The debate still continues as to which college basketball conference is the best--the Big East or the ACC. The Big East has four clubs in the top twenty, with three in the top eight (#1 St. John's, #2 Georgetown, #8 Syracuse) and the ACC places three in the AP top 20...But if we go down team by team, the vote has to go to the ACC. Every one of their clubs has an overall record above .500 and they seem to play tougher teams outside of their conference than the Big East. St. John's plays(and loses to) Niagra and Colombia and Georgetown plays Central Florida. On the other side, North Carolina, Maryland, and NC State play the top clubs like Oklahoma, SMU, and Illinois...Notice that both conferences stay away from the Atlantic 10 as if it had an extremely social disease.

There is no doubt that the Big East is loaded with talent. After seeing the Villanova game, I can not only say that Chris Mullen will be a first-round draft choice but will also last quite a while in the NBA. He is perhaps the most intelligent and instinctive ball player to come across in a long time...Of course, Georgetown has the number one pick next year in Patrick Ewing and the best shooter from the baseline in a while in Bill Martin. Villanova has Dwaine McClain, who takes more shots than, gasp, John Hempel...Sorry to sound like Andy Rooney, but didja ever notice that when Ewing gives a high five, his fingers go in all different directions? Perhaps he's giving Physical Plant workers directions to their next job, because they are all over the place.

Well, the endorsements begin for Doug Flutie. His agent, Bob Wolff, is talking to Coke, Pepsi, Nike, and Hertz to have the newest star of the USFL on their commercials. Flutie could have a deal with Coke for one million over five years. I heard he'll take it only if Gerard Phelan stocks up the machines...

In other sports news: Pete Rose is already looking forward to the 1985 season. He is charting on a calendar exactly when he will break Ty Cobb's career hit record. I wonder if its the same date Cincinnatti gets buried in the cellar.

Finally, as is the case every week, a bit of Gay stance is endorsed

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts faculty senate voted unanimously yesterday to endorse the efforts of the undergraduate Student Government Association and the Chancellor in creating a "safe and civil" environment for gay, lesbian and bi-sexual members of the campus community.

People's Gay Alliance member David Carney addressed the senate and urged them to endorse the efforts.

"I think it's a real show of faith by the faculty to show their concern."
— PGA member David Carney

"We must end these manifestations of underlying fear," he said, referring to the posters and threats aimed at the gay community last semester.

Jay Savereid, chairman of the Civility Commission, said endorsing the efforts made by the SGA and the administration is the "counterpart to fighting anti-Semitism, racism, and sexism."

Carney said he was pleased with the vote. "It's incredible that they passed it unanimously," he said.

"I think it's a real show of faith by the faculty to show their concern," Carney said.

Provost Richard O'Brien announced the creation of a new administrative position which will be filled by present Associate Provost for Undergraduate Education, Fern L. Johnson. Johnson will become the Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs.

O'Brien said the new position will enable Johnson to work on campus-wide academic matters instead of dealing with individual undergraduate problems.

The senate also voted to change the name of the School of Engineering to the College of Engineering. The motion passed unanimously.

Board approves apartments

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Correspondent

The Amherst Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) voted last night 3-0 to accept a scaled down plan to put apartments in the building where the Village Inn, more commonly known as the Drake, is housed.

The ZBA offered developer D.H. Jones an opportunity to build 32 apartments in the Amity Street building. Jones had requested to build 38 units.

The board's offer to let Jones build the 32 units is on the condition Jones agrees to 17 conditions that the board would not elaborate on, board member Austin Sarat said, last night.

Jones, who is out of town on vacation, could not be reached for comment.

Last month, the board voted 2-1 to deny Jones the permit. However, the decision was not filed with the Town Clerk and, the case remained open.

Jones' attorney, Richard Howland, asked the board in late January to reconsider its vote. The plan he presented last night was a scaled-down version of the original.

New plans call for a $900,000 renovation which includes removing the current bars and restaurant and replacing them with 38 apartments. The original idea called for 44 units, but Howland said Jones lowered the number of units to meet ZBA's objections that too many people would be living in the new apartments.

There are currently 34 living units, three bars and a restaurant in the building.

"There are too many dwellings and no parking," said board member Harriet Shapiro of Jones' plan. "Those are two very big things.

If the permit is granted, Jones told the Springfield Union last month he hoped to buy the building from owner Bradford Parker in June and have it renovated by January 1, 1986.

In an interview prior to his presentation, Howland would not say what the next plan of action, if any, would be if the board denied the permit.

Related story pg.3

"I don't do 'what ifs," he said. Parker, who is out of town on vacation a Village Inn employee said, was not available for comment. Jones was also on vacation and unavailable for comment.

Howland said the new apartments would serve older students in town well.

"It's more than likely to be for graduate fellows or teaching assistants coming to Amherst for the first year," he said.

Jones' plan calls for 22 studio apartments, 13 one bedroom apartments, two two-bedroom apartments and one three-bedroom apartment. D.H. Jones property manager Donald Machon estimated the rent for a one-room apartment at $300 to $450 a month and about $500 a month for the two-bedroom apartment.

Howland told the board in January that the plan would only be scaled down to a point that would still be "economically feasible" for Jones. Last night, Howland told the board, that the new plan would still cover the cost of renovations.

"It has to meet the market," he said.

"I have to shoot at a dartboard," Howland said last night before his presentation the the ZBA. "If I'm lucky, I hit the bullseye."

Special report doesn't evoke faculty retort

By LESLEY CLARK and IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

Reference to the special report concerning the behavior of University administrators in the Yvette Henry arrest drew no response from faculty senators at yesterday's senate meeting.

Castellano Turner, chairman of the senate Committee on the Status of Minorities which examined the events surrounding Henry's arrest, said he was "shocked that not one faculty member raised a question," when he presented his committee's annual report.

Henry was arrested on Dec. 2, 1983 and charged with one of the Crampton dormitory fires.

The committee's annual report included a summary of the special report which concluded that Henry's civil rights were violated and her minority status affected the way in which she was treated.

"I'm surprised that a faculty member did not stand up and say, 'now that it's been published, I'd like to see it,'" Turner said.

The special report, which was obtained earlier this week by the Collegian, was never released publicly and no mention of its future release was made.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey told the faculty senate he could not comment either in person or in writing on the report or the Henry case because the attorneys defending the University had instructed him not to.

"It is according to the judgment of counsel, and I have reluctantly concurred, not to respond...until this legal matter is resolved," Duffey said. "This case is in litigation, and even the normal civil discourse of a campus is hindered."

Later, the chancellor said he anticipates that when the litigation is over, "the parties can participate in discussing some of the questions. I think that discussion can (then) take place in a freer atmosphere."

Dean of Students Robert N. Brooks said in a telephone interview that since he had not read the report, other than what was quoted in yesterday's Collegian, "I'm really reluctant to discuss a report that I haven't seen.

"I can't comment on what another committee should do with its report. That would be presumptuous," Brooks said when asked if he thought the rules committee should release the report.

Washington freed slaves in his will

By BETSY SCHEIDERS
Collegian Correspondent

George Washington, the first president of the United States, and one of the first people to give blacks some freedom during the late 1700s, will be honored Monday.

Although Washington did not fight for the emancipation of blacks, Washington did free the blacks that worked for him. Washington lived in Mount Vernon, VA., a self-sufficient city that required many slaves according to, The Black Men of George Washington.

He attacked slavery on sheer economic terms, said University of Massachusetts history professor Hugh Bell. Later Washington saw that slavery was morally wrong and decided to do what he could, in regard to his own slaves, Bell said.

"He intended to free his slaves," Bell said but there was a problem with his wife's slaves. "Under the terms of her first husband's will, she couldn't sell them." She had to keep them in her possession until her death. Washington also could not free his slaves without hers because they had intermarried and he did not want to break up the families, Bell said.

"He decided that all slaves were going to be freed at the time of her death," Bell said, "but they (the Washingtons) had to keep it secret to avoid an untimely death.

Once he decided to free them, he started a plan to help them all prepare to live on their own. In his will, he explained that when he and his wife died, the blacks would be freed and his fortune would go into helping them.

Cambodians overrun by Viets

KHAOSARAPEE, Thailand (AP) - Vietnamese troops and armor sweeping through the jungle behind a ferocious artillery barrage overran one Khmer Rouge stronghold yesterday and seized part of another in the western Cambodia mountains, Thai military officers reported.

The Thai border commander predicted the entire guerrilla complex would fall by Friday. A knowledgeable Soviet bloc diplomat said it may be the "turning point of the war" that broke out after Vietnam invaded Cambodia and ousted Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge regime in January 1979.

With guerrilla forward defense lines shattered by three days of withering artillery fire, 13,000 Vietnamese troops surged from the south and east in a pincer movement that overwhelmed the Khao Din stronghold and captured half the guerrilla headquarters at Phnom Malai, said Col. Chettha Thannajaro, deputy commander of the Eastern border Field Force.

The force commander said Vietnamese troops were within two miles of Phum Thmei, the communist Khmer Rouge showcase camp and reported operations center that Phnom Malai protected. Maj. Gen. Salya Sriphen said it could be over by Friday for the Khmer Rouge in the steaming, malarial enclave that juts like a tooth into Thailand.

Rape victim's testimony disputed

BOSTON (AP) — A defense contention that the victim in the Big Dan's Tavern rape case changed her testimony raised the prospect of a hearing to determine if the convicted men need a new trial.

Superior Court Judge William Young, who presided over the 1984 double trials in the case, has promised to decide today whether to grant the request for a hearing to present evidence on why a new trial is needed.

"There is a dispute as to some of the fine points as to who knew what, when," attorney David Waxler, who represents defendant Joseph Vieira, 28, argued Wednesday.

Waxler and the attorney for defendant Daniel Silva, 28, already have filed briefs requesting a new trial, but have asked for the hearing prior to a ruling on that request.

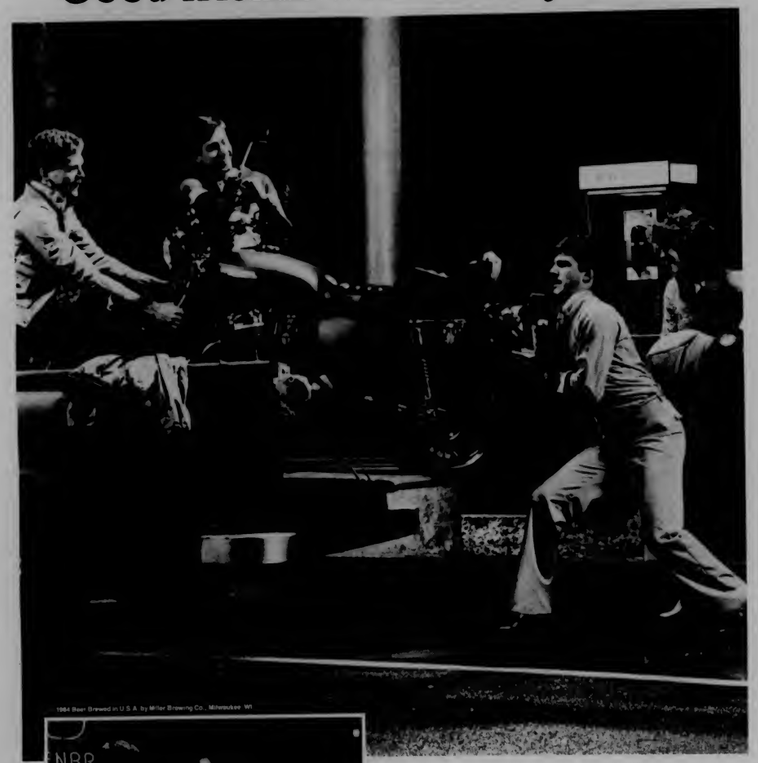
Good friends won't leave you flat.



The moon was up, the stars were out and—pfftt!—your rear tire was down. Good thing there was a phone nearby. And a few good friends who were willing to drive a dozen miles, on a Saturday night, to give you a lift. When you get back, you want to do more than just say "thanks." So tonight, let it be Löwenbräu.

Löwenbräu. Here's to good friends.

Severe cramps may result from eating sushi

CHICAGO (AP) — Sushi may be savory, but people who eat the raw fish are at risk of acquiring parasitic worms that can cause sharp abdominal pains, Japanese doctors say.

The worms have to be removed with forceps stuck down the patient's throat and esophagus into the stomach.

In 15 years, doctors in Japan treated 178 patients who had the roundworm infection resulting from eating uncooked fish. The patients had abdominal pains within 12 hours after eating, and many suffered nausea and vomiting.

But this condition is rare in the United States despite the increasing popularity of sushi, said Dr. Robert Fontaine of the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Smith student enters pageant to aid Ethiopia

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — A Smith College debutante says she plans to compete in the Miss Massachusetts beauty pageant with the aim of publicizing a foundation she established to aid developing countries.

Bridget G. Marks, an 18-year-old senior who skipped several grades, says she thinks "the pageant industry will welcome me with open arms."

But Myron Wasserman, the business agent for the Miss Massachusetts USA pageant which will be held March 1-3 in Worcester, is not so sure. He said yesterday that he had never heard of anybody entering the pageant for such a reason.

"I don't see where she is going to have much of an opportunity to present this to the general audience. The pageant is not going to be a forum for any individual foundations," Wasserman said.

Miss Marks, who will graduate from Smith in June, said she founded the nonprofit World Energy Foundation in 1981 when she was a student at Simon's Rock of Bard College for gifted children. The goal of the foundation is to help Third World countries such as Ethiopia develop technology to aid in food production.

SGA nominations are made available

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

Nomination papers for major Student Government Association offices were made available yesterday, and four presidential candidacies were announced.

Stacey Roth and Daniel Burgess, Rodman Snelling and Bill Pyne, and Neil McCabe and Joel Rabinowitz have signed out papers as co-candidates. Bill Collins has signed out forms as a solo candidate. All papers must be returned with 250 student signatures by March 1 to establish a candidacy.

The elections for president, the Campus Center Board of Governors, the University Residential Committee and open senate positions will be held March 11 and 12, Governmental Affairs Committee chairman Craig McDermott said.

Nobody has yet signed out nomination forms for the BOG or Residential Committee seats.

Presidential candidacies appeared to be slow starting. "We really haven't had time to make any statements," Rabinowitz said yesterday.

The only other candidate available for comment was Collins.

"Someone has to make this election fun," he said. "I guess I'm the one to do it."

Band tries to save Drake

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Correspondent

A new Registered Student Organization, the University of Massachusetts Blues Band, will try to become an Amherst institution while also striving to preserve a local landmark, the Village Inn.

The Village Inn is an Amity Street hotel and bar that has been patronized for years by UMass students. D.H. Jones, an Amherst realtor, has proposed that the town convert the facility into apartments. See related story, page 1.

The band formed last fall and was recognized by the Student Activities Office. It is billed as the headline act in Willy's Rathskeller, the downstairs part of the Village Inn, also known as the Drake.

Jack Bresnahan, the group's spokesman, said the band has only six members now, but he welcomes as many musicians as will come.

"We want to enlarge the band, and maybe form a couple of groups," he said.

"The people the band wants are the type who will make a commitment to play and stay in the group," he said.

"Just getting the band as big as possible, with as many people as we can get," is what Bresnahan said is the support the band will offer the Drake. "We hope to get some good crowds."

"The Drake has become a traditional part of the UMass learning experience and the UMass Blues Band is intent on having that tradition carried on," Bresnahan said.

When the band formed last fall, members encountered some problems. Bresnahan said the first time they practiced in Mahar, without permission, the University police threw them out.

"After a lot of leg work and paper work," Bresnahan said, the band became a Registered Student Organization and got permission to practice in the auditorium.

The band plays various blues styles, including Chicago and Texas based rhythms.

Bresnahan said anyone with an instrument, some talent, and an interest in the blues is welcome to come to the Mahar practice sessions, Saturdays at 2:30 p.m..

Businessmen buy the hanger

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

Hangar One, the former nightclub on Route Nine in Hadley has been purchased by a group of area businessmen for $350,000 but they have not decided what they will do with it.

"We've bought more acreage than building," Paul Barrett, one of the new owners, said. "The building has very little use."

Barrett said that the buidling itself, which was closed in November 1983, may be added onto or eliminated. The land will not be used for a nightclub or shopping center, Barrett said.

In August, a foreclosure sale was held and about $10,000 of furnishings were sold with the money going to the club's creditors, according to the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

At that time, according to the Gazette, the building and property had been assessed at $478,000 by the town. The club also owed the town about $16,000 in unpaid property taxes.

The new owner's group also owns the Howard Johnson's Motor Lodge next to the restaurant as a franchise.

According to the Gazette, the club had been run for about 30 years by Henry Kurzydlowski of Hadley. In the 1950s and 1960s as many as 600 people would fill the club and dance to polka bands on weekends.

The new owners are: Paul J. Barrett of Hadley, Edward J. O'Leary of Holyoke, Frederick J. Sirad of Springfied, Raymond M. Vicunas of Longmeadow and Robert L. Shumway of Amherst.

BOG task force works to inform

By VICKI A. SPAGNOLI
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors released plans for a special task force that will inform students to prevent the administration's proposed elimination of the BOG, last night at its weekly meeting. The board also appointed four new members to the BOG coordinator staff.

The UMass administration voted Dec. 21 to eliminate the all-student BOG and replace it with a 16 member Auxiliary Services Board that would include students, faculty, and administration.

The BOG special task force will have an information table set up on the CC concourse next week. BOG members will "inform students of the current situation the board is in, and show students ways for them to get involved by joining the board." BOG chairwoman Jane Donohue said.

The BOG staff appointments made were Beth Miller as Public Relations coordinator, John Hayes as Governors Program Council coordinator, Jodi Lis as University Store coordinator, and Ginger Lavoie as Food Service coordinator.

"The coordinating staff of the board is vital to the structure of the board because without the coordinators, issues within the Campus Center are not being researched thoroughly," Donohue said.

Sixty-five students applied for the four coordinator positions open on the BOG staff.

Woman with cocaine arrested

A 21-year-old Amherst woman was arrested Wednesday afternoon on a warrant for five attempts to pass bad checks, University of Massachusetts police said.

Cocaine was found in her possession during a search made after her arrest. Belchertown police arrested the woman on a warrant held by campus police.

Other police reports included:

A Field dormitory resident, 20, was arrested Wednesday night on a warrant for failing to pay $50 for court costs. He was previously brought to court by Amherst police for transporting alcohol as a minor.

A 19-year-old UMass student was arrested Wednesday afternoon for carrying alcohol as a minor. Campus police arrested the woman in parking lot 22.

Campus police also arrested a 19-year-old UMass employee on a warrant for speeding issued by Northampton District Court. He was stopped for speeding on North Pleasant Street Wednesday night.

A $75 cashier's check was stolen from an unlocked room on the 22nd floor of the Washington tower. The theft was reported to have taken place during a fire alarm Tuesday night.

Breakfast honors Dr. King

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

A breakfast commemorating Dr. Martin Luther King will be held at 9 a.m. tomorrow at the Amherst Regional High School.

The theme of the breakfast is "Peacemaking: Keeping the Dream Alive." Amherst representative James Collins will be the master of ceremony and Dr. Cheryl Townsend Gilkes, assistant professor of sociology at Boston University, will be the keynote speaker.

"The purpose of the breakfast is to try to bring the community together and recognize the people who have kept the dream alive," said Judy Brooks, co-chairperson of the breakfast.

Dr. King was a charismatic leader committed to non-violence, direct action in an effort to obtain human rights for Blacks during the Civil Rights Movement of the 1960s.

Although Dr. King's birthday is in January, the commerative breakfast is being held in February in honor of Black History Month. It will also give all of the community a chance to participate, she said.

Dr. King's beliefs are very relevant to the struggles that Blacks face in the 1980's, she said. "All his dreams were his future aspirations. Just because you kill the dreamer, that doesn't kill the dream. It is humanitarian to teach kids right from wrong," Brooks said.

Brooks believes Dr. King plays an important role in the lives of young Blacks today. His dream teaches them to "respect themselves, not give up on their dreams, and continue to fight for their rights," she said.

If he had lived, Blacks might not be in the situation that they are in today. These are some things that he would have been unable to change. However, he would have been a strong advocate against violence, she said.

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. should be remembered for "the dynamics which he brought to his speeches and people should set their goal by his dream," she said.

Brooks said donations from this year's breakfast will be given to A Better Chance (ABC) house because "they encourage minorities to further their education."

The proceeds from next year's breakfast will be used to set up a scholarship fund so that minorities can continue to further their education, she said.

UMass literature professor tests The Orwell Mystique

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Correspondent

In her book, The Orwell Mystique, University of Massachusetts professor, Daphne Patai examines the many conflicts in George Orwell's thoughts and concludes that his "obsession with masculinity" has led to a misrepresentation and degradation of women in his work.

Patai, UMass professor of Brazilian literature in the Spanish and Portuguese department, is also a teacher of comparative literature. Patai said she found it important to examine the gender ideology in Orwell's writing in particular because "other writers have not been elevated to the level of moral exemplar as Orwell has," she said.

Orwell's popularity and worldwide acceptance as an author writing "in the name of social justice," Patai said, is due to his adamant anti-communism and failure to question "the power imbalance between men and women in society."

"There were other writers at the time who made feminist arguments important; who saw class and gender as interrelated issues; who saw you couldn't attack one without attacking the other; their work somehow disappeared" she said.

Patai pointed to a passage in 1984 where the main character, Winston Smith, fantasizes about Julia, the woman with whom he will later become involved. "We have been taught to ignore that, brush it away as if it were unimportant," Patai said.

In The Road to Wigan Pier, an account of the conditions of unemployment in England in the 1930's, Patai feels Orwell's focus makes evident his obsession with masculinity.

Patai described the book as containing "a lyrical, almost erotic, portrayal of very masculine coal workers," a portrayal which Patai believes contradicts reality. For most lower-class men at the time were working in factories, but Orwell ignored this because he did not perceive of their work as "masculine."

In Wigan Pier, Patai said Orwell was completely unaware of the "serious condition of women at the time who were at the very bottom of all the classes." She added, "His obsession with the masculinity of men was matched by his either ignoring or degrading women in his work."

According to Patai, Orwell also reinforces misconceptions about males through the brutality he depicts in Nineteen Eighty-Four. "Rather than questioning male power and seeing it as socially constructed, he backs away from that and calls it human nature" she said.

Debate team ranked among top 16

By MICHELLE GOODWIN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts debate team is having its best season ever, its advisor said this week. UMass is currently ranked among the top 16 teams in the nation.

"The team has had its most successful all-around season since its beginnings 16 years ago," debate director Star Muir said.

Muir, a professor of communications studies, said the team was a "strong regional power up until the past few years but now has emerged as a national power and will prove so at the National debate competitions on March 28."

"Debate is a direct and competitive activity that clashes intelligence between individuals much more so than any other team activity," Muir said. He stressed that debate trains a person to discuss and organize thoughts in any circumstance before presenting them persuasively.

The 25-member debate team ranges from highly ranked first-year students to senior novices, all working to increase their skills as well as the team's.

This year's top team debators are first-year student Mark Friedman and junior anthropology/zoology major Danny Povinelli. Povinelli, a veteran debater from Louisiana, achieved top speaker status this past weekend at the Chicago elimination round, as he argued against the country's leading college speakers.

Fourth of students in gym courses

By CHRIS MARAK
Collegian Correspondent

Nearly one quarter of all undergraduate students at the University of Massachusetts preregistered for one credit physical education classes this semester.

Five thousand, five hundred and six students preregistered for 51 courses with 150 sections, Russ Kidd, assistant to the director of general physical education said. But he added that the oversubscribed courses left about 1,400 students without a gym class.

"We're over and above our capacity," he said. "But we go over and above our capacity in almost all the classes except racquetball that can't be overcrowded because of facilities."

Kidd said the department tries to permit as many students in gym classes as possible. "Extra instructors come in and they even use the hallways for certain classes," he said.

"We just don't have the facilities. We use every room possible," he said.

The most popular gym class this semester is slimnastics. This class has 17 sections alone and many of the classes were oversubscribed.

Letters to the Editor—

Demanding an apology

An injustice has been committed. Not just against the Greek area. Not just against women, not just against fraternity members, but against those who advocate fair and equal treatment for all members of society. And especially against those who expect credible, responsible editorial comment from a major college newspaper.

I am referring, of course, to the obscene and distasteful cartoon that disgraced the pages of you "respected" editorial section on Tuesday. This cartoon represents not only the misguided views of the cartoonist himself but also the consensus of the Collegian Board of Editors. Without their tacit approval, such a Neanderthal viewpoint would never have appeared in the paper at all. Is it the opinion of the editorial staff that fraternity men practice sodomy in their spare time? If so, please have the dignity to say so openly in your paper, rather than make vague implications on the pretext of crude comic relief.

If this were an isolated incident, it could be dismissed as simple stupidity on the part of the editorial staff. But it's more than that. For years the Greek system has strived to make this University a better place for all, organizing fundraising events for various charities, blood drives, and sponsoring alcohol education seminars. Collegian policy has consistently been to ignore the positive aspects of Greek living and dramatize instead the isolated negative items which occur, in addition to encouraging unfair and slanderous acts such as Tuesday's atrocity. Must the Greek system be subjected to immature manifestations of sensationalist editors at the time when we are conducting our major non-alcoholic rush period of the year?

We demand a retraction, and an accompanying apology. Not in some forgotten corner of the Collegian, but in the same space, on the same page, that the original injustice occurred. The UMass community in general, and the Greek area in particular, deserve nothing less. Finally, the Greek area welcomes any constructive meeting between our two organizations to prevent similar misunderstandings in the future.

Talking about 'Star Wars'

Matthew Benedict

Galileo, Oppenheimer, and Weinberger were in the Hatch yesterday having a few beers and discussing the theory of "Star Wars."

"I don't understand this 'Star Wars' thing," Galileo remarked. "Are you going to make war with the stars?"

"No, no," Weinberger responded. "'Star Wars' is a name given by non-military and non-cabinet people to a defensive weapon system."

"Defensive system. Bah!" Oppenheimer retorted. "Anything dealing with nuclear weapons is offensive."

"No it isn't," Weinberger replied. "It is going to protect us from incoming nuclear weapons launched by hostile Russian enemies."

"But what do stars have to do with 'defensive weapons'?" Galileo asked.

"I'll tell you," Oppenheimer began. "The people who developed and proliferated nuclear weapons never thought of using them. Now the U.S. wishes to build a gun in space to destroy incoming missiles."

"But in space?" Galileo asked. "How can a gun be in space?"

"It would be placed on a huge platform," Weinberger answered, "that would circle the Earth in a protective orbit of the U.S."

"But you see," Oppenheimer interrupted, "there are a few problems with the idea. Firstly, missiles don't fly in space."

"So the missiles would be shot at, destroyed, and disintegrate into scraps of metal somewhere in the sky?" Galileo asked.

"Exactly," Weinberger responded.

"Not quite," Oppenheimer continued. "Secondly, what people fail to realize is the destroyed missile does not fall to Earth like the wreckage of a plane in a John Wayne war movie. Rather, the warhead is detonated also, spreading radiation into the atmosphere."

"That's a lie!" Weinberger shouted.

"And lastly," Oppenheimer concluded, "there would be more than one missile shot down. Consequently, more radiation spread."

The three sat silent for some time. Weinberger and Oppenheimer were staring at one another, while Galileo was musing into his beer. He looked up and asked Weinberger, "How can your government do this?"

"It is not as Oppenheimer says," Weinberger responded.

"Well, you explain it to me," Galileo demanded.

Weinberger cautiously spoke: "We need to protect this great land of ours, and move ahead of the Russians in all areas — Arts, Sciences, Business. Especially the Military, offensively and defensively."

"But do you wish to jeopardize the world also?" Oppenheimer asked.

"It is this way," Weinberger explained. "We will need to buy time so we can send our missiles. This weapon would buy us that time."

"Time for what, to destroy the human race?" Oppenheimer asked.

Weinberger did not answer. Galileo spoke: "Tell me, Weinberger, how can you use this gun? Explain to me the plans, the logistics."

"Well you see," Weinberger stammered, "we're still only debating the idea in public and in Congress. But research will begin..."

"What?" Galileo interrupted. "You have not begun research and you are already using it to defend and attack? That's absurd!"

"Grotesque is more like it," Oppenheimer chuckled.

"But we're sure," Weinberger weakly explained, "it will work and be more accurate than anything the Russians have or will have."

"I don't want to hear anymore arrogance," Galileo angrily replied. "You tell me of placing guns in my heavens to shoot down missiles which poison the Earth. You are poisoned Weinberger. I dread the day you or anyone has to use warheads and space guns."

Galileo angrily exited the Hatch. Oppenheimer watched Weinberger for some time and finally asked, "Don't you think of consequences?"

"No," Weinberger vacantly replied while staring into spaced. "Only defense. And the best defense is an overwhelming offense."

Hoping the trend continues

Bob Brigham

On Monday night February 4th, Consenting Adult, a movie about a young gay man coming out to his family, was broadcast on the ABC television network.

On this night in 1985, the media validated a part of the human experience that's been around as long as people have. Personally, I was empowered by being able to relate to a media character who was like myself in such a basic, integral way. I remember well my frantic searches for that validation during middle and high schools. I'd pore over newspapers and check out TV listings for anything that said gay, lesbian, or homosexual. I'd flip through magazine advertisements of happy heterosexual couples smoking chic cigarettes, drinking fashionable wines, and vacationing at trendy resorts. Rewards came occasionally; I'd hear about a homosexual child molester, or some rapist/murderer who was homosexual. The toll this invisibility and negative imagery took on my self-esteem and confidence was tremendous. Neither did I dare to check out a library book and have it on file somewhere that I was reading on the subject of homosexuality, much less face the librarian at the desk. My internalized oppression was so complete that I did not even have the courage to read secretively in the library itself. I imagine these feelings were a magnified version of what some heterosexual people might go through if they find themselves doing research on gay and lesbian issues for a class or for personal reasons. My hope is that the show Consenting Adult is indicative of a trend toward shows that explore human lives and human feelings instead of ones that reiterate outdated, inaccurate dogma and stereotypes.

The subject of homosexuality was given a dignified forum, but there is something more. The network, in order to make this movie as palatable as possible to the public, constructed the story and especially the central character in a certain way. It is significant that Jeff was male, white, wealthy, young, attractive, and not religiously inclined. In their search for the most innocuous gay character they could find, the network also identified the qualities that are most valued in our society.

On the one hand, the character's makeup could be interpreted as a statement that, "Homosexuality cuts across all demographic boundaries," which is true. However, the logical conclusion to this statement is, "...even into the white, male, wealthy, young group." The show did not speak to lesbians, to people of color, to people of middle and low incomes, to older gay men and lesbians, or to religious homosexuals. No single show could. It is crucial to look at the group that this groundbreaking movie aimed itself at, though, and ask, "Why? Why them first, again?"

Yes, I am pleased a part of my story was treated sensitively and broadcast on national TV. I'm not so sure, though, that I want to see cute, white, young gay male couples vacationing at trendy resorts in magazine ads. Isn't there more?

Sloganeering deemed 'intellectually empty'

Has rational thinking gone out of style? Has thinking gone out of style? Or am I the only one who is constantly perplexed by the seeming lack of this virtue in so many of the diatribes coming from those around this campus who seem to have been singularly blessed with the gifts of social responsibility and altruistic nobleness (not to mention an exclusive domain over truth and justice)?

Oh, you know who I mean. When was the last time you read something here on this page (or scrawled on the walls of Herter Hall or the Campus Center, for that matter), that left you shaking your head in bemused wonderment at the dreary, dull, defeatist dribble which has for so long on this campus passed itself off for progressive thinking? There is nothing noble nor progressive about surrendering to the intellectually empty practice (or is it an art?) of sloganeering.

What these wimpy artisans of the typewriter and spray-can have to offer is very simply non-thinking rubbish. "U.S. for us, Nicaragua for the Nicaraguans" is about the single most useless contribution to the current debate surrounding U.S. policy options in that part of the world that I have seen to date. Add to such a mentality the cry-baby whining over the supposed social indifference of the so-called "yuppies" (weren't they the "establishment" in the '60s and '70s?), and accusations of "betrayal", and you should get a pretty good picture of how much our liberal activists here are concerned with working toward solving our nation's problems, and how much they are preoccupied with exacerbating them with non-thinking cliche.

I have a sense of social responsibility, but one that does not include running around like Chicken Little with a spray-can. I am realistic about our nation's and our world's problems, and I despair. It is easy to be a pathetic, human bumper-sticker; it is something else entirely to be realistic, and to channel that realism into reasonable ideas and meaningful action.

Lincoln's motives in doubt

Little did I suspect that brief, seemingly innocuous remarks uttered over the telephone to a Collegian reporter, and printed in Tuesday's issue, would be turned into a phantom "debate" with distinguished historian Stephen Oates. In reference to Abraham Lincoln and the Emancipation Proclamation, I was responding to the "popular conception" that Lincoln "freed the slaves," implying, first, that all slaves came under the Proclamation's purview; second, that the Proclamation itself actually freed slaves; and last, that the "freeing" arose from purely humanitarian motives. Such oversimplification must always be balanced with at least certain basic "facts," if you will, of (1) the process of self-emancipation that slaves had engaged upon, especially those within distance of advancing union armies; (2) emancipation applying not to all slave states, but only to those in rebellion; (3) Lincoln's relatively benign racist views concerning blacks, apparently never repudiated; and (4) his advocacy of colonization for blacks once emancipation was accomplished. The last two points fully illustrate that it was possible for one to be morally opposed to slavery while at the same time opposing those who were enslaved. This does not, however, deny the "fact" that Lincoln never wavered in his desire to see slavery abolished.

I never said that "Lincoln was a lifelong supporter of colonization." While it is true that following the Proclamation, "he never again mentioned colonization in public," yet another distinguished historian James M. McPherson, refutes Professor Oates' contention that Lincoln, "abandoned colonization" after the document was issued, if by that phrase Oates means immediate abandonment. On December 31, 1862, according to McPherson, one day prior to the formal issuing of the Proclamation, Lincoln signed a contract to have some 500 blacks transported to a small island off Haiti. The deal fell through, and the President then authorized yet another contract which resulted in 453 blacks being sent to that same island in May, 1863, a full four months later. The venture failed. Lincoln eventually concluded, it is true, "that blacks and whites in this country must somehow learn to live together." But the real question is whether he willingly embraced this conclusion from high moral ground, or was pushed. Lincoln's "growth" regarding this question was stimualted more by the prohibitive cost of transporting former slaves outside the U.S., as well as vocal black opposition to the venture, rather than any significant moral principle.

Both Oates and I fervently agree that Lincoln was morally opposed to slavery, and that the issuing of the Proclamation was both a highly moral as well as military act. We disagree as to which aspect was the more important at the time, he taking the former and I the latter. Where Oates sees Lincoln's "growth" in certain circumstances, I see pragmatic resignation. However, from the highest reaches of scholarly interpretation and ideological truce I will allow Stephen B. Oates his heroes, if he will allow me mine. But do understand that far more convincing "facts" will have to surface in regard to any inferred positive attitudes on the part of "Massa Linkum" towards blacks, prior to his being permitted entry to my own pantheon of immortals.

Things must be pretty bad when the only valentine you get is from your grandmother's dog. I'd just love to pluck that rotten Cupid's wings off his wretched body; the damn ninny.

Well, enough rambling. Finally, the Oscar nominations are out. This year it seems to be a pretty close race between Amadeus, The Killing Fields, and Places in the Heart. A couple of real surprises showed up in the best actor and actress categories. The superb Vanessa Redgrave who is often ignored because of her politics was recognized for her performance in The Bostonians. Also, the affable Jeff Bridges got a best actor nomination for Starman. Geraldine Page and Peggy Ashcroft both stand an equal chance of winning the best supporting actress, and John Malkovich will most certainly bag best supporting actor for Places in the Heart. The Academy also managed to satisfy their guilty conscience by giving a couple of nominations to A Soldier's Story and best supporting actor nominations to Haing Ngor and Noriyuki Morita, as if to say, "Yeah kids, we might be rich and snobby, but we care about them minorities and the people who are saving the farms." Sure, sure.

Last week, I decided to fight the winter chills and went to the mall for a sneak preview of The Breakfast Club. Frankly, I was expecting much more. I had seen the trailers and with names like Ally Sheedy, Emilio Estevez and Molly Ringwald, I thought we could have a good production. John Hughes who did Sixteen Candles loves to make movies about teenagers because they sell. He seems to have a pretty good idea of what it's like to be a kid. However, the plot, which concerns five students who have to spend a Saturday at school for disciplinary reasons is far from realistic and stinks of melodrama. Molly Ringwald, America's latest sweetheart, is beginning to get on my nerves. Ally Sheedy on the other hand is the greatest discovery since sliced bread. The young actors, especially the nerdy Anthony Michael Hall make the film worth seeing. A lot of one-liners had my friend Ed laughing his weird laugh all throughout the film. My apologies to the people in the audience. I have a feeling The Breakfast Club is going to please a lot of high school kids. I guess I'm just getting old.

WEEKEND WINNER: This is your weekend if you like Harrison Ford. Two excellent choices; either the visually arresting Blade Runner with one of the classiest futuristic sets plus the screen debut of goddess Daryl Hannah or Pete Weir's Witness which promises to be another classic from the Australian master. The first is at the Amherst Cinema, the latter at the Mt. Farm Cinema.

TRIVIA QUESTION: The beautiful Nora Migliaccio won the prize last week; Jim Hutton, Tim's father was Ellery Queen on the small screen. Thanks a million to the runners up, Nancy Bukar and David Green.

This week's question is on the valentinesy side. All I need is the name of three films about young kids in love. Priority will be given if Diane Lane is in one of them. The first to drop the answers in my mailbox at the Collegian (with name and time of day) will win glossy pictures from the new Twentieth Century Fox release, Mischief.

ROYAL APOLOGIES: To Professor Whitehead for misspelling F. Murray Abraham's name as F. Murray Smith. (Gulp!) Accidents do happen especially when you are an alien.

STUDENT DANCE CONCERT
Wednesday, February 13
Bowker Auditorium
By ANNE D. CHENEY
Collegian Correspondent

On Wednesday, February 13, the UMass Student Dance Concert held its final rehearsal before opening to the public on February 14, 15, and 16 at Bowker Auditorium (8 p.m.). There are nine works in the concert, all choreographed and danced by undergraduate majors in the University Dance Department. The concert consists of three jazz dances and six modern pieces. Some of the modern pieces have strong jazz influences as well.

The concert starts off with Patti Grant's 60 Proof, a rollicking tribute to collegiate beer drinking. This loose-jointed jazzy number has five women in it. All of them appear to be having a good ol' time. The next dance, Pam Heffler's From One Came Two, is a driving modern duet for two women, full of fluid lines but never lacking in strength and energy. Wendy Wood's Finding One's Own is a modern piece with undercurrents of African rhythms that give the piece a jazzy feel. No Place For Me, choreographed by Sheryl Bruneau, is a contemporary dance about three crazy women. It is set in a madhouse and danced to a combination of recorded narrative and music.

In the second half of the program, Gary Lussier's Eye Catch proivides an upbeat view of fashion modelling, ranging in its three sections from haute couture to lingerie to jeans. Dottie Earle's Esperance uses an ABA form, opening and closing the piece with an effective canon employing five dancers; the B section focuses on a pas de deux. In Life After Life Afta... Mary Malloy provides a view of the afterlife in which the dance goes on, with nothing more traumatic, finally, than a change from red tunics to white ones. The final dance in the concert is Phoebe Farber's By Chance, a lively jazz piece for two men and three women. In its energy and high spirits, it provides a fitting conclusion to an evening of youthful enthusiasm that fights the winter blahs with sound and movement.

Roches "sweet"

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

The Roches show at Mount Holyoke Tuesday night was really good. It may be cliche to say so but it was. Playing some of that folk/vaudeville music for about an hour and a half the three women from deepest New Jersey entranced the crowd with songs from their first three albums and a few from their next album, Another World.

Opening with an a cappella version of Cole Porter's "It's Bad for Me," the Roches played a show that, while it was similar to that which they played last year at the Calvin Theatre, could hardly be called stale. OK, so some of the jokes were the same. Even so, they maintained a really good rapport with the audience. No one seemed bored. Or, as Suzzy said, "If you're having a crummy time, at least it can't get worse."

Most of the songs sounded as they did on the album, but they were fuller. The covers they played were really fascinating. They played a really great version of Bob Dylan's "Clothesline Saga" slow and laid back, in three part harmony. They ended the concert with "Listen to the Rhythm of the Falling Rain" middling it with "Come Softly to me."

The whole show was engaging. They played some of their best liked old songs: "The Train", "Hammond Song", and "Want Not." "The Troubles" ended for about two minutes in a rambling round of "Boyfriend, Ocean, Ireland" which wandered and wafted like (believe it or not) the Grateful Dead. For the encores they played "Another World", "Pretty and High", and finally perhaps one of the wittiest songs of all "The Ballad of Suzzy Roche," which tells the story of a woman who gets fed up with Suzzy in a laundry mat.

"Another World", the title song from the new album, is really funny. It's about how mediocre our lives are here on earth. Most of the other new songs were about the usuals, growing up and love.

Hawks. UMass defeated Northeastern 55-53 on Tuesday and have taken four of its last six games.

The Minutewomen have been led by junior guard Barbara Hebel's 11.7 points-per-game and Sue Burtoft's 6.3 rebounds-per-game.

Both of those players along with freshman Taara Lewis (seven ppg) were instrumental in the win over the Huskies.

In other UMass action, a busy slate sees six other teams in action over the weekend.

The men's swim team is already in Morgantown, West Virginia at the Atlantic 10 swimming championships. Craig Fuller and Drew Donavan have the best hopes for a Minuteman title.

The UMass tracks teams, both the men and women, have their final dual meet of the season at Dartmouth on Saturday at 1 p.m.

Both teams are looking towards the upcoming Eastern Championships in early March. Both men's coach Ken O'Brien and women's mentor Kalekeni Banda hope to qualify more athletes for those meets against the Big Green.

The UMass ski teams, which were recently invited to the NCAA regionals in Vermont, face rival Amherst College at the Berkshire East slopes on Saturday and Sunday. Both the men and women lead their respective conferences.

Finally, the UMass gymnastics teams are also in action. The men, 5-3, face MIT in Cambridge on Saturday at 2 p.m. and the women, 5-7, are at New Hampshire on Sunday at 1 p.m.

Syracuse transfer to UMass?

George Papadakos, a 6'11", 215 pound center that quit Syracuse University may be on his way to the University of Massachusetts.

The Ontario, Canada product was dissatisfied with his playing time at Syracuse and sources say that UMass is one of the schools he is interested in.

— PETER ABRAHAM

Also in the winning column is the UMass basketball team, despite what may happen in the next few games, the Minutemen proved they are back.

Fourth place in the league, according to pre-season polls wasn't supposed to happen. But it is, and with the recruits signed it will continue to happen. Gerlufsen, who took over chaos when Tom McLoughlin resigned two years ago, has turned the program around. From 9-20 to 12-17 was a step and the present hovering around .500 is another step in the right direction.

The committment is there. The upcoming seasons are promising. The next time your buddies from Michigan or Pitt tell you about beating Notre Dame or something, come back with how we swept St. Bonaventure in hoop, or how our football recruits chose UMass over Arizona and BC. You don't have to make any more excuses.

Fall to 12-12

St. Joe's hangs on, 66-54

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA- St. Joseph's University hit 12-of-16 foul shots in the final 1:23 to hand the University of Massachusetts a 66-54 Atlantic 10 loss last night.

The Minutemen, 12-12 and 7-6 in the Atlantic 10, remained in fourth place in the conference as George Washington, also 7-6, was upset by Penn State 70-67. UMass plays GW on Saturday at the Springfield Civic Center.

For UMass, which had its three-game win streak snapped, Donald Russell had 16 points and moved to within 17 of the all-time UM mark held by Mike Pyatt with 1,503 points.

Horace Neysmith had 15 points before fouling out late in the game, Carl Smith added 11. St. Joe's, 9-6 in the league, was led by Bob Lojewski's 20 and Maurice Martin with 19.

UMass squandered a six point lead, 14-8, in the early going to fall behind 29-23 at halftime. The Minutemen shot but 35 percent in the first half at seven-of-20 and were outrebounded 18-11.

St. Joe's got up by as much as ten, 37-27, with 15:12 in the game before UM chipped away to come within four, 58-54 on Darryl Carter's jumper.

Martin then seemingly traveled after being trapped on the sideline by Russell. A foul was called on the UM co-captain instead and UM coach Ron Gerlufsen exploded, drawing two technicals and getting thrown out his first game as a college coach.

Martin hit both of the foul shots before Geoff Arnold made two of the four technical foul shots to put the game away.

The Hawks scored 12 of their last 14 points from the line as UMass went fouled in an attempt to cut the deficit.

UMass was 20-of-26 from the line in the game, St. Joe's went 21-of-28. The Hawks avenged an earlier 89-80 loss to the Minutemen.

Minuteman point guard Carl Smith, shown in action against Rutgers earlier this season, had 11 points as UMass dropped a 66-54 decision to St. Joseph's in Philadelphia last night. UMass faces George Washington on Saturday in Springfield.

Football inks two more, 25 now in

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts football coach Bob Stull filled out his first recruiting class with late signings yesterday of another wide receiver and an outside linebacker.

Jay Dowdy (6-0, 182) is the seventh wide receiver to accept a scholarship from UMass. A two sport (baseball) letterman at Seton Hall Prep in Irvington, N.J., Dowdy returned three kickoffs for touchdowns last season and led his team in receptions for two seasons. He is also a possible candidate at cornerback.

Jefferey Huff (6-3, 217) is the fifth linebacking prospect to agree to attend UMass and like the others, he has the size Stull was looking for.

He was a first team pick in the Big Eleven, one of Pennsylvania's best high school conferences. He also played basketball at North Pocono High in Moscow, Penn..

Also signed previously were a pair of big defensive linemen. Dimitri Yavis (6-6,250) from Albany Academy in New York has tremendous size and ability, he was all-state and all-league and a two year captain of football, basketball and baseball. He will also play baseball at UMass as a righthanded pitcher with a major-league fastball.

Dan Charron (6-5, 253) is a monster from Mount Saint Joseph's High in Rutland, Vermont. He was first team all-state, southern Vermont defensive lineman of the year, captained his team to a state championship and played for the state basketball champions last season.

Stull said yesterday that he may sign two more players to scholarships in the next few days. "We'd like a few more players," Stull said. "But we still have a great group now."

Among Massachusetts players that may choose UMass is Scott Contee, a running back from Division III Super Bowl participant Foxboro High.

UMass climbing back to respectability

Peter Abraham

Like me, I'm sure many people here at the University of Massachusetts have friends who attend Boston College, Syracuse, Penn State or some other school with great football or basketball teams.

And every time you go home you have to hear how exciting the NCAA tournament game was, or how much fun it was at the Cotton Bowl.

Sure, we have a great women's soccer team and the lacrosse team will contend for the national title, but when it comes down to it, without good football or basketball, a school just doesn't cut the athletic mustard.

They are the two sports that cause people like Brent Musberger to take notice, for alumni to contribute millions of dollars and for students to pack a gym or stadium and do mature things like hold up newspapers when the other team is introduced.

I mean the bookstore will never sell "UMass, women's soccer Final Four" painters hats.

For the past two seasons both the football and basketball teams, to be tactful, haven't been all that wonderful. There have been moments - Carl Smith tying the UConn game last year or the football team whipping New Hampshire - but on the whole we haven't made all that much noise.

But thank Bob Stull and Ron Gerlufsen for what I see as a revitalization of UMass athletics. The football team has signed 25 players, that with the size and speed they have, could kick the hell out of the rest of the Yankee Conference.

The players returning have been on a conditioning program designed to make them better and faster and face it, when you read that a 6-5, 250 pound freshman is coming from New Jersey or Pennsylvania to take your job, you start working to keep it.

The state of Pennsylvania is where it's at in football. It's basically a religion there, and when you do well in high school, like Joe Namath, Dan Marino and others, you go on to greater things. UMass picked up two state all-stars, a couple of Canadians, a bunch of New Jersey standouts and selected other players.

It's safe to say that none of the other Yankee Conference schools had a shot at the players we signed. We competed with Penn State, HC and other powers for these kids. The linemen are huge, the backs are fast and the receivers are legitimate deep threats, something UM has never had.

Stull wants a passing offense like he ran at Washington, and you need quick receivers to do that, he got them, and a lot of what else he needed.

That certainly doesn't guarantee an 11-0 season but the days of 3-8 records and 3-0 wins over Northeastern are history, they have to prove it on the field, but as the coach said, "these kids are winners."

Power outage presses Hill into darkness

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

Orchard Hill residents were encouraged Friday to leave their dormitories for the weekend when the Chancellor's residence and the Orchard Hill Residential College plunged into darkness early Friday morning after an electrical cable failed, according to a physical plant spokesperson.

George Shifflett of the Physical Plant said power went off shortly after midnight Friday and was restored before workmen made the necessary repairs. Power was turned off again at 5:48 a.m. to allow workers to locate and solve the problem.

No one could say whether the Chancellor was home at the time.

Emergency generators were turned on at 8:30 a.m. Friday to heat the dormitory. Power in the Chancellor's house was restored by an emergency generator an hour later, Shifflett said.

According to Shifflett, the cable was repaired and power was restored at about 1 p.m. Friday.

A notice to residents told them power would be turned off again Saturday for further repairs and students were urged to conserve electricity, heat and water in addition to leaving for the weekend.

Scale reported stolen ; UM employee assaulted

An electronic scale with a digital readout, valued at $2,050, was stolen from a chemistry lab in Goessman Hall Thursday morning, University of Massachusetts Police said.

The faculty member who reported the scale missing said he used it Wednesday night, but when he came to the lab the next morning, the scale was gone, police said.

• A UMass employee was assaulted by a man who threatened an elderly man on crutches Thursday afternoon in the Campus Center garage, police said.

The employee reported that the man assaulted him after getting out of his car and yelling at the elderly man. The man then drove away and police said the incident is still under investigation.

• A man threw rocks and broke a window in Crampton dormitory Thursday night after he told two female residents he was looking for a fight.

Police said damages were assessed at $50. There are no suspects.

• Two wallet thefts allegedly occured Thursday afternoon in the Whitmore Administration Building. One wallet contained $56 and was taken from a purse in a second floor office. The other wallet, which contained $10, may have been taken from a third floor office, police said.

Chinese set to celebrate the New Year

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow many students of Chinese heritage at the University of Massachusetts will celebrate the Chinese or Lunar New Year, which will be the Year of the Ox.

The holiday is observed in the Far East countries which use the lunar or moon calendar. The calendar has 12 symbols and each year rotates a symbol, which has certain characteristics.

Celebrations of the lunar new year in the United States vary from region to region and family to family, but house cleaning, bill paying, offerings to relatives, firework displays to ward off spirits, and dragon dances are some of the common ways of celebration, according to Jeffrey Mar, a UMass graduate student in clinical psychology.

Carol Young, assistant director of the committee for collegiate education of black and other minorities, said the lunar new year shares many of the same meanings attached to the Christian calendar.

Related story p. 7

"It's more of a learning thing (celebration) as opposed to making changes (resolutions) in your personality," said Young.

Young said the lunar new year is a time for the family to get together for a meal.

"For our family it would be a time for a special dinner, a Buddhist Monk dish, which is vegetarian. In our family it was to carry on a tradition," she added.

Mar said elders give unmarried children symbolic money on the celebration day and added that some families give a lot of money.

Ed Gee, a UMass junior psychology major said his family has a midday meal that is both religious and traditional.

"Afterwards we would visit relatives and close friends," Gee said. "The children of the families get a red envelope filled with money for good luck. You wish them(relatives) a Happy New Year and you are supposed to bow," he said.

"Generation after generation as you become more Americanized the traditions are lost as opposed to being altered," he said.

Birthright raises questions about counseling

Some say pregnancy advertisements mislead

By DEBORAH ROSS

"If you think you may be pregnant and are distressed about it, Birthright will help you work out good solutions to whatever difficulties or worries you maybe having," says the recorded message callers hear when they phone the Amherst branch of Birthright and the office is unattended. The tape continues..."Whether your need is specific or just a friend to share your thoughts with, Birthright will do anything possible to help you. We know you are confused and distraught by the pressures being put on you at this time...Please don't rush into any sudden or panicked decisions; time is on your side. You deserve the opportunity to give slow and careful thought to a pregnancy-related problem."

Last November, Sharon, a University of Massachusetts student whose name has been changed for this article, thought she may have been pregnant.

Uncertain what to do, she noticed an advertisement on a PVTA bus describing Birthright as an organization which helps "girls and women troubled by unplanned pregnancies," at which all services, including pregnancy testing, are "free and confidential." No mention was made that the organization, which is based in Boston and has 16 chapters in the state and 550 world wide, is prohibited by its charter from making abortion referrals.

Two days after Sharon's first visit to the branch located in the Amherst Carriage Shops, she said she was more frightened and confused than she had been prior to

Westmoreland packs it in, ends $120 million suit

NEW YORK AP - A lawyer for William C. Westmoreland told a judge yesterday he had dropped his $120 million libel suit against CBS, and the retired general declared, "I got what I wanted." The network said it was vindicated but stopped short of claiming victory.

The settlement was announced to U.S. District Judge Pierre N. Leval yesterday, a few days before testimony was to have ended in the 18-week trial. The suit stemmed from a documentary accusing Westmoreland of suppressing the true strength of communist forces in Vietnam in 1967 to maintain political support for the war.

Both sides believe "their respective positions have been effectively placed before the public for its consideration" and continuing the case "would serve no further purpose," the joint statement dated Sunday said.

The statement said CBS "respects General Westmoreland's long and faithful service to his country" and never meant to imply that Westmoreland "was unpatriotic or disloyal in performing his duties as he saw them."

"If that statement had been made afer the CBS program had been aired, it would have fully satisfied me," Westmoreland said later.

"I got what I wanted, he said. "That is what I asked for originally.....I consider that I've won by virtue of that statement."

Without the statement, "we would be going back to court tomorrow," said Dan Burt, Westmoreland's attorney. "The general has wanted one thing from the beginning of the case. He wanted his reputation back. He believes he has that now."

But Van Gordon Sauter, executive vice president of CBS Boradcast Group, said he did "not view that statement as an apology."

CBS lawyer David Boies said he told jurors basically the same thing in his opening statement. "If that's all they wanted, they didn't have to sue for $120 million. They didn't have to ask for an apology," he said.

Westmoreland, 70, commanded American forces in Vietnam from 1964 to 1968. He filed suit in 1982 after CBS broadcast its documentary, "The Uncounted Enemy: A Vietnam Deception."

The documentary said Westmoreland insisted that intelligence reports show no more than 300,000 communist troops despite evidence pointing to a figure in excess of 500,000.

Westmoreland maintained that CBS distorted an honest disagreement among intelligence analysts to make it appear that he had deliberately misled his superiors.

His case was badly battered during the past two weeks, however, when two of his former aides testified for CBS.

Mediation Project helps resolve disputes for free

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

Having a dispute with your roommate, landlord or professor? Try contacting the Mediation Project at the University of Massachusetts before the problem worsens or becomes a costly lawsuit.

The primary aim of the project is to resolve interpersonal disputes without having to resort to formal disciplinary or court procedures, said Janet Rifkin, legal studies professor and project founder and director. The service is free.

"Mediation has the potential to prevent the escalation of a problem into a lawsuit or something blown out of proportion," Rifkin said.

The project has handled a wide variety of cases, including assault, separation, divorce, child custody rights, roommate conflicts, landlord-tenant relationships, and student-staff disputes, she said.

"We try to explore the issues more thoroughly so that the real problem can be dealt with rather than the symptoms of the underlying dispute. There is usually some interpersonal dimension, such as two-party disputes involving people who know each other," Rifkin said.

Established at UMass in 1981, the project is the first university organization to offer mediation services both to the university community and the community at large. The program also generates curriculum and research activities to further the understanding of mediation in society.

Cases are referred to the project from the Legal Services Office, Off-Campus Housing, the local courts, social service agencies and elsewhere, according to Rifkin.

In a typical case, two disputing parties decide to resolve their conflict through mediation. They make an appointment with the office and the case coordinator assigns two mediators to resolve the conflict. Mediators are often people who have used the project to resolve their own problems and then volunteer their time for future cases. Rifkin said there are about 90 mediators, most of whom are students.

"It (the agreement) is not legally binding. It's a faith agreement," said case coordinator, Charles Vose.

"We try to contact the parties a few weeks later and if any problems come up we try to get them back in here to talk," Vose said.

Rifkin said the project has an 80 percent success rate and stressed that mediation is a confidential process with all mediators taking an oath of confidentiality.

The project is funded by the Chancellor's office, the student affairs office, and the academic affairs office.

Students pitch in and help out local handicapped residents

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Correspondent

The Boltwood Project at the University of Massachusetts will soon begin another semester recruiting volunteers to provide friendship and support for mentally handicapped residents at the Belchertown State School.

The project, founded in 1969, is a UMass Registered Student Organization that seeks to provide students of the school with one-to-one relationships.

"They're not dangerous, not mentally ill, they're retarded. They should be accepted as productive members of society because they are."
—Chris Diaz, Boltwood project student coordinator

"Everyone has a friend to do things with, but the residents don't always get that, and that's where the students come in; to give friendship and one-to-one contact," said Boltwood Student Coordinator, Chris Diaz.

Diaz said there are 18 different Boltwood programs, which are all run by student supervisors. Buses take the volunteers to the school once a week and they spend up to two hours with the residents doing arts and crafts, helping residents handle finances, and going to movies. The main objective is to give the residents the attention and affection they often don't get, and it is the volunteers' job to treat them as valued individuals, she said.

Belchertown State School, founded in 1922, was orginally called the Belchertown State School for the Care and Custody of Feeble Minded Persons, Diaz said. It was for the care of retarded people. "In those days, society's emphasis was to segregate retarded people," Dr. William Jones, supervisor of the school, said. "The idea was to get these people out of society because they were a risk. These institutions were created to keep them remote and out of sight."

By the late 1960's, the conditions at the school were "horrible," Jones said.

But in 1972, Ben Ricci, a UMass exercise science professor and a group of 25 parents filed a class action suit against the school for health violations, safety questions, lack of education and privacy, and low staff numbers. The number of residents was up to 1,600, Diaz said.

According to Jones, a joint legislative committee was created to investigate the situation while senators came to investigate the school. "The public really began to look at the conditions, "he said.

Since then, he said, funding has increased, and improvements have been made on overcrowding, physical conditions, and treatment of the residents.

With new programs in effect, "they're treated as individuals and valued as people. The residents' response to this has always been phenomenal" he said.

The concentration now is on making the residents "more and more independent," and to reintegrate them into their families and communities.

"We've found out how skilled these people really are. It tells you how wrong our society's assumptions have been," Jones said.

"They're not dangerous, not mentally ill, they're retarded. They should be accepted as productive members of society because they are," Diaz added.

seeking help. Inadvertantly she found she had sought help from the branch of an international organization opposing abortion.

On her first visit, Sharon was not given a pregnancy test, but was quizzed by a volunteer about what she would do in the event she was. When Sharon replied that abortion might be one of her options, she was told that such an operation, while painless for her, would "tear the baby apart."

"They said for months afterward I would suffer from the pain and cramps and find it impossible to live with myself," Sharon recalled, adding "It really shouldn't be presented like this."

Sharon was then sent away with pro-life pamphlets and brochures, including color reprints from a Life magazine showing stages in the development of a fetus. She was told to read the material before returning for a pregnancy test the next day which turned out to be positive.

"They asked me what I intended to do. When I suggested abortion again they showed me models of fetuses and said at this point they can laugh and cry and they made me read a case study of a girl pressured into abortion who could not live with herself afterwards. It was all extremely unpleasant," she said.

Sharon said she believes it was the "without question scare tactics" that she resents because "it put more doubt than was already in my mind before I went."

"There really should be something on their (advertising) signs about what they really do," she said.

Margaret Coty, director of the Amherst chapter, denied that Birthright volunteers use frightening techniques to counsel women out of having abortions. "We don't use scare tactics," she said, "we just try and present the positive side of carrying a baby to term."

What Birthright offers, Coty said, is a variety of supportive services which help pregnant women carry their baby to term. These include friendship, clothing, cribs, accomodation, counseling by volunteers and trying "to tell a girl if she wants the baby there is no way she can't have it," Coty said.

Asked whether there were instances in which an abortion could be considered, such as incest or rape, Coty replied "I don't think a child should be blamed for the sins of his father and in the case of rape it's not the child's fault."

"I think Birthright can offer some helpful services, to women who have already decided to maintain their pregnancies," said Ellen Story, assistant director of the Family Planing Council of Western Mass., "but I wish their publicity was clearer in stating that their charter prohibits them from making referrals for abortion."

"Do people usually say what they (their agencies) don't do?" Coty said in reference to that charter clause. "I never thought it was necessary."

"We wouldn't be mentioning abortion because we don't do it," said Robert Zisa, head of Birthright's Boston office. When it was suggested that some women might be going to Birthright under the impression they would be counseled on all options, Zisa replied he "hadn't considered that."

Coty said Birthright is always "listed under alternatives to abortion in the phonebook; yet in the 1984 Northampton, Amherst, Easthampton phone book it is listed under "Pregnancy Information Services."

The taped message callers hear when they phone the unattended Amherst office transcribed above makes no mention that the center deals only in alternatives to abortion.

Susan Newson, public affairs director of Planned Parenthood, said she believes that "a new technique of anti-abortion groups is to portray themselves as being neutral," in order to influence women who are undecided about having an abortion.

"You can get very humane treatment at Birthright, but if you are undecided it can be very frightening," commented a senior staffer at a Massachusetts family planning clinic who declined identification.

"Some of the women who work there are truly kind and sympathetic," she said, but added "it is only helpful for a woman who has already decided an abortion is not for her. I know undecided women who have been upset and frightened by their experiences there," she said.

Foundation must be protected

Joseph D. Duffey

Five years ago this winter, in response to a widespread concern over anti-social acts and attitudes by members of the campus community, Chancellor Henry Koffler established a "Commission on Civility in Human Relations." He appointed members chosen from a wide range of university constituencies to assist the University in efforts "to foster a high level of discourse and behavior on this campus, regarding civility, mutual concern and responsibility appropriate to an academic community."

Over the course of the last five years, members of this community have learned that civility is more than mere politeness. Civility in human relations protects diversity in establishing a community standard of behavior which restrains individuals from acting on their most deeply felt prejudices.

Membership in the community is thus valued more than purgative self expression. Self-discipline coupled with respect for the feelings and sensibilities of others must characterize every social interaction in a community dedicated to civility in human relations.

At the end of last semester, a small group of anonymous people acting either as individuals or in concert, made a series of offensive threats to the safety and lives of homosexual students, staff and faculty. This involved the circulation of literature, efforts to call an anti-gay demonstration, and a false bomb threat during an event sponsored by gay students. These individuals threatened to continue their anti-social behavior during the spring semester.

It is incumbent on me as chancellor to remind the members of this community that campus policy prohibits discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. Gay students, staff and faculty have the same rights as everyone else to be full and active members of this community--that is, to pursue their lives free from intimidation and harassment; to enjoy all of the programs, services and facilities which are open to members of the community without prejudice; to petition the appropriate university agencies for the redress of grievances and for programs and services as the need arises.

Although the university appears to be an indestructible institution, like most democratic institutions it stands on a fragile foundation which can be shattered when people cease to defend their own liberty and the liberty of those people with whom they disagree. In these times of political reaction and intolerance, we must protect the rights of minorities if we ourselves are to be free. The attempted silencing of minority voices through acts of intimidation and violence victimizes specific individuals and causes them pain. Such anti-social behavior is contrary to the spirit of the university, and constitutes an attack on the community as a whole.

We are diminished as a community and as a society when we allow any individual or group to be persecuted for owning that part of themselves which may be the source of their integrity as individuals. We needn't fear differences. Our society benefits immeasurably from the different perspectives and contributions which varied groups of people add to our common culture.

Today our world is beset by overwhelming global problems--overpopulation, famine, and poverty; environmental decay and destruction; the threat of nuclear war. Instead of wasting our precious talent and energy in demeaning attacks on one another, we need to turn our attention to those critical problems which cry out for human solution.

John Dos Passos reminds us that "our only hope will lie in the frail web of understanding of one person for the pain of another." Let us remember our common bonds with each other and rededicate ourselves to improving civility in human relations in our community.

Joseph D. Duffey is the chancellor of UMass.

Random Notes
Putting things in perspective.

I am a baseball fan. I love watching a player hit a home run with two outs in the bottom of the ninth, to win an important game. But some things really bother me about the industry.

The other day, baseball superstar Jim Rice signed a four year contract with the Boston Red Sox for $9.8 million. That's $2.45 million per year. It doesn't shock you? Oh, you're used to seeing such numbers on the contracts of professional athletes. Well, let me help you put these numbers in perspective.

If a person were to work for 32 years at an annual income of $75,000 and not one cent of this was spent, he/she would have $2.4 million. But who makes that much without spending it? Now let me assume that I can save $30,000 per year...In 80 years I would have $2.4 million. The average life expectancy for an American male is 80 years.

You say that I'm just jealous, and that I wish that I could make that much money? You might me right, but if I made $2.4 million in one season for hitting 28 home runs (that's almost $86,000 each), and for driving in 122 runs (about $20,000 for each), which are the totals that Rice posted in 1984, this is what I might spend it on...1,269,841 boxes of Cheeri O's cereal...960,000 packages of Duracell batteries (size AA, 4 per package)...26,667 Sony Walkman cassette players...2000 stereo systems worth $1,200 each...Enough tofu to feed a starving nation...1,371,428 copies of the Sporting News...A half dozen books at the UMass textbook annex...141,176 cases of Molson Brador beer...47,058 top quality Wilson brand outfielder's baseball mitts...48,000 people to do my homework for me at a price of $50 each...1,200,000 one pound cans of Chock Full O'Nuts coffee...4363 Brooks Brothers suits worth $550 each...200,000 Discwasher record cleaning systems...2,088,000 one pound boxes of Ronzoni spaghetti...

The real sad part about this whole salary thing is that when Jim Rice's salary is written off on taxes by the Boston Red Sox Inc. as a tax loss, it will be the average baseball fan who saves $30,000 per year for 80 years who will end up paying Rice's salary through taxes...

Boy, Jim Rice sure did look happy in that press photo.

Chess and death in the U.S.S.R.

Andrew M. Paven

The leader of the Soviet Union, Konstantin U. Chernenko, 73, is reportedly dying while Kremlin watchers the world over attempt to read the tell-tale signs like so many leaves in a teacup.

The signals range from Chernenko's failure to appear in public since last Dec. 27; to the cancellation last Tuesday of a meeting with Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou; to Dr. Evgeny Chazov's, formerly Leonid Brezhnev's physician, hasty return to the Soviet Union from a speaking tour of the United States; to the omission of the final speech, traditionally given by the Soviet leader in the campaign for the Supreme Soviet of the Russian federation, from this week's TV listings in Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper; to the reading of a letter on Soviet television news, purportedly written by Chernenko and first carried last week by the Tass news agency. A technique one western diplomat called a "red flag" that signals a serious illness when used repeatedly.

But there was one event that was not tied into the Kremlin watch in any of the accounts I read, and which I wonder about: the cancellation of the championship chess match between champion Anatoly Karpov and challenger Gary Kasparov.

The match, in which the first player to win six games wins, has been going on since Sept. 10. On Nov. 24 Karpov, 33, won Game 27 to take a commanding 5 0 lead. But since then there have been 18 ties and Kasparov the 21-year-old challenger has won three games, including the last two played. Speculation has centered on Karpov's psychological and physical exhaustion, and the desire on the part of the Soviet chess hierarchy to save his title.

International Chess Federation President Florencio Campomanes (of the Phillipines) said the match "has exhausted the physical if not the psychological resources not only of the participants but of all those connected with the match."

But others say the action was to keep Kasparov, described by the New York Times as a "half-Jewish prodigy from the southern republic of Azerbaijan" who has "sent excitement through the chess world with his daring style of play" and who is on the fringes of the chess establishment, from dethroning Karpov, whom the Times desribes as "solidly at the center of Russian chess establishment" and whose backers "have risen to prominent positions." Punned former world champion Boris Spassky, a fan of Kasparov's, "He (Campomames) should change his name to Karpovmames."

This may well be a move to save Karpov's title from the half-Jewish outsider. But I wonder if it wasn't also triggered by the Chernenko watch. The Reagan administration believes Chernenko will last "at least six months." But the West German newspaper the Bonner Rundschau, reported that he is suffering from "chronic lung emphysema that cannot be cured" and that "doctors give (him) only three to four weeks."

Perhaps the end is even nearer than that. Perhaps Chernenko is already dead--in which case there are two questions: First, who will replace him, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, 53, Gregory Romanov, 61, someone else? And second, will any such change affect Soviet policy?

The experts answer, maybe, maybe not. In any case, the timing was unfortunate for a 21-year-old named Gary Kasparov.

Making great music

JONATHAN RICHMAN
Monday, February 11
Iron Horse Cafe

By JON STRYMISH
Collegian Staff

When Jonathan Richman sings, he always seems to be on the edge of cracking up; either into a mental breakdown or into laughter at the audience for taking him seriously. Probably the most eccentric pop performer of our time, Richman very seldom lowers himself to play for paying audiences, so his two shows last Monday night at the Iron Horse in Northampton were news events and an adventure for anyone brave enough to have bought a ticket.

For his songs Richman evokes two characters--a small child and a nostalgic adult who talks with the honesty and sincerity of a youth. This character ad-libbed a lot and came up with lines such as, "If I were a shopping mall what chance would I have of getting a date with some cute little building from France?"

There is a lot of musical history behind Richman's performance although he still looks as if he could be under twenty. About 15 years ago Richman founded the Modern Lovers, who recorded one record and almost had a hit with the song "Roadrunner." Even though the band broke up 10 years ago Richman is still working furiously to make people forget the Modern Lovers and accept his new music. I think he only plays college towns because we are young enough not to remember the old band.

The people at the Iron Horse were very interested in what Richman was singing. This was unexpected considering the attitude most people have towards him when the hear songs like "Hey There Little Insect." Only one request for "Roadrunner" was made and to reward the audience for their restraint he played "Louie Louie" at the end of the night, giving them the kind of rock they might have wanted.

Exactly what Richman was singing might be hard to explain. He had a deep voice that was amazing, and made sounds with his guitar that were so retrogressive they could make the Stray Cats drool.

Richman explained the philosophy behind his guitar in an ode which explains that it doesn't take much to make great music. Most of his songs had ideas such as this, and the question I expect people to ask concerns his pretentiousness. However, he seemed sincere; the crowd loved him and he never really asked anyone to take him more seriously than they should.

Malcolm recalled

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Twenty years after the assassination of Malcolm X, the issues of Blacks' equal participation in employment, housing and in the American social and political system, which he poignantly raised, are still unanswered, according to professors of Afro-American studies at the University of Massachusetts.

Malcolm X, El Hajj Malik El Shabazz, was a Muslim black nationalist leader and a civil rights activist. Thursday, Feb. 21, marks the twentieth anniversary of his assassination.

According to John Bracey, historian and Afro-American studies professor, Malcolm X has an ongoing inportance in relevence to the Black struggles of the 1980s.

Bracey added, Malcolm X should play an important role in the lives of young Blacks. Malcolm X was very much concerned with education and placed a big emphasis on the reading of world history "so one can see how Blacks fitted in the logic."

Like Malcolm, who did not want to be a leader, but an example for others to model, Bracey said today's Blacks should copy his determination.

Malcolm began adulthood as "Detroit Red," a smalltime ghetto hustler who was sentenced to a ten year prison term. Inside prison he transformed himself, struggling to overcome his lack of education and political awareness.

While in prison, Malcolm joined the Nation of Islam, and became a powerful minister of Temple Number Seven and Eleven in Harlem.

"He is the only revolutionary thinker that America has produced," said William Strickland, professor of Afro-American studies.

Malcolm is a revolutionary because he used the most powerful weapon there is: the truth of history. He also exposed the lies about the American system in relation to Black people, Strickland said.

He added Malcolm's philosophy of using any means necessary in the struggle for Black liberation was not of "taking over, but of making change. There will never be another Malcolm" he said. "He was ahead of his time and a product of his time."

Vietnamese celebrate new year

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

A cult of ancestor's rituals, traditional New Year's food and music and dance performances by students from Southeast Asia will highlight a Vietnamese new year celebration tomorrow at the University of Massachusetts.

1985 is the year of the water buffalo, symbol of hard work.

"The celebration is an opportunity for people to give presents, and pay tribute to the dead," said Lucy Nguyen, academic advisor at the Bilingual Collegiate Program and faculty advisor for the Vietnamese Student's Association.

She said Vietnamese people pay tribute to their ancestors, "to improve their moral and social standing. There is a real link that unites the living and dead members of the family."

Nguyen explained preparations for the feast take approximately a month, during which time the traditional foods, earth and sky cakes are prepared.

Vietnamese students will prepare the dinner which will consist of earth cake and other Vietnamese delicasies.

Each represent the harmony between heaven and earth and are shaped in the traditional Vietnamese philosophy of square for the earth and round for the sky. The earth cake is green, after the color of the earth and the sky cake is white.

On New Year's day, children give parents gifts while the parents give them brand new bills as a sign of luck and prosperity. Traditional gifts are fruits, rice cakes, wines and teas.

During this day, there is no cleaning as to keep everything in. Also, the first guest or visitor is supposed to bring the best of luck for the year.

The traditional wishes for the new year are "happiness, prosperity and longevity." Nguyen hopes that "with hard work we have prosperity and success," this new year.

She said the celebration will give Asian students "the chance to celebrate the traditional new year away from home."

This is important, she said, because it is very difficult for Vietnamese students to keep in touch with their traditional culture. Many have not had the opportunity to witness it first hand, while others have lost their language and have not seen the traditional celebration, she said.

She also wants to "welcome administrators and faculty as family members for the night to give them an idea of cultural diversity and to show the richness of the (Vietnamese) culture."

Students are welcome to view the traditional dance performances starting at 9 p.m.

She said the celebration is a big family reunion. In Vietnamese culture, the family is the nucleus of society. Nguyen teaches a course at UMass on Vietnamese Literature with a concentration on the family. "Family is the foundation of society and a good family means a good foundation for a good society," she said.

She added there is a conflict between the traditional and new ideas in relation to the family, brought by the westernization of ideas by the French in the 1930s.

Although she understands the need for independency, "family ties are strong," and when a child is respectful to his/her parents, he/she is respectful to his/her spouse.

Who's not for real? UM 63, GW 55

George Washington's Mike Brown found himself surrounded by Minutemen all day. Here, Tom Emerson and Lorenzo Sutton sandwich the big man. UMass beat GW, 63-55.

Minutemen neutralize Brown and Colonials, tighten grip on fourth

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD How important was the University of Massachusetts' 63-55 victory over George Washington on Saturday in Springfield?

To begin with, the Minutemen snapped an 11 game losing streak against the Colonials, the team picked to win the Atlantic 10 this season.

UMass, 12-11, also went to 8-6 in the league. The Minutemen hold fourth place alone as Rutgers lost to St. Bonaventure.

The Colonials' All-America candidate Mike Brown, all 6-11 265 pounds of him, was held to three points, 15 below his season average. The Minutemen didn't allow Brown a point for 27 minutes and a field goal for 31. He ultimately fouled out with 3:11 to go.

And finally, for anyone who had any doubts, UMass is officially for real. The Minutemen proved they belong in the Atlantic 10's top four, not last as the coaches predicted in a pre-season poll.

"This was the type of win people are going to look at and say, 'these guys are really playing some good ball,'" UM's Darryl Carter said. "When you hold Brown to three and beat them by nine, it's an accomplishment."

UMass opened the game shooting a sluggish 2-of-14 and finding themselves down, 13-6 with 12:40 to go.

Carl Smith (10 points and four assists) nailed a jumper, two foul shots and fed Donald Russell (11 points) for an easy layup to make it 13-12.

Russell (who needs six to tie Mike Pyatt's career scoring mark of 1,407) gave UM its first lead at 14-13 on a layup before the Colonials battled back to go ahead 21-20 on Joe Wassel's jumper.

Neysmith then took a pass from Bobby Braun (ten points) and threw down a "close, but not quite my best" dunk to make it 22-21. The Minutemen then tossed in seven-of-eight foul shots to take a slim 29-28 halftime lead.

In the second half, the Minutemen blew away the Colonials, losers of two straight, with a 15-1 run that took them from being down 38-33 with 15:33 to go, to being up 46-39 with 8:10 remaining.

Neysmith, who along with Braun had 14 rebounds, scored five of his team-high 15 points in a row to spark the run and tie the game at 38. He moved to third on the UM career rebounding list with 881.

Brown, who was denied the lane by Braun and Tom Emerson for much of the day, finally just giving up his shots, then scored his first point with a foul shot at the 12:56 mark.

The Minutemen ran off eight straight from there. Russell had a fastbreak layup, Neysmith dropped in a fallaway, Carter rebounded a Lorenzo Sutton miss and hit a one-hander before Sutton leaned in for a one-hander. The smoke cleared and it was 46-39.

UMass got up by as much as ten, 59-49, and hit nine of its last 12 foul shots to seal the game as coach Ron Gerlufsen subbed freely.

Sutton had ten points for UMass, Carter added seven, Emerson had four and four rebounds in a solid effort both offensively and defensively. The Minutemen shot a less-then-great 30 percent from the field (19-of-62), but were 25-of-36 from the line. They outrebounded GW 54-47 and scored 23 points off turnovers and 12 on the break.

Wassel was the Colonials only player in double figures with 17.

Former GW starters Chester Wood, Darryl Webster, and Troy Webster saw only eight minutes of action (all Wood's) as coach Gerry Gimelstob's team seemed beset with friction.

For Braun, who played against Brown in high school and has never beaten him in almost eight seasons of play, the win was a special one.

"He's a great player, don't get me wrong. The guy's a truck, it's just that we wanted it more and Tommy (Emerson) and I showed we could stop him," the 6-5 senior said.

"Hobby told coach (Al) Wolejko on Friday that he would hold him under ten, and he did," Emerson said. "This was a big win."

The 6-9 Emerson, did what Gerlufsen wanted him to, confront Brown under the boards and give a little offense. In his 18 minutes, Emerson was as agressive as he has been in three years at UMass.

"I told Tom, the whole team, we have to want this one more," the coach said.

"We didn't shoot all that well, but when he had those streaks that won the game, we did everything well. Kids like Lorenzo Sutton, Darryl Carter, and Tommy Emerson gave us big lifts you don't always expect. Everyone contributed to this game, and we proved what we can do."

UMass co-captain Horace Neysmith jams one home Saturday in Springfield.

Women give Hartford savage beating, 66-35

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

Making their first ever appearance at the Springfield Civic Center, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team pounded a hapless University of Hartford, 66-35, Saturday.

Barbara Hebel scored 16 points and Karen Fitzgerald added 12 to lead a balanced UMass attack which saw head coach Barbara Stevens utilize her entire roster throughout most of the game.

"I thought it was good for us to have a game in which we could allow everyone to play," Stevens said. "It was a good game in that some of the players who normally play a lot got rest on the bench while those who don't normally see a lot of action had an opportunity to get some playing time."

Habitually hammered by division 1 and 2 opponents, the Hawks (6-18) entered the game fresh from their first ever Division 1 victory, a 57-45 decision over Brooklyn College. In the first ever meeting between the two ballclubs, UMass showed Hartford the hard realities of Division 1 basketball.

The Minutewomen, 11-13, jumped out to a quick 7-0 lead behind jumpers from Tara Lewis and Hebel while Sue Burtoft added a layup and a free throw.

In the first five minutes, Hartford showed no sign of life as they failed to score. With little offense to provide a spark to their game plan, Hartford quickly saw any chance of victory disappear against the fast break oriented UMass offense.

Paula Whittier, who had a team high 13 points, hit a jumper with 15:58 to go in the first half to finally put Hartford on the board. Hebel answered with three consecutive baskets to increase the UMass lead to 13-2. Hartford rallied with a 9-0 run to cut the lead to two, but unable to cope with a tenacious UMass defense, the Hawks squandered any opportunity to tie with yet another of its astonishing 37 turnovers. Two free throws by Fitzgerald sealed the half (31-18), and the game so far as anyone was concerned.

The Minutewomen opened the second half with a 17-4 spurt before Stevens initiated her mass substitutions.

"Unlike our games against Yale and Dartmouth, we definitely did not want Hartford to think they could play and beat us," Stevens said.

Without a doubt, Hartford possessed much less talent than the Minutewomen. Hartford turned the ball over 37 times, shot a mason-like 28 percent from the field and failed to pull down an offensive rebound until late in the second half.

On the game, the Minutewomen outrebounded Hartford 53-31 with Karen Fitzgerald leading the team with nine. Ten of 13 UMass players scored while no one failed to beef up their statistics in some form.

The Minutewomen take on the Rhode Island Rams at 8 p.m. tonight at the Amherst College Gym.

New courses offered Through Grad School

by Segun Eubanks

A low student turn-out and lack of recruiters from the represented schools were the two negative aspects pointed out by participants. While the large amount of information provided was said to be the most positive ingredient at last Thursdays Minority Graduate Fair.

Approximately 200 undergraduate students browsed through Hampden Commons to take advantage of the information provided. Along with information from 75 graduate school admission, a reception for graduate students and staff and a dance after the Fair feturing the Fred Clayton quartet and D.J. Daddy Neal.

University graduate students were used as mock recruiters for the schools. "What can "Joe Smoe" tell me about Howard University if he goes to UMass," said one undergraduate student who preferred not to be identified. The reason for using UMass grad students according to the Fair's coordinator Curtis Pittman, a Staff Assistant for OMGSR, was "The need to have interaction between graduate and undergraduate students." Pittman pointed out the statistics have shown that minority students have found it very difficult to graduate from the University. "Graduate students can best explain the trial and tribulations of graduating (from UMass), as opposed to recruiters who would be staff members or professionals (from the represented schools)," Pittman said.

Graduate student D. Anderson Hoker particpated as a recruiter, "Because I thought that I could help Black students and minority students with their transaction into graduate school." Hooker said that he was very dissappointed with the turn-out, "mainly because the information was here, and until we can teach people to fish they will always be hungry," he said.

"The targets, freshman and sophmores, are not really interested," said Pittman. "More outreach is needed. We must evaluate the interest of the students," he added.

Welcome Back Bob Clark

by Rod Clare
Nummo Staff

The newest academic advisor for the CCEBMS program is Bob Clark, a 1984 UMASS alumnus. A native of Cambridge, Massachusetts, he graduated with his bachelors holding a double major of political science and psychology along with a minor in Latin.

What sets Clark apart however, besides his academics, is the fact that he is an American Indian, the only one on the CCEBMS staff. A member of the Wampanoag nation that resided in in the northern New England states, Bob also explained that is part Black.

While Bob atended UMass he was a member of the American Indian Student Association and it was during this time that he found American Indians had the lowest acceptance rate of any group in the University. Also in his experiences were the facts that American Indians had the lowest education rate, the highest infant mortality rate, and the highest rate of unemployment of any group in the U.S. along with the fact that half of the 1 ½ million American Indians live on reservations or bantustans.

With these types of figures staring him In the face, it was no suprise that Bob became involved in human services work. He had been appointed Western Massachusetts Commissioner for Indian Affairs by Governer King and has been reappointed under Governor Dukakis. While there are no difinitive figures on the amount of American Indians in UMass, Bob said it couldn't be more than 50, graduate and undergraduate.

Asked about his relations with the CCEEBMS organization since he started on January 6, Bob replied: "Love it. I consider it a family. An excellent staff." Expressing the same happiness about his contact with students he noted that it was nice to do a job what he always felt committed to personally. Seeing himself as a radical "in the sense that I see things that need to be radically changed" he added that these changes "ned to come throughout the system."

Decrying the melting pot as a myth, Bob said that racism is just as strong nowadays as in his earlier years. Acknowledging the fact that the name calling and slurs have decreased, he said that racism manifests itselft in a "more institutional and subtle form."

Leaving a message for the students, Bob said: "I would tell them to take their studies seriously...because not everybody has the chance to go to school. They should shoot for A's and not for C's."

Civil Rights An On-going Struggle

by Rod Clare

Paul Robeson Jr., son of the late great Paul Robeson, spoke on "What Happened to the Civil Rights and Black Power Movements" Monday at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center.

Mr. Robeson set the preconditions to the Civil Rights era by starting off with slavery. During this time Mr. Robeson explained that each slave was counted as two-thirds of a person and that while white indentured servants served 7 years then got 40 acres and a mule, the freed slave received nothing. Reconstruction was very helpful towards Black progress but was eventually turned back. Ex-slave skilled Black workers "were driven up North and destroyed as a group." On top of that Mr. Robeson said that the Industrial Revolution by-passed Black America "by almost in its entirety" until the 1930's.

All of these factors led up to the Civil Rights movement which was for Blacks the "rock bottom minimum for survival" in Mr. Robeson's view. He said that whites supported this movement because it wasn't perceived as being anti-white and because it was non-violent. Although he supported the movement he said, "I would never turn the other cheek if struck on one." He further added that thousands, including himself, were waiting to see if Martin Luther King's strategy would work and if didn't, another more militant tactic would have been adopted.

The Black Power movement which came later was the structure on the Civil Rights foundation. Mr. Robeson noted that the Black Power movement came about because the Civil Rights movement didn't work well for working class Blacks. The inner strength of the Black community upset many whites because they feared Black unity and a great many whites thought that Black Power meant that Blacks would rule whites even though Blacks were only 12 percent of the population.

Turning his attention to affirmative action, Mr. Robeson said it was "the biggest hoax ever played on the American public" to call affirmative action discrimination in reverse because what it really stands for is an equal opportunity for Blacks to compete. He compared the current situation Blacks have to face with being allowed to run in a track meet but with no sneakers tracksuits, or training against a fully prepared competitor.

Taking an extended view of present day America, Mr. Robeson started a tremendous attack on the Reagan administration, calling Mr. Reagan "one of the most racist presidents in living memory." In addition to giving instances of Mr. Reagan's "ignorance", Mr. Robeson saidthat whites in general use the call for color blindness as a cover for racism.

After finishing his statements about Mr. Reagan, Mr. Robeson made a call for Black unity and also the possibility of coalitions with other groups such as labor to fight the current mood of the country.

Ten University students from the Black Mass Communications Project and Nummo News took a trip to Washington D.C. this past weekend to participate in the 14th annual Communications Conference at Howard University. It was an unforgettable weekend for all, although for some the memories are quite different than for others.

For those that took advantage of the Conference, the workshops and interviews were very rewarding and offered an opportunity to get a head start in the very competitive Communications job market. Merrit Crawford, a University of Massachusetts almuni currently working at the Assoicated Press, was given recognition for outstanding achievement at the conference banquet and served as an inspiration to minority students attending his former institution.

The atmosphere at Howard University was also educational. When we arrived on campus, about 400 students were holding a rally to fight apathy in Howards's community. While the theme is very similar to the challenges we face in this community, the spirit and enthusiasm of Black studen leaders was reminsent fo the 1960's Black Power movements.

Students from different backgrounds, religions, and interests came together to fight a common cause, something we have been unable to achieve at UMass for a long time.

There were, of course a few disappointments. The conference was not as well organized as it should have been, with many workshops and events being cancelled at the last minute. Also many members of our entourage pointed out that a lot of Howard students acted very bourgeois.

The biggest dissapointment, however, came from within the group of UMass students. Apparently many members of the group had no intentions to attend or participate in the activities. Instead they spent their time hanging out at Howard, looking up old friends and searching for party spots. Moreover, their search for a good time actually impeded the efforts of the students who were interested in taking care of business.

It is very distressing to think that the two organizations paid for the trip from hard earned revenue funds and their very own members took advantage of the opportunity afforded them. The most ironic part of it all is that those who had their priorities together managed to take care of business, learn a lot of important information and still have a good time.

It would be suggested that in future endeavors such as this, Third World organizations make a more extensive investigation of particpating students and develop a system of checks and balances. After all our funds are far too valuable and scarce to be wasted.

Manley and Seaga: Who Can Lead Jamaica

by Christopher Allen
Nummo Staff

Former Prime Minister of Jamaica, Michael N. Manley has begun trying to make a comeback after spending four years on the political sidelines. Because of the crushing defeat Mr. Manley suffered in 1980 after the economy had virtually collapsed, many Jamaicians and Western Diplomats had expected him to strike a moderate stance when he re-emerged. Instead, recently he opened what his party describes early elections, calling the present Prime Minister Edward P. G. Seaga "an arrogrant, stupid fool" and threatening measures that could lead to years of instability.

With many supporters cheering wildly at a rally in a palm tree dotted square in downtown Montego Bay, Mr. Manley and his Socialist People's National Party proclaimed that the government they hoped to form would feel no obligation to recognize any contracts or agreements made by Prime Minister Seaga, thus casting in doubt the continuity for Investors here and for other nations. Manley and his party declared that the present Government had no "political authority" to make new agreements with the International Monetary Fund. They warned that Prime Minister Seaga and his Jamaica labor party "must assume full political responsibility for any social unrest or instability" that was "likely to ensue" from additional austerity measures.

With the country facing staggering and economic problems, many Jamaicans and Western diplomats say the threats are likely to give foreign investors and international bankers second thoughts about Jamaica. They say it could further disrupt the country's tourist business.

Mr. Manley's threats are being taken seriously because recent polls have indicated that if elections are called, he would probably defeat Mr. Seaga with 59 percent of the vote. The Prime Minister insists that he will not call elections until he is constitutionally required to in 1989. Mr. Manley, tall and gray-haired is an eloquent and captivating speaker is still held in awe by many Jamaicians.

In his eight years as Prime Minister, beginning in 1972, he inspired national pride, leading the country to prominence among militant developing countries. He lashed out against what he called capitalist imPerialism and developed a close relationship with Cuba.

In 1980, Jamaica tumed to Mr. Seaga, a Harvard-educated sociologist who portrayed himself as a reliable and efficient manager and promised to restore calm and economic vitality. Mr. Seaga's Jamaica Labor Party won 51 of the 60 seats in Parliament. As one of his first official acts, Mr. Seaga broke diplomatic relations with Cuba. He has become one of the Reagan Administration's closest allies.

At the rally in Montego Bay, Mr. Manley's old style and appeal seemed unchanged. He uttered two words, "Comrade Chairman" to begin his speech and the crowd roared with cheers and applause for several minutes, according to reports. Banners on the dais warned against "Imperialism and U.S. domination." There was unmistakable anger in the voices of Mr. Manley and other speakers at the rally. They maintain that they were cheated by Mr. Seaga when he suddenly called elections In December 1983 while at a peak in popularity after his strong support for the United States - led invasion of Grenada. Both sides have publicly pledged that elections would not be held the nation's voter-registration lists had been updated to account for about 150,000 newly eligible people and the death and migration of 100,000 more. Mr. Manley refused to particpate in the 1983 election. With opposition from only a handful of independents, Mr. Seaga's party took all 60 seats in Parliament. There were no challengers to 54 of Seaga's Candidates, and they won without any ballots being cast. For the first time sinceuniversial suffrage was granted in 1944, Parliament was occupied by only one party.

Last summer, both Mr. Seaga and Mr. Manley said in interviews that the one-party Parliament had proved to be unexpectedly effective; but increasingly, educated Jamaicans say they believe it is impossible for members of any one party to provide the kind of scrutiny and criticism that comes from a true opposition.

Fight For Justice

by Christopher Allen

Comptroller Roland Burris, one of three blacks elected to state-wide office in the nation, acted out of character recently when he bypassed the black caucus of the Democratic National Committee and won the vice chairman's job.

Burris, a normally cautious, low-profile politician, was elected after he appealed directly to the full committee. the DNC's black caucus had, by a narrow margin, endorsed Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Indianna.

The Rev. Jesse L. Jackson, an unsuccessful candidate last year for the Democratic presidential nomination, said in an interview published Monday in the Washington Post that he would not recognize Burris' election. Hatcher had been Jackson's campaign chairman. Jackson also criticized the DNC's selection of new party Chairman Paul G. Kirk Jr. as a continuation of the party's domination by organized labor. Burris, an active Baptist churchman who sometimes preaches from pulpits across Illinois, said he did not intend to respond to comments that he had betrayed the caucus in the Feb. 1 election. He was equally noncommittal when asked to comment on Jackson's statement. "Some people might find it "disturbing" that I won the election," he said. But, he added, "I'm the duly elected vice chairman. My purpose is to elect Democrats to state office, to Congress and to the presidency." Burris said he would try to do some fence-mending by calling a meeting of the black caucus soon.

Burris and Jackson have known and worked with each other for years; in 1977, Burris was national director of Operation PUSH, Jackson's Chicago-based civil rights organization. State Rep. Carol Moseley Braun, chief spokesman in the Illinois House for Chicago Mayor Harold Washington, said of Burris: "Right now, he's getting beat up pretty bad." But, she added, "He hasn't put himself in a position where he can't heal the breach." Said Rep. Arthur Turner, an independent black Democrat from Chicago: "Those black leaders who are really tuned in...they understand. They respect Roland's credentials."

Burris, who at 47 is in his second term as Illinois' budget watchdog, is generally regarded as an able administrator who brought the state's accounting system up to date and who provide timely and informative reports on the economy. Politically, he has solid credentials in the black community, and his fiscal conservatism appeals to whites. When Republican Gov. James R. Thompson pushed in 1983 for a permanent increase in state income taxes, Burris cautioned such a large boost was not needed and that a temporary surtax would suffice.

Democrats must "present a program that shows the Democratic Party has the economic interest of American people at heart," Burris said in a recent interview. Programs for the poor "must be energized through the economy, not government spending." Burris said he intends to help other blacks round the country run and win election to state-wide offices by appealing to white voter. "You do that by showing them this is nothing unusual - that this person is qualified and can represent your interests. It takes a selling job," Burris said.

His second-place finish in the state's Democratic Senate primary last year was due mostly to strong support in Chicago's black neighborhoods. He was the leading vote-getter in Cook County in the four-way race won by U.S. Rep. Paul Simon, who ousted veteran GOP Sen. Charles Percy last November. Burris is the first black ever elected to one of Illinois' six constitutional offices. It's a distinction he's proud of. Besides Burris, the two other black politicians currently elected state-wide are Henry Parker, Connecticut's treasurer and Richard Austin, Michigan's secretary of state.

Many politicians use the royal "we" when talking about themselves, but Burris sometimes ventures into the third person to recount what he calls "The Roland Burris Story." "Roland Burris, born and raised in a southern Ilinois town, born of African-American heritage but set out on a goal to accomplish things in life, which he has done," Burris said in an interview during the 1984 primary campaign. Burris, the son of a railroad worker from Centralia, has said he would like to make a bid in 1986 for a higher state-wide office -perhaps attorney general.

He has dropped hints he'd like to hold national office someday, too. "I can see in Roland's eyes that he would like to run for president," said Turner, adding: "I'm not sure the rest of the world is ready for it." Burris' wife Berlean, is chairman of the Dept. of Nursing at Chicago State University. They have two children, Roland II and Rolanda Sue.

QUESTION: What do you think is the most relevant person, event in black History?

Thelma Hamilton - Martin Luther King because he was a positive influence and he brought people together to cause a positive change. Event - "the right to vote."

Richard Ostrowksi - Martin Luther King because he stood for equality and he preached racial harmony. Event - The Underground Railroad because it showed the caring between the two races and the beginning of the Civil Rights Movement.

Brian K. Hall
Iota Phi Theta Fraternity, Inc. - The most important event to date in my opinion was Jesse Jacksons bid for the Democratic Presidential Nomination. Although he fell short of this particular goal, his bid for nomination shows that blacks have come a long way since slavery. But the struggle is far from over.

Kids Do It Too In South Africa

by Christopher Allen
Nummo Correspondnet

Thousands of Black school children rioted in the orange free state recently, burning shops, offices and cars in the worst anti-government student violence this year.

Police, who used rubber bullets and tear gas to quell the unrest, arrested at least 30 youths on the streets of the Black township of Seeisoville, South of Johannesburg.

According to reports there were at least two thousand students in the initial mob, and hundreds more joined in as the riot and destruction swept through the ghetto, twenty-seven businesses were destroyed and others were damaged, the sources said. Students in many black ghettoes have been growing restive at the government's delay in allowing students to elect representative councils. The outbreak came a day after jailed African National Congress Leader Nelson Mandela announced that he would remain in prison rather than renounce vilent oposition to apartheid.

The united Democratic font, South Africa's largest legal opposition movement, issued a statement saying "we are proud that Mandela remains so absolutely committed to a meaningfully negotiated statement."

Shame, shame, shame on you. Yes, you the so-called "Black" students of the Five College area, especially those of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, for not attending the numerous events planned for Black History Month. Where were you? Please don't tell me studying. Studying only takes up so much of your time. Besides, any truely concerned African student would have made the time by arranging to attend at least a few of the many events, but not you, your too "good" for that.

However, many have time to gossip. Many more have lots of time to make endless excursions to the Hampshire Mall to insure that Africans in America maintain their high levels of consumption and non-exsistent levels of production. And yes, you have to time to party; we can't forgot that. This does not mean that there is anything wrong with partying, but too much of one thing makes Jack a dull boy. And sore enough some of us are truely dumb; some are deaf and blind too. However, the blame is not all on you, after all we have all been programmed to self-destruct.

Many of those who are in positions of so-called "leadership" also failed to attend many of these events. This is surely a tragedy, because the future of the race and the world is in your hands. Well, if you don't change your thinking and behavior, and soon too, we are all surely doomed.

Those "Black" students who did not attend any of these events because of indifference or laziness are guilty of treason for not paying respect to their deceased and living Africans who fought and are still fighting for their liberation. It is a crime that Malcolm X, Martin Luther King Jr, and countless others died so that you could dance up and down with a bunch of white people at a rappers concert. They gave their lives for more than that; they offered their lives so that we, the future, could excell in the things they couldn't. They died so that the race could live and not merely exist.

Unfortunately, this apathy is not new. Last fall there was a Third World Leadership Conference. The turnout was relatively good, especially when the food was served. African students came from all over the New England area, many of whom arrived at 9:30 a.m. when it began, but were were most of you then? Some of us claim that we are Black, but are we and do we want to be? It appears to me that some of us are nothing more than Europeans wearing black face.

Nevertheless, all paraise must go to all of those African students, faculty, and administration who organized and attend any of the events held during the last few weeks. For those of you who have not attended, I suggest that you do and soon too! This is not a pleasant subject to write about, but the truth has to be revealed regardless of who it may hurt or embarass.

Black Mass Communications Project and Nummo members at 14th annual Communications Conference.

In the pleasant Washington weather people had the opportunity to share their thoughts with different people, many of which will continue after the conference. The list of events climaxed with a dinner on Saturday night with FCC commissioner Henry M. Rivera being the guest speaker for the night. Many students were offered jobs in Communication Industries while others recieved internship positions. Among the many recruiters were former University of Massachusetts at Amherst student Merrit Crawford who now works for the Associated Press in Washington D.C. Many companies are still interested in seeking resumes from qualified individuals even though they may not have an immediate opening available. Savage is honored by former pupil

By YADIRA A. BETANCES

Augusta Christine Savage, who many have come to know only as a name attached to the gallery in the New Africa House, came to life when her only private pupil gave a personal profile of her at the rededication ceremony of the gallery on Sunday.

The ceremony started with a blessing by UMass's Afro-American studies professor Dovi Afesi and a dance performance by Patti O'Neal. Ironically, while Afesi spoke of the African belief of the bondage "between the dead, the living and the unborn," Maurice Poplar Lavender, who lived with Savage for 12 years, spoke of experiencing a "high plane level of consciousness" in art between herself and the renowned sculptress.

Lavender is a sculptress, painter, author, illustrator and an art teacher in the Gary, Indiana public school system.

She met Savage at seven years old when her art teacher invited her to hear Savage speak at Roosevelt High School in Gary.

"She was my childhood and adult idol," Lavender said. She added if Savage had not taken it upon herself to beat the odds set against her becoming a sculptress, "I would not be here today...she had the ability to attract the gifted."

A high achiever, Savage successed in a climate that tried to discourage her from becoming a sculptress. She had a strong father figure, poverty and racial prejudice going against her, but "she grew up on the faith," Lavender said.

It was not until twelve years later when they met again. Lavender lost Savage's address and coincidentally found her through a priest whom she met in New York.

During this time laspe, Savage had been very ill and was once pronounced dead. Meanwhile, Lavender said she had held on to Savage mentally in hope of finding her. "My talent was transferred on to you. I could not sculpt if I wanted to," Savage told Lavender.

Savage believed Lavender was the other part of her. Lavender said she was never frightened by Savage's intuitions because some incidents led her to believe the same.

For example, Savage told Lavender that she would establish an art institute. Lavender founded the Gary Art Institute and Children's Art Institute. Savage also predicted that Lavender's work would become religious. It did.

Lavender and Savage's relationship was very intimate and fully respected by Savage's daughter, Irene. "There was always a lesson to learn from Savage," she said.

She said Savage had a good sense of humor. "She once said I was her real daughter." They also shared secrets, like Savage's falling in love with James Walden Johnson.

Before Savage died in 1962, she commanded Lavender "to take over," in encouraging others to pursue their artistic talent. Lavender said sh was honored to attend the rededication ceremony because "she is fulfilling that commitment."

She hopes the rededication "brings about a new beginning, a new awakening of binding together of arts "and the many struggles Augusta Savage had to go through."

Artist Paul Goodnight gives a presentation at the reception given in his honor.

Over one hundred people gathered at the Augusta Savage Memorial Gallery at the University of Massachusetts on Friday, February 8th. The exhibit opened with an exhibit of hand-made dolls by Leslie Jones and Martha Banda. As well as art works of Paul Goodnight. Along with Mr. Goodnight from Boston, the amazing artwork of Mr. Alan Rohan Crite, also from Boston and the scultpure of Mr. Tom Feelings from Brooklyn, New York have been on display since the beginning of last week,

Featured at the reception were the poetry of Ingrid Askew and the dance of Patti O'Niel. Askew, an actor and entertainer, read some of her hilarious yet meaningful poems, stating at one point that she wished every month was Black History Month. "I think it should be part of our everyday life," Askew remarked.

In his address, Mr. Goodnight gave a special recognition to Professor Nelson Stevens of the Afro-American Studies Department at UMass. Goodnight said that Professor Stevens was one of the artists who played a significant role in his life, especially during his initial stage as an artist.

The audience was later captured by the beautiful ballent dance of Ms. Patti O'Niel who performed to the music of her own "Spirit Movement."

One observer, African drummer Stone Montgommery of Boston was "delighted to see the quality of the products on display and the amount of energy that was put into this occasion."

Marilyn E. Santiago, Interim curator of the Gallery, did an excellent job hosting and organizing the program which was very well recieved by those in attendance.

The Negro Ensemble Company, America's foremost black theatre, will present its critically acclaimed production of "A Soldier's Play" on Saturday, February 23, at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Winner of both the Pulitzer Prize for drama and the New York Critics Circle Award, Charles Fuller's myster thriller has been hailed as a triumph in cities throughout America. The 8 p.m. performance is co-sponsored by the New WORLD Theater and the Fine Arts Center at the University.

Set in 1944 at Fort Neal, Louisiana, shots ring out in the night and Technical Sergeant Vernon Waters, a black career Army man, is found dead. In the suspenseful mystery that follows, special Army investigator Richard Davenport finds that to unmask the murderer he will first have to unlock the terrible secret of the dead man's agonized last words -- "They still hate you." A compelling whodunnit, the case takes on a deeper dramatic dimension as it probes a man's search for dignity amid the tangle of old hate and new hope confronting World War II America.

Playing to capacity houses in New York for fourteen months prior to the start of this national tour, "A Soldier's Play" was selected as one of three American productions to appear in Los Angeles in conjunction with the 1984 Summer Olympics International Arts Festival, after which it was a U.S. representative to the prestigious Edinburgh International Festival in Scotland.

Tickets for the February 23 performance are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, at DATATIX outlets, and at the Springfield Civic Center. For ticket information, call the Center Box Office at (413)545-2511. For phone charge reservations, call 1-800-243-4842. Mastercard/Visa accepted.

Education cuts will hurt many, officials say

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

Some state officials in higher education yesterday denounced President Ronald Reagan's proposed budget cuts in financial aid and agreed that the impact on students could be "devastating."

At a conference at Roxbury Community College, John B. Duff, chancellor of higher education, told officials from the Board of Regents, the Association of Independent Colleges and Universities in Massachusetts and the Massachusetts Higher Education Assistance corporation that "because of the proposed cuts, every public and private college in the state and in the nation would be affected," which "would be devastating."

Reagan's proposal, announced last month, asks Congress to deny federally funded guaranteed student loans to college students with family incomes above $32,000, impose a ceiling in aid per year including loans and grants for any student regardless of income and restrict eligibility for Pell Grants to families earning $25,000 or less.

At the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, Arthur Jackson, director of financial aid, said the proposed cutbacks for the fiscal 1986 federal budget would affect approximately 16,000 students at UMass alone.

The cuts would hurt poor people but would also have a harmful affect on middle class families, Duff said.

James True, vice president of governmental relations for AICUM said 36,000 students at private colleges would lose 90 million in the guaranteed student loan program and 22,700 students from public institutions would lose $43 million in the guaranteed student loan program alone.

True added that budget cuts should be made in alphabetical order "from air force to agriculture and down the line."

True said Congress has reacted favorably in the past on funding for higher education but these proposed budget cuts will require "students to get involved."

"We need students to get in touch with Congress because that's where the cuts can be stopped," he said. "In fairness, students should be getting an increase, not a decrease."

Duff said that members of higher education, along with students must be determined "to influence Washington to somehow rethink the budget cuts."

Some student groups may lose funding

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

Six registered student organizations, including the Student Government Association Affirmative Action Office and Nummo News, may lose student government funding next year unless the Undergraduate Student Senate votes otherwise.

The groups failed to submit budget proposals to the budgets committee before the December 14 deadline, Michael Cerrato, assistant to the chairman of the budget committee, said yesterday.

Proposals submitted after this date are "thrown into the trash barrel unless the full student senate explicitly states otherwise," according to tonight's senate agenda.

The other groups whose funding is threatened are: the American Indian Student Association, the Dyslexic Student Organization, UMass chamber choir, and UHURU.

The combined groups received at least $26,003 from the senate last year. Financial information was not available for the choir or UHURU.

"Last year, (budget committee chairman Joseph) Sparks made extremely explicit deadlines," Cerrato said. Eighty-five percent of the RSOs made the deadline, he said.

Cerrato said he expected the senate to approve the consideration of the budgets.

"I imagine it's more of a formality than anything else," he said.

Some budgets last year were submitted for consideration in March. The overall SGA budget must be ready by mid-April.

"Each (late budget) has to be taken up by an individual committee member before being submitted to the overall committee," Cerrato said. "It means a lot of extra budgeteering work."

Grad senate battles new fee

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate will continue to protest the creation of a Universal Resource Fee through a signature drive, meetings with Chancellor Joseph D. Duffy and the Board of Trustees, and a rally scheduled for Monday afternoon.

The Universal Resource Fee, which would spread debt service payments on University buildings such as dormitories, dining commons and others, would be "putting the squeeze on graduate students" to pay for many buildings they don't use, says a poster advertising the rally.

In a letter to Duffey, Sanjiv Dugal , president of the Graduate Student Senate, called the proposed fee "an inequitous burden upon us" which could limit the number of graduate students at the University and affect the quality of teaching in the long run, he said.

The signature drive, which was advertised in Tuesday's Collegian, is an attempt to get as many graduate students' support as possible for the graduate students who will be attending and making a presentation at the Board of Trustees' meeting next Thursday.

"If we get together on this issue, we have a good chance to defeat the proposal, but even if we can't defeat it, the Trustees will know there is a graduate student body, and they will consider how their actions will affect graduate students in the future," said Christos Karastamatis, senate vice-president.

Although the senate considered holding the rally in cooperation with the undergraduate Student Government Association, Dugal said protests would have more of an effect if done separately.

"While undergraduate students at least have the option to stay on campus in the dormitories if they choose, graduate students don't have this option whatsoever," Dugal said.

The rally is scheduled for 12:15 Monday afternoon in front of the Student Union Building.

Today marks first day of Lent as Christians start season of sacrifice

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Correspondent

Today is Ash Wednesday, and to more than half of the University of Massachusetts it signifies the commencement of Lent, the forty days of spiritual renewal before Easter.

Lent represents different things to different people. Most Christians think of it as a time to sacrifice, giving up things such as candy, beer or even homework. It means more than just that. "Lent is in memory of Christ's forty days in the desert before his crucifixion," the Rev. John Smegal of the Newman Center said.

Ash Wednesday and Lent are times of reassessment in preparation for Easter. "Many other religions celebrate the season of Lent, but they don't use ashes," Smegal said. Mardi Gras, meaning Fat Tuesday, is the Tuesday before Ash Wednesday when people celebrate and eat heavily, and then fast the next day.

Robert Halliday, an exchange student from Scotland, said, "In Britain we celebrate Shrove Tuesday to begin Lent." Lent, he said is a time of self-evaluation. Halliday, a Quaker, said his religion puts "less emphasis on specific religious ceremonies," and regards all days as special.

"I don't think it means anything unless you give up something you'll really miss..."
—Jennifer Rapoza, UMass Senior

"A part of prayer life is that you prepare yourself, and part of that is discipline. That could mean fasting, abstaining from meat or giving up ice cream," Smegal said. Students demonstrate this discipline and self-denial in various ways. Jennifer Rapoza, a UMass senior, said, "I don't think it means anything unless you give up something you'll really miss...Seagrams [whiskey], for example."

John Nolan, a senior Russian major, said about Lent, "The reason you give up anything is so you undergo some sort of suffering. It's also a time of great joy and happiness." Nolan went to a Russian Orthodox Church to celebrate Easter, and he said it was "something everybody should do once. It was mystical, out of this world."

South African security forces raid homes, arrest dissidents

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Security police raided offices and homes in cities across the country yesterday arresting six opponents of race segregation on warrants for high treason.

Seven blacks were killed, police said, in a second day of battles between police and squatters in a shantytown outside Cape Town, bringing the two-day death toll to 13.

The raids and arrests, one of the severest apartheid crackdowns in years, set the stage for the largest treason trial since the late 1950s. At that time the government unsuccessfully prosecuted 156 opponents of South Africa's whites-only rule in a single court case.

Lt. Vic Haynes of police headquarters in Pretoria confirmed the treason arrests. Groups opposed to South Africa's apartheid, or institutionalized racial segregation, said several other people were held for questioning. But Haynes said only one other person was taken into custody, Tom Manthata, an employee of the South African Council of Churches. He was detained without charge.

Those arrested were identified as Albertina Sisulu, co-president of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid group and wife of jailed African National Congress leader Walter Sisulu; Sam Kikine and Isaac Ngcobo, of the South African Allied Workers Union; Ismael Mohamed of the front's Transvaal Province branch, and Frank Chikane and Cassim Saloojee, both senior officials of the Democratic Front.

Haynes said the arrests resulted from the same investigation that led to treason charges last year against eight other foes of the white government's race policies, and the 14 probably would be tried together.

Shultz says Nicaragua is 'behind the Iron Curtain'

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of State George Shultz yesterday described the Sandinista leadership in Nicaragua as a "bad news government" and said the Reagan administration is determined to prevent the permanent installation of a Soviet-dominated regime anywhere in Central America.

"I see no reason why we should slam the door on people just because they have been taken behind the Iron Curtain," Shultz said.

Defending the administration's policy of covert aid for rightist "contra" guerrillas, the secretary said he rejects the idea that once a Soviet-supported government is established in Latin America, it can never be changed.

"We do have a moral duty to support people who are trying to bring about freedom in their country," Shultz said. "While we are promoting democratic reform throughout Central America, the Soviet Union and Cuba are abetting the establishment of a communist dictatorship in Nicaragua."

Shultz testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee on the administration's $14.8 billion military and economic foreign aid package for fiscal year 1986.

There is deep opposition to a resumption of aid to the contras among members of the Democratic-controlled committee, and Shultz fended off questions from a number of members critical of administration policies in Central America.

In about a month, Congress is expected to vote on whether to restore $14 million in covert aid to the Nicaraguan guerrillas.

Urging Shultz to sponsor multilateral negotiations among Latin American countries with Nicaragua, Rep. Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass., said, "Surely the struggle for freedom should be something more than a struggle between our terrorists and their terrorists."

Discussion opens in Senate on appointment of Meese

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate opened debate on Attorney General-designate Edwin Meese III's nomination yesterday after Majority Leader Robert Dole told colleagues they should not "hold the Meese nomination hostage" to demands for emergency farm credit legislation.

Senators from agricultural states allowed the debate on the controversial appointment to proceed, but held out the possibility of a filibuster to prevent a vote on Meese until their demands are met.

"The Justice Department seems to be operating quite well," said Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa. "Why is it more important for us to take the time to act on the Meese nomination than it is to take up important farm legislation?"

"Ed Meese has been waiting a year now...," Dole replied. "We have been trying to solve the farm crisis for the last 40 years. ... There are a lot of ideas. They haven't jelled.

"We've started the process to go over a number of suggestions of the farm problem, and we hope that progress can be made," the Kansas Republican said. "And I would hope we would not hold the Meese nomination hostage."

Earlier, Dole predicted that Meese would be confirmed by a comfortable 2-to-1 margin to become the nation's 75th attorney general, despite lingering question among some Democrats about the presidential counselor's fitness to serve.

"Ed Meese will be confirmed by the full Senate and I expect about 65-70 votes for him" in the 100-member Senate. Dole had said in a statement released in advance of the debate. "He's been scrutinized about as much as anybody has been in a long time. But that will be behind him after this week."

Supreme Court will review school prayer meeting ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court said it will consider letting public schools allow students to meet during school hours for prayer and religious worship.

The justices, urged on by the Reagan administration, said it will review a ruling that banned such meetings at a Williamsport, Pa., high school even though the school allows students to conduct virtually all types of non-religious meetings during the same periods.

Administration lawyers attacked a federal appeals court's ban on the meetings, saying it casts constitutional doubt on a new federal law requiring public schools to provide "equal access" for student religious groups.

The high court's decision is expected sometime next year.

Two fishermen lost off Cape; Coast Guard search fruitless

BOSTON [AP]—The Coast Guard searched by air and by sea off Cape Cod without success yesterday for some sign of two fishermen lost overboard after a rogue wave swamped their crippled boat.

"They have not spotted anything," said spokeswoman Petty Officer 2nd Class Carolyn Feldman, who said the search was called off at 10 a.m. after covering the icy Atlantic 90 miles offshore.

They sought some indication f the fate o f rank Cody of Newfoundland and Herb Spiney of Jamestown, R.I., crew members on the ill-fated 100-foot dragger Challenge out of Boston.

From Beijing's Friendship Hotel to HRTA at UMass

Women On Campus

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

Wang Yen-Ning first became interested in hotel management while she was working six days a week as a waitress in Beuing's Friendship Hotel. Within several months, she found herself promoted to a manager's position partly because she loved to speak English with the restaurant's foreign clients.

Two years later, the hotel sent her to learn English at a two-year university in Beuing, and today Yen-Ning, or Jenny as she is called in America, is a graduate student at the University of Massachusetts studying hotel management.

Wang, a resident of Beuing, has been immersed in American culture since her arrival in September, but has found that people here are not as interested in her culture as she is in theirs.

"Students here are young and most of them don't know anything about China," Wang said. "Not many people ask me about where I'm from."

Nevertheless, Wang, 25, continues to learn about American culture through classes and her job as housemother for Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority. Her work for the sorority has given her a chance to make friends and to finance her stay here at UMass.

Her responsibilities include supervising the women's household chores and contacting repair people to fix house belongings.

"The women at the sorority are really nice," Wang said, adding that often they have to tell her who to call for a specific problem before she knows what to do.

"I feel a lot of pressure studying in a different culture," Wang said. She takes four classes and said she spends a great deal of time with a "big dictionary," translating her textbooks and lecture notes.

"I miss life in China," she said. "I had a lot of time to play on many sports teams. I was always in the middle of many people and did things with them." Her academic pressures have limited her participation in extra-curricular activities here, she said.

"I spend a lot of time studying because I don't know a lot of the names and equipment we use in lab," Wang said. She said some of the cooking equipment she uses in class is not used at all in China.

However, the most basic things she learns here in Hotel Management will be welcome in China's growing tourism industry. "At the Friendship Hotel, they didn't even know how to make coffee," she said. "A lot of people complained about it. Now I'm learning to make it properly."

When she returns to China in approximately two years, Wang said she hopes to work in a hotel chain and use the hotel management skills she has learned at UMass.

Officers may seek SGA presidency

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

The speaker and treasurer of the Undergraduate Student Senate have joined four other candidacies in signing out nomination papers yesterday as co-candidates for Student Government Association president.

Stacey Roth and Dan Burgess, Rod Snelling and Bill Pyne, Neil McCabe and Joel Rabinowitz each signed out papers as co-candidates Thursday, when the forms were made available. Bill Collins filed as a solo candidate.

Chris Sullivan, the speaker of the senate, and John Mooradian, the senate treasurer; were joined yesterday by Neil McCabe and Scott Sheridan, and Daniel Holway and Joshua Semeter, in taking out the forms.

McCabe said he was withdrawing from both candidacies he was involved in to support unofficial candidates Kim Hackett and Jordan Rosner. Hackett confirmed that she would announce their candidacy today.

"We wanted some opposition to the radicals," McCabe said, "...some opposition to what they do with student funds."

McCabe said his original candidacy with Rabinowitz would have been conducted like the Gumby/Camel campaign last year, with Larry Bird and Doug Flutie as the symbols instead.

"There would be no way we could lose," he said.

Mooradian said he was not certain he would stay in the campaign, but that he and Sullivan are in a "perfect position to know what's going on" in student government.

"I don't necessarily have to graduate yet," he said. Mooradian said he is a senior. Sullivan said that he is also a senior, but that he plans to stay at UMass one more semester.

Sullivan said if he were to go through with the nomination, he would retire from the speaker's position before handing in nomination forms. Mooradian said he would quit as treasurer before being sworn in, if he won.

Bill Pyne was the only other candidate who would comment yesterday. "I have to agree with Bill Collins, someone has to make this election fun," he said.

Craig McDermott, the elections coordinator, said that 32 Campus Center Board of Governers seats were available, no nomination papers for the BOG have been signed out yet.

There are also about 35 senate seats opening up, McDermott said.

Search closes for communications aide

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

A candidate will be recommended by early March for the new position of associate to the vice-chancellor for university relations and development, the chairman of the search committee said yesterday.

Larry G. Benedict, director of academic support services, said the committee has interviewed five of six candidates for the position will soon recommend one candidate to Vice-Chancellor Deirdre Ling.

Benedict said the newly-created position will improve internal University communications, coordinate communications with constituencies outside the University, and organize campus groups to work together on University projects.

"We don't always know what other (departments) are doing," Benedict said. "This person will bring all constituent forces together on campus to eliminate non-communication and overlaps."

"This person will also figure out how to approach public relations, the things to highlight, and how best we can get those programs across outside the University," he said.

The position will ultimately benefit the University by attracting more students, outside funding, an improved reputation, and support from the state Legislature, Benedict said.

Ling explained the evaluation and informational method that has been used to help with the final selection of a candidate. Prospective candidates have met over dinner with search committee members, a faculty member and a student.

The purpose of these dinners, Benedict said, is to provide an opportunity to observe the candidate less formally and to allow the candidate to obtain information about the University from different sources.

The candidate search began last September and yielded about 115 applications, he said. Although there were some applications from within the University, none were among the six final candidates.

Ling said funding for the new position came from funds already allocated to her department.

"I've been very conscious that professional positions are in need in the academic community," LING SAID. "I restructured a vacant position" to fund this position

Three injuries sustained in two-car Amherst crash

A two-car collision at the intersection of Route 116 and Meadow Street left three people injured Monday, Amherst Police said.

A 46-year-old South Deerfield woman suffered head, neck and back injuries when she was allegedly cut off by a second vehicle attempting to make a left turn across her lane, police said.

Two passengers were hurt in the second car and were treated for leg and chest injuries. The driver of that vehicle was charged with failure to use care when turning.

The collision required the assistance of wreckers and ambulances, as well as a fire engine for spilled gas in the roadway.

In other police action, two Amherst girls were reported missing after not returning home Monday night. Foul play is not suspected and police believe the girls left on their own after a family argument.

One was described as 15 years old, 5'2" tall, and about 110 lbs. with dark brown hair and eyes. The second girl is 16 years old, 5'5", weighing about 150 lbs. with light brown hair and blue eyes.

Police seize drugs in Southwest during search for man's ID

Several drug-related charges may be issued against a non-student after police searched the room of a John Adams resident and found drugs and paraphernalia, police said.

The 20-year-old Holliston man was arrested for trespassing on University property Monday morning after he had previously been issued a notice by University of Massachusetts police. Police said he and another man showed false identification when police questioned them in parking lot 50 by the dormitory.

Police said they obtained a search warrant for his identification and found illegal drugs and paraphernalia in a student's room. Other people may be charged as a result of the discovery of the drugs. The man was arraigned in court Tuesday morning.

In other police action, two state maintenance trucks were vandalized inside Warren McGuirk stadium sometime between Friday afternoon and Monday morning. Both trucks' windows were smashed and their shift levers broken. Total damage to both trucks is $1,000.

Who will be next to address happy graduates?

Graduation speaker wanted

Vice chancellor accepting entries from seniors

By MICHELLE SEGALL
Collegian Staff

The spring semester is only three weeks old, but plans are under way to select the student speaker for the 1985 commencement.

Any graduating senior can apply to be student speaker and selection is based on a proposal submitted to the Office of Student Affairs.

"It's wide open," said Trey Williams, assistant to the vice chancellor for student affairs, who coordinates the competition.

The student selected "attends all the gala that goes along with commencement—they're a part of it," Williams said.

This "gala" includes an invitation to the chancellor's dinner the night before the ceremony and the president's luncheon following commencement. The student speaker will sit at the podium and is allowed to have two guests sit at the V.I.P. tent.

"We read all the proposals. If it's halfway decent, we ask those people to come in and read it to us," Williams said.

The selection team is made up of both students and staff. Williams traditionally asks the Collegian editor-in-chief and one of the Student Government Association's co-presidents to be a part of the team. From there, Williams picks other students and staff to join the committee.

Although the process is open to any graduating senior, there are not many applicants. "I've been disappointed with the number of students applying over the past two years," Williams said.

Out of the 2200 students who graduated last year only 15 people applied.

The most successful speeches in the past have been those dealing with their experience throughout college, he added, because others can identify with the topic.

Applicants for student speaker must submit a double spaced, three-page proposal to the student affairs office by March 13. The selection will be made around March 22.

Thirty thousand people attended last year's graduation, and the same amount is expected this year, Williams said.

Chancellor's residence serves as a faculty art gallery

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Several faculty members of the University of Massachusetts art department have had some of their work displayed since the spring of 1983 at an unusual gallery: Chancellor Joseph Duffey's residence at Orchard Hill.

George Wardlaw, chairman of the art department, said it was the chancellor's idea to display faculty work in the residence.

"It started out by my showing the chancellor slides of the faculty work," Wardlaw said. "Then they were interested in seeing the work."

Duffey said he and his wife wanted to have faculty work displayed.

"We asked Hugh Davies of the University Gallery to look at the house," Duffey said. "Then we studied slides and decided."

There are nine paintings and one sculpture in the public rooms of the house and one sculpture in the yard which was created by a UMass graduate.

"This school has a wonderful faculty in the fine arts and I think the students and others should be reminded of it," Duffey said.

Duffey said that despite all the emphasis placed on high technology and computers, "this is a very important part of the University."

The chancellor served as a board member for the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in 1977 and he was Chairman of the Federal Council on the Arts and Humanities from 1977 to 1981.

After Duffey and his wife, Washington lobbyist Anne Wexeler, suggested displaying faculty art work, a three-member committee was formed to collect work submitted by the faculty.

Wardlaw, who headed the committee and who has his sculpture "Reflections: Time Log" on display, said, "It has a positive force in showing the faculty's work in a home context rather than a museum or gallery context."

"The chancellor's home has been visited by I don't krow how many hundreds of people," Wardlaw said. He added, "Now many people say to me that they see my work and the response has been positive."

John Townsend, an art professor who has a painting titled "After Mexico" displayed, said he thought it was a nice gesture on Duffey's part to display faculty work.

"He thought he'd like to give the art department the work in the public eye," Townsend said. He added, "I've been rather pleased because many people have commented on my work."

Ursula Darland, who was hired by the University to renovate the chancellor's residence, said she suggested to Duffey some art ideas.

"I suggested the artwork and left it to the art department since they're experts," Darland said.

Wardlaw said the committee that was formed to display the art work originally agreed to change the work on an annual basis.

"I'm in the process of collecting work by the faculty to be viewed by the chancellor," Wardlaw said. He added, "I think the chancellor would like new work there."

Works by University of Massachusetts art department faculty, including the rendering of Robert Frost at right, are on exhibit at Chancellor Joseph Duffey's home.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Shouldn't they care?

Campus controversies have a way of cropping up suddenly and then, to the administration's relief, fading from the public consciousness almost as quickly. A case in point is the issue of asbestos in the Campus Center: it was removed completely last winter, we were told, and that's that. Another example is the UMass power plant, which has been cited for violation of the Clean Air Act for eight years. And now administrators and the faculty senate rules committee are lying low, waiting for the public storm created by the uncovering of a report on the Yvette Henry arrest to blow over.

The rules committee, which commissioned the report from the faculty senate Committee on the Status of Minorities a year ago, decided to inform only a select few of the panel's conclusions: that Henry suffered violations of her civil rights as a suspect in one of 16 fires in Crampton dormitory during fall 1983, that she received especially harsh treatment because she is black, and that UMass officials handled the case insensitively and irresponsibly.

The Collegian obtained a copy of the document last week and printed excerpts the day the Committee on the Status of Minorities was to present its annual report to the faculty senate. Committee chairman Castellano Turner was appropriately "shocked that not one faculty [senator] raised a question" about why the report was not made public. The conclusion to be drawn is a disturbing one: that nobody in the faculty senate is very interested in encouraging the kind of open discussion of the Henry case that the report was intended to promote.

So in addition to using Henry's $13-million lawsuits against UMass and law enforcement officials as a convenient reason to avoid debate and shirk accountability, at least until the litigation is over, University administrators can continue to plead ignorance.

Associate Dean of Students Robert N. Brooks said that he and Dean of Students William F. Field, who was interviewed by Turner's committee, would very much like to read the report. In the meantime, Brooks said Thursday, "I'm very reluctant to discuss a report I haven't seen."

Surely Director of Public Safety Gerald T. O'Neil, whose first response was, "What report?" when asked if he had seen it, is interested in what the committee concluded about his role in the Henry case. O'Neil's associate/director, Philip J. Cavanaugh, would also no doubt like to know how his conduct was assessed, as would Hampshire County District Attorney W. Michael Ryan, who charged Henry with arson and later dropped the charges for lack of evidence.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey has seen the report; it was sent to him last August along with a letter from the faculty senate secretary asking him what he thought should be done with it. Duffey was silent for six months, then told the faculty senate last week that he'd like to discuss it but his lawyers told him not to.

The administration will eventually have to respond to the report. Though it was not intended as a litigation tool, Henry's lawyers will use it against UMass whether the rules committee makes it public or not. But it is unfortunate that while administrators wait for the latest burst of bad public relations to subside, faculty senators send a silent message to all of us that possible violations of a student's civil rights don't bother them.

Time to break their habit

Mary Cresse

When I attended a large private university in Boston, administrative secrecy was the norm, even a joke; students bowed mockingly when spotting the president on the street; the more tactless hooked their elbows behind their backs when "King John" passed.

The year I worked at the student-run daily paper, first-time reporters were routinely taken aside and told that because they attended a private university, the administration could "pull all the crap they want." And get away with it--unchecked. Officials concealed and misled us on such things as university expansion plans, use of school monies and details of the ever-present faculty/administration salary hassles. They even had their own newspaper, called, imperialistically, The World.

"University officials could not be reached for comment." In consideration of the discretion needed for upcoming court cases and the like, silence is understandable. But not all the time.

While students have the responsibility to keep themselves aware of occurrences at their own school, the administration should nevertheless exercise its obligation to inform us of relevant things we couldn't possibly know, like the findings of committee reports.

What is most discouraging is the University's ignorance of the fact that commen-

We at UMass are losing the sense of trust we used to have in one another, and it's showing up in devastating and costly results.

We frosh were therefore advised to remain always suspicious. If we weren't watchful, BU could easily raise our yearly tuition above the already ridiculous $10,000 or expand into Rhode Island, for all we were told.

We UMass students often take for granted what BU students don't have--the constitutional right [as students at a state-created school] to know exactly what our school is up to. In light of the recent Board of Governors/Jack DeNyse mess and the more appalling Yvette Henry rights report [catch the irony of the label here], it seems the University's forgetting and abusing our student right to know is becoming a pattern instead of a fluke.

I give as Exhibits A and B the DeNyse and Henry embarrassments; in corroboration, I present such things as the University's silence on the upcoming reinstatement of Peter Kumar, an Indian professor who after eight years has finally won his battle against racial discriminiation. Most recently, a home economics professor is alleging the University denied him tenure because of a dispute of his controversial views on sex.

All or most of this is presented in the Collegian with the painfully ubiquitous phrase, ting on an issue will serve not to incriminate anyone but to "round out" the issue so students, faculty and others usually in the dark could be in a position to make fair judgments. Administrative silence leaves us with no way of discerning a valid accusation from a vicious slur, a viable source from a crackpot.

We are forced to second-guess, to assume. The University told us they did not violate the rights of Yvette Henry. Lo, comes the report. Now what are we supposed to believe when the University tells us they're now working on hiring more women and minorities? In another year will there be another "official" report stating that the University has reneged on that count, too?

We at UMass are losing the sense of trust we used to have in one another, and it's showing up in devastating and costly results. Yvette Henry is suing for $12 million.

And I thought I left all that crap behind me when I transferred.

By the way, tuition at BU is up to almost $12,000. John Silber is buying up Allston and aiming for a position with Reagan.

I rest my case.

Dean's exhibit a glittering nightmare

By MICHAEL PHILLIPS
Collegian Correspondent

Flanders' and Swan's little ditty on the wonders of modern interior design(specifically the verse about nailing upturned bottle tops to the floor in order to create the sensation of walking on upturned bottle tops) echoed around the back of my mind. For towards the end of the opening night of Peter Dean's show at Hampden Gallery, the artist, like some lusting magpie, was rushing around frantically searching for bottle tops. Far from being nailed to the floor they were to be incorporated, like so many other glittering things, to the ooze of paint adhered to the walls.

And what paint. Tubes of the stuff, in brilliant technicolor. In the glare, embroiled deep within the color, hung images. Swimming in the brilliance, all sprinkled with glitter, bodies heaved squeezed out of some vaguely biblical association. Add to all of the above the peculiar sensation of walking on upturned bottle tops nailed to the floor.

Yet my sensations deceived me. They were nails, without bottle tops. Apparently spewed from canvas, rusty nails littered the floor. Hundreds of them crucified the frame to the canvas, and a pierced, violently blinding image stabbed back at the eyes. The paintings assault the onlooker. They are concentrations of the scenes that haunt our daily lives. Like some recurring nightmare, each frame holds a lens or mirror to our less pleasent preoccupations.

A mixture of myth and sub-culture, the pictures incorporate the odd archaetypical image with the more recent fashions in sub-cultural dress sense. All of this brings into sharp focus our bestiality and our attempts to clothe it in ritual and fashion. These paintings perform the function of both mirror and window. With his bright array of color and vivid images, Dean makes no bones that his paintings are reflections in a mirror so perfect we can see right through it. Like some Medieval stained glass window, they depict hell on Earth, pictures of evil, on glass which redily reflects the onlooker's image. Dean's paintings cut deep, exposing the raw flesh of our animal selves decorated in the trappings of our social activity.

Dean himself came across as a quiet unpretentious man, with almost a comic innocent enthusiasm. In fact the whole opening had a rather comic, surreal feel to it. The merry throng tippling the alcohol and cheese dip, the artist running around grabbing everyone's bottle tops, played to the polite conversation that accompanies such functions.

All this activity was totally dominated by large and colorful images of decadence, social decay and violence. Yet everyone seemed oblivious to the mayhem on the walls.

Nothing feels so safe as a social gathering. When two or three or more are gathered together, when the wine flows, who cares?

The Department of Music and Dance at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst will present flutist Joanne Tanner and bassoonist Frank Morelli in a faculty recital on Sunday, February 24, 8:00 p.m. at Benzanson Recital Hall.

Linda Thompson's latest effort One Clear Moment

Thompson on her own

ONE CLEAR MOMENT
Linda Thompson
Warner Brothers Records

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

One Clear Moment is a tough album to figure out. Linda Thompson, singer, has been recently estranged from her husband Richard, with whom she had sung music at the forefront of British folk-rock. Although a lot of the vocal tracks sound like her older colaberative material, the completed songs definitely do not.

As if she wished to remove herself as much as possible from guitar playing husband Richard, she uses little guitar on this album. She relys instead on keyboards and synthesizers. The album has that "Modern" sound about it. In the process it loses a lot of the subtlety which marked her previous works.

Yet for all its overproduction and reliance on simple tried and true formulas for simple emotional manipulation (keyboards in minor keys, etc.), the album works on a certain level. In some ways it sounds like a good Carly Simon album. There is an intimacy to it that makes one want to give old Linda a break. If I don't reject the album immediately it is because I am familiar, although not personally, with the man she is singing about. A lot of the lyrics, which could otherwise be dismissed as trite (not cliche), therefore take on enough meaning to give some credence to them.

Most of the songs on One Clear Moment are about the end of her relationship with Richard (for his argument listen to Hand of Kindness)and the feelings which resulted from said breakup. Obviously there is pain all around. "I close my ears/I close my eyes/I still hear your voice/And it's telling me lies." "It's weird." Those words have stayed with me for days and I can't figure out why. It has got to be the familiarity of both people in the song, because my usual attitude would be, "oh, come on."

mentioning. If you're expecting classic Linda Thompson, beware. For what these songs are, they are good, but they are produced, That's Hollywood. At any rate the aforementioned 'Telling me Lies' is good, as is its twin 'In Love with the Flame.' 'Lover Won't You Throw Me a Line' is another one of those lost-at-sea type songs, really pretty harrowing, but as uaual a little overproduced. The single "Can't Stop the Girl" is acceptable but sounds like the producers are trying to groom her for the Pat Benatar market. And there we get to the heart of the problem with this album.

Too many of the songs sound like she is being groomed for soft rock radio stations, the kind that play Culture Club.

So what does all this mean? This isn't an album for people who like folk music. This is an album for people who like the sound of hip electronic music. Although the mixes on some of the songs are really nice pastiches, especially the bass playing, most of them are a little too much or too little. Despite this the album has some kind of emotional appeal and therefore is somewhat worthwhile if you are into that kind of thing.

Mrs. Soffel: gothic fun

By SUE IZZO
Collegian Correspondent

A poetic and almost mystical film of obsessive and tragic love seems to be a fitting description of Gillian Armstrong's new film, Mrs. Soffel, which opened last Friday at the Dead Mall (Mountain Farms Mall).

Prison bars separate the two ill-fated lovers, Ed Bissell (Mel Gibson) and Mrs. Soffel (Diane Keaton), in this passionate and exciting love story about two star-crossed lovers in Pittsburg in 1901. Through the course of this film we, the audience, are taken through the snags and the edge-of-your-seat suspense brought on by this odd combination of lovers and their flight to freedom. Gibson and Keaton work well together and create scenes filled with enough tension to melt the prison bars themselves.

Mel Gibson comes off with a certain amount of force as the convicted murderer, Ed Bissell. One of the first things that the audience becomes aware of in his performance is the way he carries off his distinct northeastern accent. It takes a little getting used to, but, overall, it has a definite believability. I'm not sure whether it was his acting ability or his good looks that let him get away with his over-cliched "compassionate bad-boy" role, though. You can decide for yourself on that one, I don't want to offend anyone.

Diane Keaton plays the character of Mrs. Soffel, the bible-yielding warden's wife, with the strength the part deserved. I couldn't help but wonder, however, if Keaton's performance wasn't too modernistic for a woman of the turn of the century. She seemed almost too strong and opinionated for a woman of her time. Even so, it worked well with Gibson's role and provided a firm foundation for the rest of the film to work from.

Some might say that this film is too gothic in its content, but, at the same time, they should look at the director's focus in the film.In Mrs. Soffel, Armstrong seems to be directing with the intensity of the two lovers in mind, as if the story was being told by one or both of them, as they view their relationship. With this, one can excuse some of the extreme melodrama that is evident in this film.

I was happy to find that, however melodramatic the film tended to become, the love scenes didn't interrupt the action or the storyline. They were handled very tastefully and it was a relief to be able to feel the intensity of a love, instead of frankly witnessing it frequently throughout the film.

All in all, I must say that I enjoyed this film. It does not have the powerfulness of Armstrong's first film, My Brilliant Career, but it still contains the well-thought-out style and beautifully photographed scenes that were evident in her first film. While watching this film, one must look past the characteristic cliches like Diane Keaton's "God-fearing heroine" and Mel Gibson's "kind-hearted criminal," and notice the fine acting and the classic directing of Gillian Armstrong. Even though this may not be her finest film to date, Mrs. Soffel is not a film to be missed.

'Angel of Death' seen alive in '82

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nazi war criminal Joseph Mengele was known to be alive in 1982 and living as a beekeeper in Paraguay, a leader of the hunt for the Auschwitz death camp doctor told Congress yesterday.

Mengele, known as the " Angel of Death" in the Polish death factory where an estimated 3 million Jews perished in the Holocaust during World War II, was living at a site 40 miles outside the Paraguayan capital of Asuncion, said Rabbi Marvin Hier at a congressional hearing.

Hier, dean of the Simon Wiesenthal Center of Los Angeles and a leader of the recently intensified effort to find Mengele, testified along with D'Amato at a meeting of the Senate Judiciary juvenule justice subcommittee.

A West German warrant for Mengele's arrest is still outstanding and Attorney General William French Smith last month ordered the Justice Department to try to locate Mengele.

Mengele, who would be 73 if he is still alive, lived for some time in Paraguay, according to information at the hearing, despite official statements by that South American government that Mengele has long since moved away.

Jumbo jet plummets

SAN FRANCISCO [AP]—A China Airlines jumbo jet dropped 32,000 feet yesterday, injuring more than 50 passengers and forcing the pilot to make an emergency landing here, officials said.

The Boeing 747, with 400 people aboard, hit a wind shear—a rapid change in wind speed and direction—and dropped from cruising altitude of 41,000 feet to 9,000 feet, according to Ron Wilson, a spokesman for San Francisco International Airport.

At least two people were hospitalized, and 50 were treated at the airport medical facility for minor injuries, said Gary Webber, airport police spokesman.

Flight No. 6, bound for Los Angeles from Taipei, Taiwan, landed here at 12:38 p.m. Airport officials said the plane sustained extensive damage to the doors that lock the landing gear into the aircraft body. A chunk also was missing from one of the plane's control surfaces.

FACTORY FLAMES— Fire rages last night in a Cambridge factory building. The five-alarm blaze forced the evacuation of nearby residents.

Pot-smoking mom to keep kids

HOLYOKE (AP) - A woman accused by a judge of being an unfit mother because she admitted smoking marijuana was allowed to keep her children yesterday.

Judge Allan McGuane accepted a social worker's report that Sheila Floyd is a fit mother. No explanation was given why Judge Michael J. Donohue, who was criticized for questioning Floyd without advising her of her constitutional rights, was not present at yesterday's proceeding.

Floyd, who said she believed she had to answer the judge's questions even though she had no attorney present, said she was relieved at McGuane's decision.

"That's how it should have been from the beginning," said Ms. Floyd, who has three children.

Dukakis blasts Reagan budget

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis released a study of president Reagan's spending proposals yesterday and accused the administration of waging an all-out assault on essential domestic programs.

The state and its 351 cities and towns would lose $518 million if Congress accepts the Reagan budget plan for federal fiscal year 1986, which starts Oct. 1, according to the analysis by the governor's Office of Federal Relations.

The state would lose $203 million if Reagan succeeds in cutting or eliminating grants for jobs, transit, community development and other purposes, according to the study.

Municipalities would lose $136 million, primarily loss of General Revenue Sharing.

Reagan cuts in higher education spending would result in loss of about $98 million in Guaranteed Student Loans. The state study said 40,000 students are counting on those funds to stay in college.

"Over the past five years, the Reagan administration has waged an all-out assault on the federal domestic spending programs that provide basic services and benefits to the citizens of Massachusetts," the report said.

The 216-page study was intended to provide details to back up assertions Dukakis and his supporters have been making since Reagan released his spending plan two weeks ago.

Massachusetts Republican leaders received the report too late in the day to comment. But House Minority Leader William Robinson of Melrose has said the state will probably have a large enough surplus to offset federal cuts.

Reagan's budget calls for nearly $40 billion in spending cuts for the 1986 fiscal year, coupled with an increase of $30 billion in defense spending.

Overall, Reagan proposes to spend $973 billion and projects revenues of $793 billion.

For Massachusetts, Dukakis has proposed a balanced budget of $8.68 billion for the new fiscal year, which starts July 1, and he projects a $137 million surplus at the end of the current 12-month spending cycle.

In a brief foreward to the report, the Democratic governor also faulted the Republican president for ignoring the federal deficit.

Gimelstob fighting big internal problems at GW

Dan Leberfeld

Talk about a chip off the old block.

Gerry Gimelstob, the fourth year head coach of George Washington, is one of 13 former assistants of Indiana coach Bobby Knight currently in the college basketball coaching ranks. Of the 13 which include Dave Bliss of SMU and Mike Krzyewski of Duke, none resemble Knight in terms of irascibility more than Gimelstob.

The 33 year old Colonial mentor has been amid controversy ever since he took the job. However, over the last two seasons, a number of negative occurences have taken place in this man's coaching life, more than the controversial knight could conjure up.

Here's the dirty laundry list: a fight with Temple coach John Chaney; three significant players transfers: Bernard Woodside (LSU), Tim Dawson (Miami, Fla.) and Terry Silas (South Alabama); a fight with the school's marketing director Manny Rosenberg over tickets to a tennis tournament; banned from Baltimore's Dunbar High School; seven players tell all to a Washington Post reporter about problem's with Gimelstob and the program; benches three starters Troy Webster, Darryl Webster (no relation) and Chester Wood for disciplinary reasons and the team proceeds to lose to lowly Penn State and then to UMass.

Insiders say that this graduate of the Bobby Knight school of behavior is on his last leg at GW.

Hoop Happenings:...Stockbridge School of Agriculture has one of the premier basketball coaches in former UMass coach Jack Leaman. Leaman, who coached the Minutemen from 1966-79 and compiled a record of 217-126, is considered on the best strategists anywhere....John Chaney was coach at, of all places, Cheney (Pa.) State before taking over at Temple....The Fordham-Iona basketball rivalry is as heated as you will find. In a contest this year a brawl broke out. A few years back after one of their hot contests, Iona's Tony Hargrave's mother was so infuriated at what she thought was terrible officiating, she beat the referee with her shoe....UMass coach Ronnie Gerlufsen's tutelage of the Minutemen this season is worthy of Atlantic 10 Basketball yearbook coach of the year honors. This is a team that Blue Ribbon College said would suffer through doom and gloom. They said, "anything higher than eighth place in the Atlantic 10 would be a miracle."...For the last few seasons the Rhode Island Rams have been the dregs of the Atlantic 10. Never fear Ram fans, with new coach Brendan Malone at the helm, losing should become a thing of the past. Malone landed among others Dwayne Washington and Rafael Addison while an assistant at Syracuse. During his short stay thus far in Kingston, he has landed three bluechip recruits. As Dick Vitale would say, "He could sell Raid to a roach."...Speaking of Vitale who better to end with than the charismatic ESPN color commentator. Mike Giomi, who was kicked off Knight's Indiana Hoosiers because of bad academic standing, is rumoured to be heading to mild mannered Jim Valvano and his North Carolina State Wolfpack. Vitale on Giomi's possible switch of coaches, "it is like going from playing under General Patton to playing under Sgt. Bilko."

ESPN commentator Dick Vital

Georgia and BC climb into Top 20

The University of Georgia is the first Southeastern Conference team in seven weeks to be ranked in The Associated Press basketball poll.

Georgia was one of three new teams in the Second Ten this week, coming in at No. 18, as the top of the rankings remained much the same with St. John's, Georgetown and Michigan holding the top three spots. Virginia Commonwealth moved in at No. 17 after an absence of three weeks, while Boston College, out of the Top 20 for four weeks, returned at No. 20.

Georgia, 17-6, was ranked for the first time this year despite a loss last week to Vanderbilt. The Bulldogs have won eight of their last 10 games.

St. John's kept its top ranking by running its winning streak to 17 with three victories. The Redmen, 22-1, received 59 first-place votes.

Sports Notices

There will be a meeting for anyone interested in becoming a candidate for the women's tennis team, at 7 p.m. tonight in NOPE gym in the tennis office (first floor).

Attention sports staff members: there will be a general staff meeting tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the newsroom. You must attend or face the wrath of Tony Betros, who has given numerous savage beatings to both Hulk Hogan and Roddy Piper, both ex Collegian staffers.

Any correspondents wishing to make staff should attend.

Minutewomen trip URI, 74-68

Hebel gets 21 in third straight win

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Correspondent

Barbara Hebel poured in a season high 21 points and Juanita Matthews came off the bench to add 19 to lead the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team to a 74-68 win over the University of Rhode Island last night at Amherst College.

It was the first Atlantic 10 victory for the Minutewomen (12-13) this season against five losses.

It was a game of streaks as each team took turns dominating play. URI had the first run, early in the first half. With UMass up 7-2, the Rams then went on a hot streak of 24-4 putting them up 26-11.

UMass went on a tear of its own, scoring ten unanswered points. The two teams traded baskets the rest of the way and went into the locker rooms at halftime with the Minutewomen trailing by seven, 36-29.

Both teams came out in the second half playing sloppy basketball, throwing the ball away and missing easy inside shots. Matthews broke the ice at 17:43 and proceeded to go on a ministreak of her own scoring eight straight points.

Coach Barbara Stevens was pleased with Matthews play. "She dug in and played some tough defense and contributed to the offense at key times," said Stevens. "We needed that type of game from her."

UMass took the lead for good, 40-38, on a pretty turn around jumper by Matthews off the fast break.

The Minutewomen took their biggest lead on a ten-footer by Fitzgerald that made it 58-45 with eight minutes to go.

Hebel was five-of-11 from the field, Karen Fitzgerald had ten points with Jerrie Bernier adding nine. Sue Burtoft had eight rebounds and nine points. The Rams, 12-13, were led by a great performance by the league's leading scorer, Michelle Washington, with 30 points and 11 rebounds.

In the game, the Minutewomen shot 27-of-65 from the floor for 49 percent. The Rams were 27-of-63 for 42 percent. At the line, UMass was a solid 69 percent at 20-of-30. URI was at 63 percent with a 14-of-22 effort. URI outrebounded UMass 39-38.

UMass point guard Carl Smith [5] and the Minutemen face a big test with West Virginia on Thursday night in Springfield.

By PETER ABRAHAM

"If there's one thing you could put in the Collegian," University of Massachusetts basketball coach Ron Gerlufsen said, "Put that we need the students in the next two games, if we get a noisy crowd, there's no telling what we could do."

Despite an absence of noisy crowds at the Springfield Civic Center this season, the Minutemen are 7-3 at "home." They stand at 12-11 overall and in fourth place in the Atlantic 10 with an 8-6 mark.

The biggest tests of the season, in the form of league-leading West Virginia and Temple, are Thursday night at 7:30 p.m. and Saturday at 2 p.m.

"If we were to win these two, or even one, it would really be an indication of what we can do," Gerlufsen said.

West Virginia, putting it mildly, isn't the most popular team among the Minutemen. Hard feelings do exist between the two units and a victory Thursday night would go far in settling the score many of the players feel they have with the Mountaineers.

West Virginia leads the season series 13-3, splitting with UMass last season. Temple owns a 5-0 edge over UMass. With the Minutemen winners of eight of its last 11 games, playing at close to its peak, the Owls and Mountaineers may be in for a rude welcome at the Civic Center.

Both of the visitors are 12-2 in the league. Temple is 18-4 overall, UWV is 16-7. St. Joseph's is third at 10-4 and the Minutemen are fourth.

Buses leave from Boyden Gyn about 45 minutes prior to each game and leave a few minutes after the game. You need an ID card to board the buses and tickets can be had in the Boyden Ticket office or at the box office.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: The New England poll of Division 1 teams by the United Press is, for all intents, a farce.

UMass is rated eighth, behind Holy Cross (7-17), Providence (9-17), Boston University (11-11), Harvard (14-4, but against the Ivy League and Division 2 schools), Northeastern (14-8, but losers to UMass), and UConn, 10-12. Boston College is deservedly first at 18-6.

"It's a joke," Gerlufsen said. "We've been playing much better than most of those teams."

Respect, it seems, is slow in coming in New England.

Bobby Braun, who has started every game this season, is rebounding to the tune of 9.9 boards-a-game in the league and 8.5 overall. Horace Neysmith is at 9.4 and 8.8. The UMass Bruise Brothers should make life pretty miserable for the Mountaineers under the boards.

The Neysmith effect? Very big for the Minutemen. In victory, the big man is averaging 16.3 points. In losses, he is at 10.5. Donald Russell's difference is only .7 points and Braun actually scores more in a loss, so a good game by Neysmith seems to signal a win.

UM swimmers take fourth at Atlantic 10 meet

Track teams run second at Dartmouth

By NANCY A. BUKAR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swim team posted an impressive fourth place in the Atlantic Ten championships this past weekend at West Virginia State University in Morgantown.

The Minutemen finished only seven points behind George Washington. Penn State took first, followed by West Virginia.

"GW shaved because this was their last meet for the season. We could have beat them if we had shaved," coach Russ Yarworth said.

Good showings were made by Fred Marius in the 100-yard breaststroke, eighth with a 1:02.18, and 200-yard breaststroke, sixth with a 2:14.54. "I was really pleased with him. He was the outstanding swimmer of the meet," Yarworth said.

In the 500 yard freestyle, Drew Donovan placed third with a 4:40.87, followed by Craig Fuller in seventh with a 4:44.31. The team of Paul McDonough, Mike Hoover, Fuller and Donovan placed fifth in the 400-yard medley relay with a 3:37.40. Donovan and Fuller took second and fifth in the 200-yard freestyle respectively and Marc Surette and McDonough placed seventh and ninth in the 100-yard backstroke.

Steven King, with 4:24.19, took a fifth in the 400-yard individual medley. The team of Fuller, Hoover, Jim Flannery and Donovan finished fourth in the 400-yard freestyle relay with a 3:12.23 and Donovan took third in the 100-yard freestyle with a 47.28. Fuller finished fifth in the 200-yard freestyle and the team of Fuller, Flannery, McDonough and Donovan took third in the 800-yard freestyle.

Divers Pat Mullen and Keith Pisani finished in the top ten in both the one-meter and three-meter diving events.

The New Englands are the next and final competition for this year's Minutemen.

The UMass track teams, both the men and women, lost to Dartmouth on Saturday in the final dual meet of the season.

The women were second in a quad-meet against the Big Green, Fitchburg State and Smith. Dartmouth had 67 1/2 points, UM had 40 1/2, Fitchburg totaled 28 and Smith 13.

Winners for UMass included Sally Howes in the 3,000 at 10:14.01, enough to qualify for the New Englands.

Barbara Cullinan and Leah Loftis went 1-2 in the 600 at 1:25.34 and 1:25.52 respectively. Bridgette Booker won the 55 in 7.2 and Kayla Morrison and Cari Fleischmann 2-3 also in 7.2.

Maureen O'Reilly was third in the 1,000 and qualified for the Easterns with a 2:57.56. The mile relay team won with a 3:57, the two mile relay was second at 9:33. Laura Edgar took second in the triple jump.

For the men, 106-32 losers, Todd Johnson was second in the long jump with a 20-10 1/2 and won the 55 hurdles in 7.84. Rawle Crichlow won the 400 in 51.1 and the dash in 6.5.

Annual Stockbridge fair held

Goats, lambs, a horse, a pig and a calf were all on display at the Stockbridge School of Agriculture's eighth anual professional agriculture convention at the University's Campus Center Auditorium yesterday.

The conference, an all-day event, is primarily a job placement conference where various businesses set up booths displaying equipment and services, according to Jennifer Baker, coordinator of the convention.

The theme of the show was "Opportunities in Agriculture" and included a 20-foot brick and woodchip landscape, livestock and floral exhibits.

Employment seminars were offered throughout the day by nurseries and agricultural hardware companies. The students, "mostly seniors" spent up to seven hours preparing the displays, Stockbridge student Ed Duffy said.

"I got an interview for a possible job when I go home," Duffy said. "Our group had a pretty good time setting it up and taking the exhibit down," he said.

"The Stockbridge school is one of the top three in the country," Baker said. "This is a learning experience for the students, the faculty and even the businesses," she said.

"Overall, it was an educational experience."

The students exhibits were judged by a panel of three professors from the school. First prize went to the floraculture department with animal agriculture winning second prize and the fruit and vegetable display taking third place.

Exhibits were assembled by the animal agriculture, landscape operations, turf management, arboriculture and park management and the floraculture departments, Duffy said.

Smith views divestment

By DAN SOBEL
Collegian Staff

A six-member committee of Smith College students will meet today with the school's trustees to discuss the school's investments in companies that have business ties to South Africa.

Student senator and committee chairwoman Suzine Pack said the Ethical Investment Committee's focus will be on "shareholder responsibility" and "alternative investments." She said the committee will recommend that the trustees vote in favor of a proxy resolution concerning Ford Motors, support the signing of the Sullivan Principles by the Kimberly Clark company and consider divesting from Citicorp Bank, which loans money to South Africa.

Shareholders of a company can write up a proxy resolution which requests a change in company policy. A resolution is currently being circulated to Ford shareholders asking if they support or oppose Ford's selling products to the South African police and military.

"Less than one percent of Ford's sales are to South Africa so I don't see why it should be a big dent in Ford," Pack said.

The Sullivan Principles, which Kimberly Clark has not endorsed, ask companies operating in South Africa to eliminate segregation and discrimination from their facilities and hiring practices. They also ask that companies recruit blacks, who are allowed few political rights by that country's white ruling minority.

The committee will present the results of a questionaire recently distributed to approximately 2,600 Smith students, faculty, staff and administrators. It asked if people supported the Ford resolution; if they supported investment in a corporation directly involved with the production of nuclear weaponry and what they thought was more important in investments: social responsibility or economic return.

Pack said most of the returned questionnaires supported social divestment and policy change.

"We hope we can work out a structured communication system" with the administration, Pack said. She added that up to this point there has been little communication between administration and political student groups.

SGA to review late budgets

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted last night to allow consideration of budgets for six registered student organizations which turned in late budget proposals last semester.

The senate voted 44 to 9 to allow the senate budgets committee to consider the budget requests of the American Indian Student Association, the Dyslexic Student Organization, the Chamber Choir, Nummo News, the Student Government Association Affirmative Action Office and UHURU.

The groups failed to meet a December 14 deadline for proposals and requests submitted after that date are "thrown in the trash barrel" unless the senate votes otherwise, according to last night's agenda.

Opponents of allowing the review said the senate had to cut budgets, and it could start with these groups.

Supporters of the review said every group should get a chance for review before budget cutting.

"Some of these groups must have gotten (their requests) in 15 minutes late," Rick Patrick, SGA co-president, said.

In other business, the senate voted 23 to 33 to not consider a motion which, if passed, would eliminate an unfilled professional position in the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

At a hearing Feb. 14, the budgets committee voted 10 to 2 to recommend cutting

Delano's employee robbed

By LORI KIRKLAND
Collegian Staff

A Delano's employee was thrown to the ground and robbed early Tuesday afternoon while bringing a deposit bag containing between $1,500 and $2,500 to the bank located across the street, Amherst Police said.

After grabbing the bag, the assailant fled on foot through an alley between Delano's and Barsie's heading for the Lincoln parking lot. Several students who witnessed the incident attempted to catch the thief but lost him.

The assailant was described as a white male in his mid-20's, approximately 5'8" with light brown hair and a moustache. He was wearing a yellow and white ski hat, sunglasses and a gray scarf pulled up to his eyes. All these articles were found by police in a nearby dumpster. Police said the man was unarmed.

Police said they have several leads that they're working on.

In other police action:

- A 19 year old Taunton man was arrested Tuesday night for transporting alcohol as a minor and making false statements on his license application after police stopped him for a broken taillight and a missing inspection sticker.
- A 26 year old Amherst man was arrested early yesterday morning for driving without a license. He was initially pulled over for failure to stay within marked lanes.

Both men were arraigned yesterday at Northampton District Court.

More blacks killed in S. African riots

Rumors ignite protesting

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) - Three more blacks were killed in the Crossroads squatter settlement yesterday bringing to nine the total slain in two days of fierce battles between rioters and police, a police spokesman reported.

Lt. Attie Laubscher said police shot and killed one black man as several thousand blacks using stones and catapults skirmished with police at the offices of a white-run board administering black affairs in the Cape Town region. He said police fired birdshot, tear gas and rubber bullets

A teen-age boy and another man were killed in other clashes between police and crowds throwing stones and gasoline bombs, Laubscher said. He put the number injured since Monday at 137, nearly all of them Crossroads residents, and said 41 of the injured were admitted to hospitals.

Fighting began after rumors raced through the camp that white authorities were about to move the 60,000 or more inhabitants forcibly to a new black township farther from Cape Town, the white city where the blacks seek jobs. The government denied that a forced removal was imminent.

Laubscher said Crossroads, 12 miles east of Cape Town, was "tense but under control" late this afternoon. He said police continued to patrol the settlement but that roads were open and the shanty town was not sealed off.

Reverend Moon's parole is denied

WASHINGTON (AP) - The U.S. Parole Commission denied parole yesterday to the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, the spiritual leader of the Unification Church who is serving an 18-month sentence for income tax evasion.

Moon began serving his prison sentence July 20, 1984, at the medium-security prison in Danbury, Conn. His new projected release date, which takes into account good behavior, is Aug. 20, according to Justice Department spokesman Joe Krovisky.

In denying parole to the 64-year-old Moon, "the commission said the normal amount of time for someone serving prison for this type of offense is 10-14 months. It saw no nitigating circumstances to reduce that time in the case of the Rev. Mr. Moon," Krovisky said.

This was Moon's first attempt to win parole.

Moon was convicted in 1982 of failing to report $162,000 in income on his federal tax returns. Moon maintained his innocence.

The Unification Church headed by the Korean religious leader claims 45,000 U.S. followers and a total of 2 million to 3 million followers worldwide.

Thatcher tells congress of Soviet threat

WASHINGTON (AP) - Amid extraordinary security precautions, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher cautioned Congress yesterday that the Soviet Union will attempt to divide the West during nuclear arms control talks and warned "we should not expect too much too soon" from the negotiations.

Echoing a theme sounded by President Reagan, Mrs. Thatcher said, "Let us be under no illusions: It is our strength and not their goodwill that has brought the Soviet Union to the negotiating table in Geneva."

Mrs. Thatcher was the first British prime minister to address a joint meeting of the House and Senate since Winston Churchill did so on Jan. 17, 1952. After her speech, which was interrupted 24 times by applause, she went to the White House to confer with Reagan on arms control. America's huge budget deficit and the soaring U.S. dollar.

The ornate House chamber was packed by members of the Senate and House, assembled in a joint meeting, and members of the Cabinet and diplomatic corps. Behind her sat Vice President George Bush and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass.

On the streets outside, an estimated 500 demonstrators shouted, "IRA - All the Way," and "Maggie, Maggie, Maggie - Out, out, out." Some carried signs reading, "Victory to the IRA" and "IRA Freedom Fighters."

Armed security police, posted 10 feet apart, lined the streets around the Capitol.

Inside the building, Mrs. Thatcher denounced the Irish Republican Army as "the enemies of democracy and of freedom, too." She said she and Irish Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald are united in seeking a political solution to the problems of Northern Ireland.

Urging Americans not to give financial aid to the IRA, she said the money "is used to buy the deaths of Irishmen, north and south of the border."

Reiterating her support of U.S. research on a "Star Wars" shield in space against nuclear weapons, the prime minister said, "The United States must not fall behind the work being done by the Soviet Union."

Schroeder better, may depart soon

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) - Artificial heart patient William Schroeder, set back by strokes, fever and discouragement, has undergone a "dramatic improvement" and might be well enough to leave the hospital next week, a hospital spokesman said yesterday.

The assessment was a complete turnabout from Monday, when the same spokesman said Schroeder, the second person to receive a permanent mechanical heart, was so ill and low in spirits he might never leave the Humana Hospital Audubon.

Meanwhile, artificial heart recipient No. 3, Murray Haydon, who got a plastic metal heart Sunday, continued his smooth recovery, except that he had become fatigued by the effort required to sit up in bed, said Dr. Allan M. Lansing, a Humana spokesman.

The rate of Haydon's artificial heart was increased to 65 beats per minute from 60, and Haydon sat up in bed twice, said Robert Irvine, another Humana spokesman.

"I'm really happy with the way things are going," said Haydon's wife, Juanita.

One of Haydon's sons-in-law joked that Haydon and Schroeder might become friends and "play cards, or run down the hall and have races."

Retrial considered for convicted rapists

BOSTON (AP)—Superior Court Judge William Young, who presided over last year's trials of six men charged in the New Bedford barroom rape case, began considering yesterday whether to grant two of the men a new trial.

Young took the issue under advisement after hearing evidence presented by defense lawyers, who suggested prosecutors withheld information about a potentially important witness during the highly publicized trial.

At issue is the district attorney's handling of Kathleen P. Madieiros, who was on duty as a night clerk on March 6, 1983, when the victim came to Parkwood Hospital in New Bedford and claimed that she had been gang-raped on a pool table at Big Dan's tavern.

At the start of trial, Medieiros' name appeared on a list of possible defense witnesses, but she was never called. Last week, she told Young that the victim appeared disheveled, that she was upset, and that she did not appear in control of herself. Medieiros did not say the victim appeared drunk or "high."

Attorneys representing Joseph Vieira and Daniel Silva tried to establish that prosecutors had talked to Medeiros before or during the trial and failed to inform the defense. The attorneys argued that the testimony she would have given could have had an important bearing on the case.

The defense team also maintains that the victim's testimony in court differed from statements she made to police and that Young made procedural errors in presiding over the complex trial.

Creche questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) - Forcing a community to provide public land for Nativity scenes could open the door to requiring approval of such blatantly offensive displays as Nazi swastikas and racists slogans, an attorney told the Supreme Court yesterday.

Marvin Frankel, arguing on behalf of Scarsdale, N.Y., officials who have banned a display depicting the birthplace of Jesus from a village park, asked the justices to overturn a federal appeals court ruling that he said would compel the display's return.

However, attorney Marvin Schwartz, representing sponsors of the creche display, argued that communities cannot ban such displays from public areas where messages are allowed for the Red Cross, the United Fund or other organizations as in the Scarsdale park.

Several Supreme Court justices disputed both lawyers' interpretation that a decision last June by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals would compel the creche's return in Scarsdale, a wealthy suburb north of New York City.

Frankel argued that forbiding the village to ban the creche would also tie officials' hands if anyone tried to erect "a swastika,a Klan symbol, a hammer and sickle, a sign that God doesn't hear the prayers of Jews." Many of Scarsdale's residents are Jewish.

The Reagan administration, in a Justice Department brief that was generally in line with the justices' comments, has argued that the appeals court ruling would not compel the creche's return.

Secretary Schultz turns down Israel

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of State George P. Shultz said yesterday he won't consent to Israel's request for an increase in economic aid until that country demonstrates an ability to deal more effectively with inflation and other economic problems.

Shultz said that while Israel has made "some considerable progress" in developing an adjustment program, "further progress is necessary if their program is to put Israel on the path of economic health and additional U.S. assistance is to serve a useful purpose."

Shultz testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee on the administration's $14.8 billion foreign assistance request for fiscal 1986.

The administration has been encouraging Israel to take steps to lower its inflation rate and to create conditions for economic growth.

Israel has asked for $800 million supplemental appropriation for fiscal 1985.

Apartheid art raises issues

New multimedia exhibit opens in Student Union

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

Political art drew an estimated 100 people to the opening of the "Art Against Apartheid" student exhibit Tuesday night in the Student Union Art Gallery.

The exhibit, which consists of 40 pieces of multimedia work donated by University of Massachusetts graduate and undergraduate art majors, was aimed at bringing South African apartheid to the minds of the local community, according to Fran Trainor of the Political Artist's Guild, and co-sponsor of the show.

"Apartheid is an issue that a large part of the community is caring about," Trainor said during the opening festivities.

Apartheid is the official policy of the Republic of South Africa that maintains white supremacy and racial segregation despite the fact that whites make up a minority of the population.

The show's opening came on the heels of news from South Africa that there was more rioting Tuesday in which seven blacks were killed after security police raided towns across the country and arrested six racial segregation opponents accusing them of treason.

"This show has raised people's awareness about the apartheid," Lisa Bohne, a show contributor and member of the Political Artist's Guild, said. "I have even beome more active myself."

Exhibits in the show, which will continue through March 1 and is free and open to the public, include clay and steel sculptures, acrylic paintings, drawings and collages. The art consists solely of work done by UMass students.

Trainor said the Political Artist's Guild spent about $230 to advertise the exhibit. The Student Union Art Gallery donated $175 for the native African food supplied on opening night by Yvonne's Kitchen.

The art brought mixed criticism from some who attended the opening.

"I was confused by some of the more abstract pieces," Loren Demerath, a senior Social Thought and Political Economy major, said. "But, you definitely feel a lot of suffering and pain and also a kind of almost permanence of suffering—it's been going on so long."

Almut Overdick, 19, visiting from Juelich, West Germany said of the displays, "They touched me."

"I'm against it," Monika Giacoppe, a sophomore Latin American studies major said of apartheid. "Seeing more art isn't going to make me more against it."

The UMass Fine Arts Council is also a co-sponsor of the show.

Gay awareness better according to counselor

By LAURA YEE

Creating awareness of homosexuality across college campuses nationwide is taking a "trend for the better," said liaison for the gay and lesbian community during former Boston Mayor Kevin White's administration.

Brian McNaught, who presented a perspective on the responses of public institutions to lesbian and gay concerns yesterday at a forum in the Campus Center said "progress is being made."

"More people are coming out to reaffirm their sexuality, financial assistance is going to social awareness programs and counselors are being hired," he said.

McNaught, 37, is a syndicated columnist for the Gay and Lesbian Press and a certified sex counselor. He said UMass should hire two full-time counselors, one for homosexuals and the other for lesbians, stock positive books on homosexuality in the libraries and pamphlets in advisers' offices to create awareness.

He added that there is "a need to provide mandatory training for sensitivity" toward homosexuals at the classroom level as well as for those in security, housing and administration positions.

At least 10 percent of the population is homosexual, 37 percent of males have a homosexual experience and 50 percent have had a homosexual fantasy. This alone prompts the need for awareness, McNaught said.

"These are the ones who lead the marches against homosexuals, and urinate on homosexuals' doors," because they fear their own sexuality, he said. If people become comfortable about "sexuality, they well feel comfortable about homosexuality."

John Jablonski, People's Gay Alliance president said the part-time position made for the human relations planner to deal with gay and lesbian concerns that came as a response to the homophobic acts last semester is not enough.

"It is the attempt of the administration to shift the spotlight off themseves and to take away the pressure caused last semester, Jablonski said. "They think as soon as we graduate, the problem (of homophobia) will be gone, but the problems won't go away."

Womenspeak event begins at Amherst

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Correspondent

Nancy Miller, chairwoman of the Women's Studies Department at Barnard College, spoke last night at Amherst College, kicking off a month of events for "Womenspeak," bringing feminist speakers, shows and events to the campus.

Miller, who lectured on feminist theory and criticism, said feminists must search out and then "scan literature for its blind spots," where an author's sexist ideology may have had a detrimental effect in their work.

Miller said in depicting gender, an author may portray the differences between men and women as inherently unequal with the female portrayed as a considerably "less equal" being.

Miller used examples of 18th century French literature in which women were punished or looked down upon for what were seen as "crimes against propriety," which included sexual desire or aggresiveness.

Following Miller in the Womanspeak series will be Tatyana Mamonava, Russian feminist, 4:00 to 6:00 p.m. She is the editor of Women In Russia: Feminist Readings From The Soviet Union, and will speak in the Converse Hall Room. The event is co-sponsored by the Russian Department.

Jewish Women's Weekend will begin on Friday, February 22 with Judith Plaskow speaking on "Creating A Jewish Feminist Spirituality," in the Babbot Room, Octagon, 8:00 p.m.

On Saturday, February 23, 2:00 p.m. in Chapin Lounge there will be a brunch with Professor Martha Ackelsburg, of Smith College. She will speak on "The Politics of Jewish Feminist Spirituality." At 4:00 in Chapin Hall Professor Susan Niditch will give a lecture entitled, "Interpreting the Bible: A Feminist Perspective."

On February 26, Kathy Keeleher and Holly Metcalf of the 1984 Olympic U.S. Women's Crew team will speak on "The Olympic Experience" in the Red Room in Converse Hall at 8:00 p.m.

Kathy Alexander, Coordinator of Educator Advocate Program Against Violence Against Women, Everywoman's Center, University of Massachusetts, will speak on "The Imaging of Women: A View Beyond Pornography" February 28, in The Red Room in Converse Hall, 7:30.

On March 2, an alumnae panel will present "Life After Amherst," 11:00 a.m. in the Alumni House. This event is co-sponsored by the Office of Career Counseling.

"Deliverance," a women's talent show, will take place at 8:00 p.m. Backroom, Fayerweather, March 8.

On March 11, Susan Blier, Fine Arts Department, Columbia University will speak on, "Images of Women in African Art," at 4:00 p.m. in the Converse Hall Red Room.

Health book won't cause stir say authors

By Mariane Meuse
Collegian Correspondent

The authors of the revised edition of the feminist health book Our Bodies, Ourselves do not expect it to be greeted with the same uproar as when the first edition was published in 1972.

Judy Norsigian, one of 12 authors of the 647-page paperback produced by the Boston Women's Health Collective, said the new edition, released last month, is "too new to cause a controversy."

Our Bodies, Ourselves, a guide book to women's health issues, contains detailed, easy-to-understand information such as birth control and abortion, issues which, when the first edition came out, prompted many people to protest.

The authors counter any protest against the book by saying it is essential for today's teenagers to receive accurate information concerning their sexuality.

"It's very difficult to get good, accurate information from schools, churches, and other groups. Books like this can be very valuable," Norsigian said in a telephone interview last week.

The new edition contains two potentially controversial pictures, one of a woman who died after an illegal abortion, another of a woman with a tattoo over her mastectomy scar.

Norma Swenson, one of the book's authors, said the abortion picture is a reply to recent arguments against legalized abortion.

"The present discussion is focused almost entirely on the fetus. The issue of what happens to women's lives is being ignored," Swenson said.

"When abortion was illegal, it was the cause of death for many women and would be in the future," she said.

Norsigian called the book a "guide to moral values," providing women of all ages with the knowledge necessary to make intelligent decisions regarding their sexuality.

These sentiments were echoed by Ellen Story, assistant director at Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts in Northampton. According to Story, studies show the majority of the approximately 12 million American teenagers who are sexually active receive their sexual information from their peers, and this information is often inaccurate.

"It is essential for them to have information that can help them avoid getting into situation they'd want to avoid, such as pregnancy," Story said.

Despite the liberal tone of the book, both Story and Norsigian deny that the views expressed are meant as a direct attack on the conservative policies of the current administration.

Jewish marriage traditions

Canadian woman disowned for marrying gentile

WINNIPEG, Manitoba (AP) - On the same hot and muggy summer day that Shawna Yaffe, born a Jew, celebrated what should have been one of the happiest days of her life, her parents went into mourning.

On Aug. 23, 1984, Shawna married a gentile. A few days later, her parents placed their daughter's obituary in the weekly Jewish Post newspaper, requesting that "no condolences be sent or memorials be made."

The Yaffes had disowned their daughter.

For most North American Jews, about all they've heard of "disownment" - whereby parents consider their child dead and observe the traditional seven days of mourning - probably comes from the popular stage and film musical, "Fiddler on the Roof." In it, an anguished Tevye acts as if his youngest daughter has died when she marries a non-Jew.

"But even in Fiddler on the Roof, when they were leaving, he turned around and said something to her before they left," says Shawna, whose real name appeared in the obituary but who now asks that it be kept confidential.

The religious background to the now rare action rests in the Old Testament, Deuteronomy 7:3, in which God instructs the Jews, before they cross the Jordan River, not to marry non-Jewish inhabitants to avoid being swayed to serve other gods.

"I think the philosophy behind disowning is a way of or a method of impressing upon our young adults the importance of keeping the Jewish faith alive and furthering the Jewish faith in its cause," says Orthodox Rabbi Ephraim Bryks of Winnipeg.

Bryks, who acted as mediator between Shawna and her parents before Shawna was married, points out the case is unusual - that "it may happen only once" in every 100, or even 1,000, cases of intermarriage.

"When it first came out, it had a tremendously strong effect on women in this country. It is much less political now," Story said, adding that "If you went down a number of issues such as abortion, you would probably find a lot of disagreement. In that sense it is a political book."

Our Bodies, Ourselves is written in non-technical language, making it accessible to all women, and in addition to chapters on birth control and abortion, it contains sections on occupational health hazards, older women's health care, lesbianism, and the American medical system.

According to Norsigian, the book is designed to allow women more independence and autonomy in using the medical system.

Our Bodies, Ourselves will soon be available at a reduced price at the Everywomen's Center on campus.

Regent kicks off convocation week

A member of the Massachusetts Board of Regents of higher education and University of Massachusetts graduate spoke yesterday to about 140 engineering students and faculty during Engineer's Week convocation.

Nicholas Boraski, a 1950 UMass graduate in mechanical engineering, presently serves as vice-president and general manager of General Electric's Ordinance Division System in Pittsfield, Mass.

Boraski's speech at the Campus Center was titled "After Engineering School...Opportunities in High Tech."

Boraski said the engineering school at UMass "is providing excellent preparation for students entering the field." He added that the "school of engineering has proven its excellence with research, particularly in Polymer Science."

Boraski said if he was interviewing a potential employee, he would consider what the interviewee had done outside of the field.

"I would want to know if he has a summer job and what it is," Boraski said. He added that "grades are not the most important thing."

Boraski reminded the students that starting salaries shouldn't be weighed too heavily.

"A $1,000 difference on a $25,000 salary is nothing," he said. He added that the money will come once good work is performed.

Soviet feminist to speak at womenspeak event

A Russian feminist whose activities led to her exile from the Soviet Union in 1979 will be speaking today at Amherst College.

Tatayana Mamonova, editor of Women in Russia: Feminist readings from the Soviet Union, will be speaking on "Women and Feminism in Russia," Stephanie Sandler, professor of Russian at Amherst said.

Mamonova, who was exiled for circulating underground feminist journals was described by Sandler as "a life-line to Russian feminism for those in the West."

"She is the only feminist Russian woman in America," said Sandler, adding, "feminism is equal to dissidence in Russia."

Sandler issued the invitation to Mamonova to coincide with both her class on "women and writing in Russia," and the Womenspeak events currently taking place at Amherst College.

Mamonova is presently a fellow at Radcliffe University, where she still receives and edits materials from the Soviet Union in addition to concentrating on her own writings.

Mamonova will speak from 4-6pm in the Red Room at Amherst College.

funding for the SCERA anti-oppression coordinator, committee chairman Joseph Sparks said.

The committee reviews all vacant professional positions to determine whether the senate should continue to fund the position, Sparks said.

When SCERA representatives appealed the vote, senate speaker Chris Sullivan decided to commit the appeal to the coordinating committee, following senate bylaws, Sullivan said.

Bill Collins, senator from Moore Dormitory, accused Sullivan of violating procedure and said the decision should have been put on the agenda this week, to be voted on by the full senate.

Sullivan said the question of whether to fund the position would probably come to the senate meeting next week, with recommendation and review by the coordinating committee.

In separate business, the senate voted 34 to 10 to grant $566 from its stabilization account to the Boltwood Project to cover transportation costs for the semester.

Argentine program available

The International Programs Office at the University of Massachusetts will offer students an opportunity to study in Argentina this summer at the university of Belgrano, in Buenos Aires.

The fourth Summer Program in Latin American Studies is a six week program beginning June 3.

If accepted, students must pay their own air fare about $900, a $100 service fee and a $50 mandatory health insurance fee, Linda Chen, assistant study abroad adviser and a participant in last years' program said.

The program is open to juniors, seniors, and graduate students who are majoring in Latin American Studies or have a concentration in that field, according to the department's memorandum.

Students must submit their applications by March 6th to Carole Cumps at the Foreign Student Office, 239 Whitmore.

Honor society unity group's main goal

Seeking to unify the honor societies on campus, the 25-member University of Massachusetts Mortar Board will produce an index of UMass honor societies and sponsor an event to initiate communication between them this semester.

UMass Mortar Board is a chapter of the Mortar Senior National Honor Society.

"Our goal at the beginning of the year was to bring together honor societies. Some of the honor societies aren't getting as much recognition as they should be.

We're trying to bring them back," Kirstin Jahn, president of the Mortar Board, said.

The board is working with the Dean of Student's office to produce a booklet listing all university honor societies, such as Tau Beta Phi, an engineering honor society. The booklet will be disfributed to first-year students next fall, according to Board vice-president Susan Connell.

To further promote cooperation among honor societies, the Mortar Board will sponsor an event for officers of honor societies, hosted by the board's honorary member, Provost Richard O'Brien. Organization of an honor society council will be discussed, Connell said.

Reagan's claims differ from reality

President Reagan reached new heights of audacity in his radio address this weekend, saying of the contras, "They are our brothers. How can we ignore them?" A parallel was being drawn between the revolutionaries of American history and the counterrevolutionaries waging the dirty war against the people of Nicaragua. Any such comparison can only be viewed as intentionally misleading.

Timothy Harris

The contras, far from being the "freedom fighters" Reagan admiringly describes them as, are terrorists who have killed and maimed unarmed civilians along the borders of Nicaragua, often mutilating the corpses beyond recognition. Stories of inhumane cruelty abound. By concentrating on destroying economic targets, such as oil refineries and grain storage bins, the contras not only harm the government they see as their enemy, but also futher impoverish those they claim to be liberating. They are former members of the Somoza National Guard and professional mercenaries fighting not for freedom, but the right to dominate and exploit.

In a fresh burst of unsupportable and specious statements, Ronald Reagan has made his position on Nicaragua clearer than ever. They have installed a "brutal dictatorship," and have "moved quickly to suppress internal dissent, clamp down on a free press, persecute the church and the labor unions, and betray their pledge to hold free elections...Now they're exporting drugs to poison our youth."

While some of these statements are, like his "brothers" analogy to the American Revolution, simply misleading; others are outright lies. Nicaragua has the best human rights record of any Latin American nation. An opposition press is allowed, a rarity in post-revolutionary societies at war, and more than can be said for, say, Guatemala , a government that enjoys U.S. support. The vast majority of the people of Nicaragua are praticing Catholics who believe their revolution and their religion are inextricably connected. The central philosophy of the government is, after all, to provide for the poor. This makes claims that the government does not tolerate organized labor rather dubious. The drug claim can only be a reference to a Washington Times article of several months ago which attempted to link Sandinista officials to a Florida cocaine bust, and was later discredited. It is disheartening to see our president basing allegations on the faulty reporting of a paper owned and operated by the Unification Church, better known as the Moonies.

According to Reagan, the U.S. objective in Nicaragua is to "achieve a pluralistic and democratic government." Putting aside for a moment the fact that they already have this, there is another, equally important consideration. If one accepts the idea that the means of achieving a goal affect the ends, that person would have to agree that it is impossible to achieve liberal democracy using the methods currently employed by the counterrevolutionaries Reagan so adores.

The chasm between President Reagan's claims and objective reality is a wide one indeed. Given that the New York Times doesn't see it as their responsibility to check up on the claims of the president before running their version of "all the news that's fit to print," the responsibility lies with us, the American public, to critically evaluate what our media reports.

The 'Meter Jungle' strikes again

David McNair

It started innocently. A ticket tossed on the back seat. One shoved in a notebook. Another stuck to the break pedal and destroyed by mud. Still another swallowed by the heater duct on the dash; and several he never saw because they were blown from his windshield wiper. Harry Streeter-commuter student-foolishly parked at random in the "meter jungle."

"A ticket here, a ticket there. No big deal," Harry used to say. That was before the notices came. The fines were doubled and the notice threatened to stop the renewal of his license. Money was short, school was expensive, and Harry couldn't be bothered with the annoying tickets. The notices still came, and the amount continued to rise.

Soon the tickets far exceeded the price of tuition. Harry applied for a GSL in hopes of paying the tickets. The loan came but Harry the dope spent the money on food, rent, and tuition. The fines continued to rise. He was denied renewal of his registration, pulled over for an expired sticker, and fined. Sure, it was his fault for neglecting them originally, but what was he to do now?

Harry's girlfriend left him, saying she couldn't live with a criminal. The guilt was bringing Harry to his knees. He wore smelly cloths, didn't shave, and was growing thinner and thinner. The tickets loomed over him as a constant reminder of his crime. An awful crime. No small fines were charged to these kind of criminals. They weren't just people who stole cars or robbed banks, these were people who let their meters run out.

Harry robbed a men's clothing store to pay for the tickets. He couldn't live with the guilt, and the risks of armed robbery seemed minimal compared to the presense of those tickets. And Harry did pay the tickets. He mailed the money just minutes before police arrested him.

The sentence shouldn't be too bad, considering he had no prior felonies lucky for Harry he paid those tickets. Nor is there an unhappy ending to his story. The money Harry paid and the money other criminals have paid goes to a generous scholarship fund at the University. Of course, Harry's life was ruined, but what a small price to pay for helping the deserving students who are the precious minority at this institution.

David McNair is a UMass student.

Random Notes

After midnight, all her Purple Rain turns into yellow snow

At first I thought it was a bad dream. Then I realized it couldn't be. First of all because I was awake, and secondly because no nightmare would be so cruel as to imitate perfectly the sounds of Doves Crying at 800 decibels from the stereo across the hall.

I asked myself what I had done to deserve this. Was it that French class I had "forgotten" to go to? That 4:30 discussion? (Okay, so it takes me a while to get back into the swing of things). Was it going on a date the night I was supposed to call my mother? Then I knew. What else could it be? God was punishing me for not being nicer to my roommate last semester.

God knows I tried. (I thought). But after 18 hours a day of doves crying, Prince dying for me, and people going crazy, a person does tendto get nuts. Even after she bought headphones (and sang while wearing them) I still couldn't take it. Okay. So maybe I shouldn't have woken my suite the night she screamed to "Let's Go Crazy" and I thought we were being robbed. Maybe I shouldn't have confronted her with my broken Ziggy mug the night she hit all the high notes in "The Beautiful Ones," and maybe I shouldn't have sung "Yellow Snow" to all those choruses of "Purple Rain." I'm sorry, But I thought I paid my dues the night some sadistic friends dragged me out to Purple Rain to see what would happen when I saw him singing it too. Evidently I was wrong. (And I apologize to those I trampled while running from the theatre).

I got up from my desk, got an armful of Huey Lewis, Beatles and Broadway tapes, and turned up the stereo. It was going to be a long semester.

What's all the fuss about fraternities?

Don't judge us all by a few

Larry Bouchie

Lately, some people have been questioning the purpose, need, and validity of fraternities and sororities on the University campus. Most people who do question our existence perpetually raise a stereotype of intoxicated, snobby, and irresponsible fraternity/sorority members.

UMass, with 14 fraternities and nine sororities, has the largest Greek membership of any college or university in New England. Hazing, including forced alcohol drinking, is not allowed in any form. Rather, Greek chapters stress knowledge of our history, the Greek area, and individual house members to their pledges. Pledging is a learning experience, not a punishment at UMass.

Last year the Intrafraternity Council voluntarily imposed a grade point average attainment policy on the Greek area. Any chapter whose overall average cum for one semester falls below 2.0 is suspended for the next semester. If it happens again the next semester, that chapter can no longer hold social functions, or compete in intramural sports. The third consecutive semester a chapter's GPA falls below 2.0, that chapter loses their campus charter.

Anyone who tells people that Greek members don't study or achieve at UMass is wrong. In my fraternity, poor academic performance has never been blamed on being a member. If anything, people's GPA's get better when they join a fraternity/sorority. In fact, the overall cumulative average for the Greek area is higher this year and last than the overall University average.

Another beneficial aspect of Greek membership is participation in charity drives. Every semester, chapters hold different fundraisers for local and national charities. The local Red Cross has recently informed us that blood drive participation increases 75 percent when the Greek area participates.

Greek houses are also active every semester in intramural sports. We compete regularly in the entire spectrum of intramural sports amongst ourselves and other intramural teams. Membership in a fraternity/sorority provides the opportunity to be part of an organized sports team at any time.

Membership in a fraternity/sorority provides an atmosphere of leadership and maturity. The Greek area has their own elected councils, and each house elects their officers. Immaturity is tolerated only briefly, if at all, and members who cannot behave like responsible adults lose their memberships. Yes, houses do expel members for misbehavior.

Greek membership additionally provides an alumni network in the working world. Greek UMass graduates have the chance to work with other members and continue friendships outside of the University, if they choose.

Admittedly, some Greek members do insult individuals on this campus, and break other University policies. But compared to any residential area on this campus, our transgressions pale, and our own judicial system is used to confront these problems much more often.

Just because some non-Greeks have had bad experiences with Greek members on this campus, they have no right to lump us together as a uniform group. For some reason, disgruntled people only want to know about fraternities and sororities when we're in trouble. Compared to all of the other good things we do for and on this campus, our problems are minor, especially when compared to other campus groups.

Larry Bouchie is a Collegian staff member and a member of Phi Mu Delta.

Vicious antics outweigh charity

Rusty Denton

The Greek area has a long tradition of trying to polish their image with printer's ink. Any comment unfavorable to fraternities is immediately met by a recital of their charitable feats. Most of us take these with a grain of salt, but let's have a little more honesty from the Greeks: they are not a bunch of altar boys.

I've been inside of every Greek house at UMass more times than I can remember, in their rooms and halls every day of the week, every week of the semester, any time between early afternoon and 4 a.m. Like everybody else, I have to pay tuition somehow, so I delivered pizzas for three semesters. What I saw gives the lie to their noble pretensions.

To be fair, sororities at UMass are very reasonable places, and there are a couple of courteous, mature fraternities. But most frats are the pits. Several of the houses are falling apart, held together by little more than toothpaste. After meeting a few of the "brothers," it comes as no surprise that they live in such caves.

Nobody seems to be able to police some of these brutes: I'm amazed that the Greek Council is proud of its ability to contain its members. Evidently they don't remember the house that was so far gone that its national organization could find only one member not deserving of expulsion. He was a freshman. Maybe they have forgotten the "Schlitz-a-rama" every spring that got so out of hand that the University was forced to order its cancellation.

The Greek Council is also proud of sponsoring alcohol awareness sessions, but it's no great virtue. I've been in houses where every resident was either totally inebriated or passed out. If you catch them in their more sober moments, you may still have to deal with the overpowering stench of stale beer and vomit. Fraternities are now sponsoring a non-alcoholic rush, but no credit to them, since the state has put alcohol beyond reach for other things. We're supposed to believe that frat members have enlightened attitudes toward women, but centerfolds and suggestive beer posters multiply on fraternity walls. Several times I have almost tripped over couples who were petting and groping on the floor in dark fraternity lobbies. You don't even have to go inside to hear guys on a porch speculating on the sexual potential of passing women. It's not a rare event.

Do they confine themselves to verbal insults? No. More than once, members of the largest frat have assaulted a delivery person or smashed his car window. Their reputation for thievery is phenomenal.

Maybe we're supposed to pass all of this off as typical fraternity mischief, but it's not typical. Amherst College fraternities were closed last May through no fault of their own. On their very worst nights, Amherst fraternities never even came close to the gross, brutal offensiveness so characteristic of some UMass Greeks.

And what do the fraternities answer to that? They answer that they organize blood drives and charitable events. Somehow the good deed of the month is supposed to whitewash some real losers. They either need a lot more whitewash, or a lot fewer losers.

Support them 'one last time'

At the end of this week, an era in UMass basketball will end. The five seniors responsible for resurrecting the program will play the last home games of their college career. They've come a long way since their freshman year, and are now 8-6 in the Atlantic Ten. They've won eight of their last 11 games, yet only 1400 people attended the game last Saturday. Tonight, against West Virginia, Donald Russell will break the school career scoring record set by Mike Pyatt. Temple, a team that should be in the top 20, will be at the Springfield Civic Center this Saturday.

In my four years of following UMass basketball, I can say without any qualification that this is the best team UMass has fielded. So you fans that used to pack the Cage every game night, making it difficult for any opposing team, come down to the games and help UMass beat the two top teams in the league, and show your support for those five seniors one last time.

'Racist' books used as tools

This note is sent to correct a statement made in the Collegian (Feb. 12) article "Local school texts examined."

The statement in question said the K-12 Multicultural Curriculum Committee has suggested not using Charlie and the Chocolate Factory, Mary Poppins, and Five Chinese Brothers. Information for this part of the article was obtained by telephone, so it is easy to understand how a misunderstanding could have happened.

In answer to a specific question about some examples of racist books, I gave those as examples. During the personal interview, I made quite a point of saying that we do not censor books or try to have a "sanitized" collection. We aim to provide teachers with tools so that they can work with students to help sharpen students' analytical and critical thinking skills. These skills, of course, can then be applied to all types of media as well as personal conversation and contacts. I also gave an example of how Charlie and the Chocolate Factory had been used very effectively with young students. Students were able, with criteria and guidance, to enumerate good features of the book (e.g. plot) while listing negative features (many examples of racism).

This is not intended to be critical of the writer. She seemed to be quite interested and eager to get a clear understanding. I feel that the Multicultural Curriculum Committee's role was mistaken regarding library materials. The extensive evaluation of textbooks before purchase, however, is an entirely different situation.

Only a small price to pay

As a student at the University of Massachusetts I am greatly concerned with the possibility of the town of Hadley discontinuing bus service to their town. As a student, I have very limited resources (as do many of us) and the lack of public transportation to the stores, restaurants, movies and malls would make life very difficult on most of us. I myself work in Hadley, and without the buses I would be forced to either buy a car or hitchhike to work. Neither of which are particularly attractive alternatives.

In my opinion, $20,000 a year is a small price for a town to pay to know that the children, students and elderly alike have a safe, dependable means of transportation.

Keep those killers leashed

The front page photo Feb. 13 in the Collegian all too clearly points out the importance of student adherence to no pet laws on the University campus. In the photo, a young UMass senior is being savagely and senselessly bitten on the arm by an animal allowed to roam free on school grounds.

You've seen them no doubt, decked out in colored bandanas, scrounging for food, posing a serious threat to the safety and well being of UMass students. Of course, I'm speaking of killer frisbees.

Frisbee leash laws, too often, are flaunted or ignored by negligent pet owners. Packs of the vicious beasts prowl the campus at will, wreaking havoc and destruction upon its unsuspecting occupants, bearing sharp and deadly incisors in response to a friendly pat on the head.

Several attacks have been reported so far this semester. Still more will occur if we don't act now. Students who own frisbees should keep them leashed, licensed, and properly innoculated against disease. Though few in number now, these potentially dangerous animals breed prodigiously in summer, flying in numbers too large to count.

Let's stop this problem before it gets out of control.

Column needs clarification

In Tuesday's Collegian, columnist Andrew Paven made an inept attempt at connecting the cancellation of a championship chess match between Anatoly Karpov and Gary Kasparov and the illness of Soviet leader Konstantin Chernenko.

Paven's argument was disjointed. He infers that the cancellation of the game was due to official worries about Kasparov's half-Jewish parentage. Does this mean that a stronger anti-Jewish faction is growing in Chernenko's absence from active involvement in Russian affairs? Are the events a sign that the Soviet premier's anti-Semitic policies are still in full force despite his waning influence? We readers don't know what the writer's point is. We are never told. The question of how the cancellation of a chess match is a reflection of the expected change in the Kremlin's hierarchy is never answered.

The most obvious connection between the chess tournament and Chernenko's condition was overlooked by the writer. The match between Karpov and Kasparov was to be held in the same hall where Soviet leaders are laid in state. Most observers say the game was cancelled in order to avoid the embarrassment and trouble of having to move the contest in order to hold ceremonies for a dead Chernenko. That is the true significance of the deleted match. It blatantly reflected the grave condition of the health of the Russian head of state. It is an important point and Paven should have included it.

Nothing but the blues

By JACK BRESNAHAN
Collegian Staff

Emphatic accolades for Albert Collins & The Icebreakers who played at the Rusty Nail on Valentines Day. These crack musicians rocked the place like no other band in recent memory. Playing their super-charged brand of blistering blues, the crowd was 100 percent behind them, and the net result was sheer pleasure.

It had been about two years since Albert last visited the area, for some unknown reason, so it was indeed a treat to see him back in our neighborhood. Three new faces in the band were Ron Low, a Detroit guitarist, Soko Richards, former drummer for John Mayall, and Leon Blue, a new addition of piano to the band. Leon had to overcome a fried amp, and the vocals were somewhat hindered by the lack of monitors. Also joining them were longstanding members Abbe Locke on sax, and bassist Johnny B. Gayden. The opened the show for Albert with a few instrumental as well as a superb version of the late Freddie King's "Hideaway." By the time Albert plugged his telecaster into his deluxe Fender superreverb, the mood was high. Zinging through a couple of instrumental warm-ups, then moving his capo up to the 5th fret, Albert satisfied the many requests for "Mastercharge." After realizing that the vocals were not properly adjusted, he headed beyond the dance floor, playing near the portal accessing the outer bar. Up there a large gathering enveloped him, while he finally finished the song on the floor directly in front of the stage.

Set two began with "Down Home Blues," minus the lyrics, followed by a boogie by Leon, who was a little more audible after the break. Elmore James' "Talk To My Baby" was sung by Ron with a twist of Valentines Day blues. In trying to call his baby back home, he got all upset because the phone kept on ringing while she should have been at home. Seems her car broke down in a snow storm out there, so there wasn't any need to worry after all.

Albert Collins played the blues on Valentine's Day

Then came the man from Houston, who not only began to tear it up, but also got involved in a kind of guitar duel with Ron. As they traded licks, Albert broke his D string, and did a great job playing around it. That was followed by "Honey Hush," and the great blues number, "Angel of Mercy" from Frozen Alive.

Wright: the wizard of wit

Steven Wright
Iron Horse Cafe
Wednesday, Feb. 13

By DODE LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

Q. "Did you sleep well last night?"

A. "No. I made a few mistakes." The laughter shook the sidewalk in front of the Iron Horse Cafe in Northampton last Wednesday night when Steven Wright took the stage and the audience for a trip in his own special world.

Wright's trademark deadpan delivery has the zeal of a 14 year old stuck reciting his prayers in church on a sunny afternoon. "I had some powdered water," Wright said in such a tone, "But I didn't know what to add."

Many of the people who were at Wednesday's show had seen Wright perform his unique brand of humor on such shows as Saturday Night Live, Late Night with David Letterman, and The Tonight Show.

Wright confesses that his type of humor is participatory. He doesn't get in front of the audience and smash watermelons and ed to re-shuffle the lobes of their brain and try and picture this situation. The reaction, happily is one of chorused laughter.

Laughter is one-sided in Wright's routine. He doesn't laugh during his act. When asked why he doesn't laugh at his bizzare anecdotes that seem to have everyone else in stitches, the "wizard of wit" responded in perfect stoneface, "I've heard these jokes before. I laughed already."

These days, Steve Wright is laughing all the way to the bank. After landing a bit part in Madonna's new film, Desperately Seeking Susan, he is talking about writing and starring in a full-length feature film, with the character being as off-the-wall as his stage persona. He also hinted that a record might be in the works shortly.

Success isn't all glitter and gold, though. He said television has done a lot for his career, but there is a tremendous amount of pressure in television. "You have five minutes in front of millions of people, and if it goes well, it goes well. If it doesn't, that's it."

As long as Steven Wright keeps his talent for finding the odd in the ordinary, I'm sure we'll be hearing about full scale maps of the United States as well as tales of seeing subliminal advertising executives "just for a second" for years to come.

Hutton in a tale of two spies

THE FALCON AND THE SNOWMAN
Directed by John Schlesinger
Starring: Timothy Hutton and Sean Penn
At the Hampshire Mall Cinemas

By HERB RAMY & MATT MACHERA
Collegian Staff

The Falcon and The Snowman, John Schlesinger's new film, is based on the true life events of Christopher Boyce and Daulton Lee. Boyce, played by Timothy Hutton, lands a low-paying job monitoring secret CIA communications. It is here that the young idealist stumbles upon some disturbing information regarding CIA actions abroad. Daulton Lee, played by Sean Penn, is a cocaine and heroin dealer whose smooth talking manner has kept him out of jail many a time.

From here the stage is set, and these two childhood friends become unlikely spies for the Soviet Union. The reasons behind their actions are totally different though. Boyce becomes involved in order to protest the immoral actions of the government and the CIA as learned through his job.

In contrast, Daulton Lee's motives are much simpler. He desires the money and excitement this adventure will bring. He cares little for protest, and believes this to be just another business venture.

Although the story is very interesting, the acting in the movie is what saves it. Hutton is excellent as the one time all-American boy who is embittered by the reality of what his country is doing.

The combination of Hutton's understated but powerful performance and Penn's explosive presence make The Falcon and The Snowman a movie worth seeing.

Hard to believe there are four days of school this week. Chomp chomp. So what's music. Big trivia prize this week, a trip for two to Easthampton to see Toots and the Maytals next Thursday at the Red Balloon.

Tonight The Fleshtones are playing at the Rusty Nail with local faves or shall I say my favorite local band, Mongrel Puppy and the Neighborhoods. This should be a good show of course.

Naturally in our capitalist system there is competition for your resources and so also tonight the Iron Horse is hosting Northampton's Lao Tse and the Entropics, Sheehan's has UMass band The Stand and Pearl Street has Motown coverers (great word) Girl's Night Out.

Friday you can see the Outpatients, Go Children Slow, Trace, Prime Suspects, and First Circle all for a very low price at the Blue Wall in the East Side Rock and Roll Rumble. Not only that, but I suspect that you get to choose which band you like best because the winner will open up the East Side concert this spring.

Professor Marion Brown will be playing with his trio at the Iron Horse on Friday night.

Saturday? Yes, go back to the Rusty Nail where the man with the amazingly long guitar chord, Joe "King" Carrosco will play, along with his Crowns, some of the hottest if you'll pardon the use of this cliche, nuevo wavo this side of the Texas Border. Opening up for them will be the Pyjama Slave Dancers.

Isn't that all very exciting. I think the benefit of the capitalist system is that it does allow for some diversity. I mean suppose all you were allowed to listen to was the Grateful Dead or the Dead Kennedy's. Forget it. Duh.

Joe "King" Carrasco and the Crowns will play at the Rusty Nail.

There is some really good music coming to Hartford in a couple of weeks. The Philip Glass Ensemble will be playing at Bushnell Auditorium as part of the Real Art Ways tenth anniversary celebration March 16.

Trivia Question: Last week the answer was the house where Bruce Wayne a.k.a. Batman lived. Today you can compete for two tickets to see Toots and Maytals at the Red Balloon in Easthampton, Rita Marley toured the states with what group? Bring your answer down to the Collegian Arts desk with you name, phone number and the time you brought it down.

King of soul gets down!

By JACK BRESNAHAN
Collegian Staff

One, two, hit me now! From the Orient, Africa, Europe, Asia, South America, North America, there was a warm Massachusetts welcome at Pearl St. for the man from the land of Georgia, James Brown. Perhaps the hardest working person in show business today, James demonstrated why he is called the "King of Soul." For both of his two hour shows James was a whirlwind of activity, and for a man of 56, he certainly lived up to his reputation.

His 13 piece band, which included 2 drummers, 2 trumpets, 2 keyboards, 2 saxes, congas, surprisingly opened up with the theme from Entertainment Tonight. They then warmed up the crowd with an extended jam during which the great alto sax player, Mr. Maceo bound off the stage and onto the dance floor. Prior to James taking the stage, beautiful back-up vocalist Martha made her entrance and the scenario was set. The multitude was ready and James came out. Tearing into "Too Funky," he gave his first of many twists and patented screams. Next came the bouncing "Gonna Have A Funky Good Time," when James broke into a major sweat. After more of the ET theme he and Martha did a choreographed duet on "No Business Like Show Business," and the sentimental, soulful "Try Me," an enjoyable Valentines slow dance. This was followed by "Prisoner" ("Can we go back?), after which James payed tribute to the late Wes Montgomery. "Get Up Offa That Thing," from the movie Dr. Detroit followed, as well as some more impressive horn orchestration. Huah - get down!

James Brown, Godfather of Soul

After a short leave from the stage, James returned wearing a new red outfit, did a few mike-stand tricks, and broke into (do you feel it?!) "Cold Sweat". By the time he got to his 1965 hit "Papa's Got A Brand New Bag," the place was (good God!) jumping. Also contributing to the jubilance was "Please Please Your Love," and "Jam," which found the band rolling like a runaway train. On "Sex Machine," James stayed on the scene, playing some drums and then switched over to the keyboards. Everybody got on up, got on down to the chorus of "Party", with unified hand clapping from the whole packed place. What time it is!

Though there isn't enough space to cover the second show, I will say that the crowd was sold out, looser, and even more boisterous. James was every bit as energetic, while his rap was more significant. He recognized musicians Elvis Presley, Sam Cooke, Otis Redding, Bob Marley, Marvin Gaye, Jimi Hendrix, as well as doing Ray Charles, "Georgia On My Mind." He also mentioned John Kennedy, Martin Luther King Jr., and Robert Kennedy, calling them "the holy trinity, the princes of peace." The band had little more room to cut loose, with more bass and guitar solos taken than previously.

These shows left a lasting impression on me. It seems to me that James Brown was born to do exactly what he is doing, and that he is one of the greatest music legends to have ever lived. As a performer, he is a giant mountain; a beautiful volcanic one, that is so explosive that no one can ever even come near him. One can learn from him, listen and enjoy, but can never get as high or as close. James Brown is the original so let's hope that he'll get down to Pearl Street again sometime.

Notice: Due to technical and artistic circumstances, the scheduled Five-College Arts production Struggle for Memory will not take place tonight at Bowker Auditorium. For further information read the Collegian or contact 253-7987.

UMass Roundup

Skiers clinch, gymnasts split

By ANNE TAUGER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastic team lost to the number one ranked team in New England the University of New Hampshire, 164.7 to 178.95 on Sunday in Durham.

Senior captain, Jennifer Pancoast scored a 34.75 in overall competition, her second highest score of the season. She took third place overall.

Pancoast had an 8.5 on the balance beam, an event in which she has experienced some difficulty in recent meets.

Two victories concluded the University of Massachusetts Women's Ski Team's regular season tournament competiton. The Minutewomen won both the slalom and giant slalom races at Berkshire East to secure the division title.

Senior captain Sue White placed second in Saturday's slalom against fine competition from Boston College and Plymouth State College. Freshman Colleen Sweeney finished third.

In their final race of the regular season, the UM women took top honors by an incredible margin of 10 full seconds in the giant slalom. Plymouth was second. Kathy Smiley was in fine form edging out BC's Hourihan by two tenths of a second for first.

Final results for the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference women's teams put UMass first over Plymouth and third place Boston College. In the individual results, Smiley tied for first.

This past weekend at Berkshire East, the men skiers finished their last two regular season races in first place. The two victories sealed the division title for UMass.

UM packed the top ten in Saturday's slalom with five of their eight racers. Dan Conway led the team in second place, two tenths of a second behind George Abdow of Boston College.

Senior Bob Faigel won his first college race Sunday in the giant slalom.

Massachusetts finished the regular season in first place followed closely by Boston College. George Abdow of BC won the individual season title followed by Conway, Faigel and Jon Segal.

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team, now 6-3, defeated Massachusetts Institute of Technology last Saturday by a score of 252.9-199.9, controlling first place in all events.

Phil Gorgone stole first on vaulting with a 9.25. With a 9.35, senior Pete Lucchini captured first on floor exercise. Co-captains Ken Dougherty (pommel horse) and Tony Sbarra (high bar) took first with an 8.9 and 9.5 respectively. Joe DeMarco cleaned up on the still rings with a 9.0.

6 overall, and their 6-7 dunking sensation center Georgeann Wells, invades the Springfield Civic Center.

Wells holds the distinction as becoming the first female to officially slam dunk in a regulation game. However, UMass head coach Barbara Stevens doesn't expect her act to make an appearance in Springfield.

"If anyone wants to see Georgeann Wells dunk, they had better show up at warmups," Stevens said. "Because that's the only time she'll be dunking."

She, along with 6-4 all-conference forward Olivia Bradley should create problems for the Minutewomen. With a deadly inside game, the Mountaineers can be expected to pass inside often while clogging up the middle on defense.

UMass duels West Virginia tonight

Minutemen ready to dump A-10 leaders, Russell shots for record

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts basketball team plays its most important game of the season tonight, taking on the West Virginia Mountaineers at the Springfield Civic Center.

"With all we've done, getting to fourth in the league, beating George Washington and getting over .500, beating West Virginia would be one more step," UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen said.

The Minutemen, 12-11 and 8-6 in the Atlantic 10, were beaten by the Mountaineers 82-59 in Morgantown. Gale Catlett's squad has since tied Temple for first in the league with a 12-2 record. They are 16-7 overall and have made post-season tournaments four years in a row.

UM co-captain Donald Russell needs six points to tie the Minutemen career scoring record.

The secondary attraction will by UMass guard Donald Russell's attempt to break the all-time scoring record of 1,407 points held by Mike Pyatt. The senior co-captain needs but six points for the record.

West Virginia leads the season series with UMass 15-3, but lost 71-60 in The Cage last year. The Minutemen and the Mountaineers have played in some heated contests in the past four years and the UMass seniors badly want to make the most of their last chance to dump WVU. Game time is 7:30 p.m. (see box).

Russell (16 points-per-game), senior co-captain Horace Neysmith (14.3 ppg and 8.8 rebounds), senior forward Bobby Braun (9.5 ppg, 9.9 rebounds), sophomore point guard Carl Smith (8.8 and 4.4 assists) and freshman small forward Lorenzo Sutton (7.1 ppg) will start for UMass. Key reserves include freshman guard Matt Ryan (only 2.3 ppg, but good defense), forward Darryl Carter (4.0 ppg) and 6-9 center Tom Emerson (1.5 ppg.)

West Virginia will use its deep bench, playing up to nine players. Likely starters include 6-9 center Darrell Pickney, 6-5 forward Lester Rowe (13.9 ppg and a league-leading 56 percent from the floor), 6-5 forward Renardo Brown, 6-1 point guard Holman Harley and 6-4 off-guard Dale Blaney.

Bench strength comes from 6-1 J.J. Crawl, 6-7 Wayne Yearwood, 6-8 Eric Semisch and 6-2 Vern Odom. The Mountaineers like to press and run the break, like UMass.

"The transition game will be the thing in this game," Gerlufsen said. "I don't expect there will be much half-court play."

The Minutemen lost to WVU during a two game losing streak in early January. They committed 18 first-half turnovers and couldn't get much of an offense going.

"We hope to correct that and play our game this time," Gerlufsen said. "We'll change defenses frequently because you can't key on any one of their players. We'd like to keep our inside game flowing and get good perimeter shooting from the guards, but defense is always the key for us."

UMass freshman Lorenzo Sutton challenges George Washington's Mike Brown in action on Saturday. UM faces West Virginia tonight.

Following their 63-55 victory over George Washington on Saturday, the Minutemen will be looking for more A-10 respect.

"This is the game for us, right now," Gerlufsen said. "I think we're ready to take another step."

Give W. Virginia a rude welcome

If you are unable to provide your own transportation for tonight's game, buses will be running from Boyden Gym, the first departing at 6 p.m. A valid UMass ID is required to board the bus. Tickets are available at the Boyden Ticket Office or at the Springfield Civic Center box office. Again, a valid UMass ID is required.

Minutewomen also on tap facing powerful Mountaineers

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team has been out to show opponents that they are for real. Entering tonight's game against the West Virginia Mountaineers, (at Springfield, 5 p.m.) the Minutewomen (12-13), have won six of their last eight games including Tuesday night's 74-68 conference victory over Rhode Island.

Barbara Hebel, scoring 12.2 points per game, comes off a season-high 21 point performance and has been showing the scoring punch that has been missing since last season. However, with the rapid progress of Juanita Matthews, (19 points against Rhode Island), Tara Lewis, Karen Fitzgerald, and captain Jerrie Bernier, the necessity of Hebel's scoring has been reduced. Team play has been consistent with the burden of scoring spread around among the starting five with Matthews coming off the bench.

Once again team play will be the key as West Virginia 5-1 in the Atlantic 10 and 17-

Sports Log

Tony Betros

Just a few thoughts...

The place: Madison Square Garden. The date: Monday, February 18. The time: 10:00 p.m. An event that went down in history along with the Stock Market crash, Pearl Harbor, and the 1969 New York Mets. It will be known in the annals of your history textbooks as "The War to Settle the Score."

Last Monday, MTV aired a World Wide Wrestling Federation heavyweight (yes, there are other weight classes) championship. Why MTV? Well, it seems that one of the participants who goes by the monikker of Rowdy Roddy Piper took a disliking to people like Cindi Lauper and champion Hulk Hogan, who were trying to bring rock and wrestling together...As Piper once said, "You strum guitars, I beat people up. Where's the connection?" It seems that there was a lot of bad blood between the two, so they had a match on Monday. To make a long story short, Piper was disqualified for outside interference and Hogan was declared the champ again.

What made this hour of television the funniest and silliest of all time were the people involved...During the fight, Mr. T (the same one with the Mohawk, the TV show, and cereal) jumped in to the aide of Hogan and was subsequently knocked down by Piper. Mr. T was trying to protect Lauper, who has nothing better to do than change her hair color every 20 minutes and go to wrestling matches...But that was only the half of it. Many rock stars--Twisted Sister's Dee Snyder, Scandals' Patty Smyth and Peter Wolf to name a few--voiced animosity towards Piper. Billy Squier almost personally challenged Piper himself when Piper broke a guitar before the match.

But wait, there's more. These two names you won't believe--Gloria Steinham and Geraldine Ferraro. One of the founders of women's liberation and almost the vice-president of the United States are involved in professional wrestling. The next thing you'll see is Reagan throwing out the first loser and Pope John Paul II giving the benediction (I had to mention the Pope, it is Lent)...Steinham and Ferraro were vehemently upset at Piper's "attitude" towards women. But we have to remember that Piper, being of Scottish desent, wears a kilt, or skirt, as it were. So he doesn't exactly intimidate people. Maybe if he wore pumps.

But, back to the match, it doesn't look like this war is over by a long shot. Mr. T wants another shot at Piper. Joe Piscipo and Danny DeVito, who were both there want to see more action. MTV would love to do another broadcast maybe with Martha Quinn interviewing Piper. Now that would be funny. But until then we'll just have to wait and see. So, when you think of all the great television moments--the landing on the moon, Carlton Fisk's home run, The Day After and the others--put this one right along side. If you believe that, I got some Martian Soil to sell you.

No more need be said.

Smith poll reveals views on divestment

By RENEE BACHER
Collegian Staff

In a tense atmosphere, a committee of Smith College students met yesterday with some of the college's trustees to discuss the social implications of Smith's investment portfolio.

The Senate Ethical Investment Committee, a part of Smith's student government association, met with the trustee investor responsibility committee to present the trustees with research pertaining to corporate policy in relation to nuclear weaponry, fair labor policy and South Africa.

Mai-Ning Thayer, a member of the student committee, said, "The students feel there is a gap between what the trustees are doing and what the students think they're doing."

The student committee is asking for a way to monitor the interplay between Smith and the corporations in which it invests, such as access to letters between the college and the companies.

The board of trustees emphasized the importance of "preserving candor" in handling the college's investments. Committee Chairwoman Suzianne Pack replied, "We only want the gist of the letters. We would not be printing them in the Wall Street Journal."

According to a recent student survey pertaining to Smith corporate investments, 84 percent of Smith students polled said Smith should support a resolution recently presented to Ford Motor Company to stop selling to the South African police and military. 98 percent believed the Kimberly-Clark Corporation should sign a list of principles providing equal employment policies for its workers in South Africa.

69 percent objected to Smith College investing in bank loans to the South African government. 84 percent thought Smith should not invest in corporations directly involved with the production of nuclear weaponry. 59 percent of the students polled said social responsibility was most important to take into account when investing, while 17 percent said that economic return was more important.

Man is arrested in Delano's heist

A 28-year-old Amherst man was arrested Wednesday afternoon at his Prospect Street apartment and charged with Tuesday's robbery of a Delano's employee, Amherst Police said.

Jeffrey A. Jenkins was charged with unarmed robbery and will be held in Hampshire County Jail. He was arraignged yesterday afternoon at the Hampshire District Court.

Jenkins pleaded not guilty and bail was posted at $5,000 cash or $50,000 surety, which he was unable to raise.

The case will be reviewed at a pre-trial hearing Feb. 28.

In other police reports:

•A 21-year-old Amherst driver struck a bicyclist Tuesday night while turning from Main Street on to High Street.

The incident is still under police investigation.

•The Lord Jeffrey Inn reported a larceny after a guest paid his $194.34 bill with a bad check. The Lord Jeffrey contacted the Hanover Bank & Trust of New Hampshire and found that the account was closed over a year ago.

University may release report

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Members of the faculty senate Rules Committee will meet with Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey today to discuss whether the University should issue publicly a faculty committee report on the Yvette Henry case.

Duffey was unavailable for comment yesterday, although sources within the faculty senate indicated that a decision would be reached by late afternoon.

The report, obtained by the Collegian last week, has not yet been made available to the public, although a member of the Rules Committee requested its release last week.

David Booth, chairman of the Rules Committee, which commissioned the report a year ago, said it "would be in the best interest of Henry and the University to speak with the chancellor" before reaching a decision.

The report is the result of four months of interviews between the faculty senate Committee on the Status of Minorities and six people who were "present and involved" on Dec. 2, 1983, when Henry was arrested on arson charges.

Henry was arrested and charged with setting one of the 16 fires which plagued Crampton House in the fall of 1983. Charges were later dropped because of insufficient evidence. Henry has two $6.5 million lawsuits pending against the University for alleged violations of her civil rights during and after her arrest.

The report, completed last May, examined the events surrounding Henry's arrest and concluded that Henry's civil rights had been violated. It also found that Henry's "minority status may have played a part in the conduct of the investigation and the arrest," and that Henry's "minority status may have played a part in the way the Dean of Students Office behaved" in the case.

The report also made a number of recommendations to keep what it called "panic among University administrators" in the Henry case from happening in the future.

Historian speaks at chancellor's lecture series

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Ordinary 16th century European culture flourished due to the diversity in publishing caused by the Protestant Reformation, scholar Miriam Usher Chrisman explained last night.

Chrisman, a University of Massachusetts history professor and award winning author, was a featured speaker of the Chancellor's Lecture Series at Memorial Hall.

Chrisman was also awarded the Chancellor's Medal by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, who said that her lecture "demonstrated the verve and interest in history which we treasure in you and on this campus." The Chancellor's Medal is the highest award given to individuals who have rendered exemplary and extraordinary service to the University.

Speaking to an enthusiastic audience of about 250 people, Chrisman detailed her research conducted in Strasbourg, France, an early center of publishing. While there, she studied material printed between 1480 and 1599, focusing on the topics that replaced religious works after 1530.

Noting the sudden drop in volume of religious work after 1530, Chrisman studied what took its place by examining almost 5,700 books in 85 different subject matter categories.

"I finally decided that the major thing that happened is that when the Catholic church and its monastic orders were removed (following the Protestant Reformation), the printers lost their major market," she said. "So they sought a vernacular audience."

In order to retain their former printing volume, printers began publishing books on botany, geography cartography, other cultures, and how-to books on cooking, healing, gardening, prosecuting a lawsuit and even mining, she said.

Plays, songs, and novels also began to appear, usually containing themes of marriage and family life, but not necessarily the youthful love that led to such, Chrisman said.

Because of these works, she said, "The lay cultures flourished...and it was often the printers who took the initiative." They served as information collectors, drawing their knowledge from travellers, doctors and other professionals to produce their publications.

"They had a desire for detailed, factual information," Chrisman said, "and they had a willing acceptance of different ideas and peoples. The emphasis was on different."

Chrisman said that Christopher Columbus' observations of the Americas were published and distributed only four years after his return, even though he was "an ordinary person."

Soviet says US seeks 'superiority'

MOSCOW — The Kremlin said yesterday that if the United States develops the Star Wars system it will intensify the arms race because the Soviet Union would be forced to build weapons powerful enough to defeat it.

"Does the United States think the Soviet Union will sit idle, awaiting the results of the U.S. 'research'?" Kremlin spokesman Leonid Zamyatin said. "Faced with such dangerous plans, the Soviet Union will do all in its power to prevent a U.S. superiority over itself.

"The Soviet Union would have to increase the power of its weapons in retaliation for the attempts of the United States to get an opportunity to deliver a nuclear strike with impunity," he said in an article distributed by the official news agency Tass.

Zamyatin is chief of the Communist Party Central Committee's international information department and is one of the Kremlin's chief spokesmen.

Tass also quoted Andrei Kokoshin, deputy director of a think tank called the U.S.A.-Canada Institute, as saying international scientists fear a new arms race if the United States develps space weapons.

"The other Soviet side, scientists believe, will take steps to further develop its strategic systems which guarantee it a possibility of hitting a retaliatory strike," he said. "Creation of space armaments, including anti-missile weapons, will inevitably lead to appearance of opposing systems, and that will be followed by the appearance of other weapons to deal with those systems."

Bank faults employees in Angiulo deals

BOSTON (AP) - The First National Bank of Boston broke its silence yesterday on its multi-million dollar dealings with a reputed mob family, blaming several mid-level employees for "very poor judgment" that may have allowed the bank to unwittingly be used by organized crime.

Chairman William L. Brown told reporters the bank gained nothing - "not one dime, not one gratuity" - by its dealings with the family of Gennaro Anguilo, who is considered the head of New England's most powerful organized crime network.

Brown said employees at the North End branch here simply made an innocent mistake and used "very poor judgment" when they placed two real estate companies owned by the Anguilos on a list that exempted their large cash transactions from government scrutiny.

"Just because we're big doesn't mean we don't make mistakes," Brown said. "You're assuming all our employees are perfect and they are not...For God's sake, don't hang the whole institution because somebody did not read or interpret something correctly."

New find in '79 mishap at Three Mile Island

MIDDLETOWN, Pa. (AP)— Scientists disclosed for the first time yesterday that some nuclear fuel melted in the reactor core during the 1979 accident at Three Mile Island.

Recent studies of rubble taken from the core show that temperatures reached about 5,100 Fahrenheit, said Harold Burton, TMI project manager for EG&G Idaho, a contractor hired by the U.S. Department of Energy.

Previous examinations had indicated a maximum temperature of 4,700 degrees.

But Burton and officials for GPU Nuclear Corp., TMI's operator, said the melting of fuel did not mean the plant was close to a "meltdown." A meltdown could result in the release of dangerous radiation outside the plant.

In a prepared statement, EG&G said it was not clear how much of the core reached 5,100 degrees, and said further conclusions awaited additional evaluations.

Burton's announcement came at a news conference held by GPU to show television pictures showed fist-sized chunks of rubble, perhaps including some molten nuclear fuel, fell from the reactor core during the accident.

The videotape indicated a three-foot-deep bed of debris at the bottom of the steel vessel that contains the core.

During the accident the nation's worst at a commercial nuclear power plant the core of the Unit 2 reactor overheated when it was no longer covered with cooling water.

Salem cleans up vandalism

SALEM (AP) - Angry residents of this historic city flooded Salem High School with offers of cleanup assistance yesterday, after a late-night student drinking party at the school allegedly escalated into a vandalism binge that caused $750,000 in destruction.

"I have piles of telephone messages on my desk and with 99 percent of them, the person has left his name and number and has offered to come in and help clean up," said high school Principal Edward Curtin.

"We have librarians who are volunteering to help clean up the library. We have students from Salem State College and Salem High School. People are being unbelievably positive in terms of being willing to come in and help," he added.

Two more students pleaded innocent yesterday to breaking and entering and malicious destruction of public property in connection with the Tuesday morning spree.

Smith student fights famine

Entering Miss Mass. pageant to publicize efforts

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

A Smith College Student plans to participate in the Miss Massachusetts beauty contest to aid in the fight against world hunger.

Bridget Marks, 18, a senior French studies major, began the World Energy Foundation in May 1981. The foundation is dedicated to "eradication of world hunger through rural technology," Marks said.

"I feel that if I can capture the title (of Miss Massachusetts) I can get national media attention for the foundation," she said.

Marks said she feels her approach to battling world hunger is "more practical" than what is currently being done for Third World countries. "They are collecting food and throwing it at the people (of Ethiopia) like they were cattle," she said. "It's like putting a Band-aid on a bleeding artery.

"Beauty pageants can really open the doors for you," she said, adding that she believes the beauty pageant industry will welcome her "with open arms" and that she thinks the industry would like to be involved with fighting world hunger, especially since Miss America winner Vanessa Williams last year resigned after Penthouse magazine published nude photographs of her.

One of Marks' ideas is to get other contestants to work with her foundation. "I think that more people would like to work with fifty beautiful girls," she said.

The Miss Massachusetts contest will be held March 1 - 3 in Worcester. The winner will compete in the Miss USA pageant.

One hundred forty contestants will vie for the Miss Massachusetts title. "It will be tough competition," Marks said.

UMass sophomore raps aid cuts on TV

Debates education secretary

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts student challenged Secretary of Education William J. Bennett's support of the Reagan administration's proposed cutbacks on financial aid last week on the Good Morning America show.

Sheila Donahue, a 20-year-old sophomore, was one of three students who appeared on the nationally televised show to debate Bennett on the cutbacks in financial aid for the fiscal 1986 federal budget. The students debated Bennett via closed circuit television on the pros and cons of the proposed financial aid cutbacks.

As a response to Bennett's statement that "the new policy will fall - like rain - on the just and the unjust," Donahue asked, "Why do people who are just in their need have to suffer because of people who take advantage of the financial aid system?"

Donahue said Bennett was patient with her and the other students' questions but "gave a statement that seemed prepared" and held a firm stance on Reagan's proposal. On the proposed cutbacks, Donahue said, "The financially prosperous students will have the right to go to the school of choice, but those who are on the borderline of financial need will have a more difficult time paying for school."

The student trio consisted of Donahue, a pre-law student from New York, and a high school senior from Washington, D.C. All three were required to meet criteria of financial need for school to be on the show.

Sheila Donahue appeared on Good Morning America.

Donahue works at the Office of Public Information on campus. She became a regular part-time staff member after working there on a work-study program last spring.

Good Morning America contacted the OPI through an agency and asked if there was a student who could meet financial aid criteria and would like to appear on the early morning show. Arthur Clifford, director of OPI, said the show chose Donahue because she met the criteria of need and "she is a good student and a hard worker."

New stamp rates jam post offices

By DANIEL WHITE
Collegian Staff

Everyone at the University of Massachusetts willing to pay the extra two cents to mail a letter and an extra cent to mail a postcard faces long lines at area post offices.

Both the branch in the Student Union Building and the Amherst post office have had problems with long lines since just before and after the rate increase.

"It's been incredible," said Charles Carter, the bulk mail clerk at the Amherst Post Office. He added that there were a lot of people coming in before the increase.

At the Student Union Brnach, there have been long lines of people buying two cent stamps and workers at the office said they were "too busy" to comment.

As of last Sunday, the United States Postal Service raised its mailing rates to 22 cents for a letter and 14 cents for a post card to comply with the Postal Reorganization Act, which requires the service to make money or break even.

The law was passed so that the post office would no longer have to rely on government subsidies to stay in business, said John Bates, spokesman for the Springfield post office.

The rate increase is based on a projected loss for the upcoming year which was then submitted to the Rate Commission for approval. The increases occur every three to four years, Bates said. The last increase occured in 1981, when the rate went from 18 to 20 cents.

Professor helps turn pizza shop into offices

The Creamery building, left, on Sunset Avenue near The Southwest Residential Area, will soon be converted into a "smart" office building, seen looking due west in an artists's conception below.

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

A metropolitan business concept designed to improve office efficiency and service will be brought to Amherst by a University of Massachusetts marketing professor and a local architect.

The Creamery Building on Sunset Avenue which houses College Pizza will be renovated into a "smart" office building in which the basic secretarial work, copying, computer work and conference room will be shared by all of the business tenants in the building, according to Professor Thomas Beggs, who will be part owner of the building.

Reynolds Properties, the real estate agent for the building, is mostly looking for businesses which provide services to the University such as copy machine and computer service, to rent space, said Lisa Berkman of Reynolds Properties.

Office space will be rented for $13 to $15.50 per square foot, Berkman said.

"It's more a matter of efficiency than money," Beggs said. "Usually what happens is that they (businesses which can't afford services) do without." They are basically receiving the services of a big corporation without paying for a big corporation, Beggs added. "Businesses may pay $200 a week for a secretary," he said.

According to Berkman, each tenant will decide in advance how much of the central services will be needed and pay accordingly. The secretarial service will be its own business and will control the central services. Ownership of the computers, copying machines and other office equipment will be decided upon by the tenants, she said.

According to Beggs, the concept of centralized clerical service was first used by law firms in large cities. "Basically, this spreads the costs of clerical work among the buildings tenants," he said.

The building has been redesigned by William Gillen of The Gillen Associates of Amherst. "We're trying to bring back the turn-of-the-century look," Beggs said.

The renovated buidling will open about Sept. 1, according to Berkman.

Beggs added that his involvement in the project will not interfere with his University duties as a professor.

Celebration unites all races

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

There is hardly ever a time at the University of Massachusetts when people of all races gather together for one sole purpose.

Wednesday, Vietnamese new year, was one of these rare occasions.

Over 100 faculty, staff members and students gathered to celebrate the year of the water buffalo, (the year of the ox, for the Chinese,) counterpart of the peasant farmer.

"Today I feel homesick," said Lucy Nguyen, a Bilingual Collegiate Program academic advisor for Vietnamese students.

"Today is a family reunion day. If Christmas is important to the Western culture, the new year celebration is far more important to the Orientals," she said.

The importance of the celebration lies in its tribute to their ancestors. Nothing must be done to offend them. Indeed, every member of the family tries to do them honor, and thus improve his moral and social standing.

The worship of ancestors is celebrated on New Year's day, on festival holidays in the lunar calendar and on all other family occasions such as marriage, birth, and other.

Keynote speaker, Deidre Ling, vice chancellor for the University relations and development compared the Asian population at UMass with the proverb "a small beginning can become a great end."

In the fall of 1983, 495 Asian undergraduate and graduate students enrolled at UMass. A year later it increased to 565.

Benjamin Rodriguez, director of the BCP said it was rewarding "to see young people from different nationalities and backgrounds working and helping each other for a common goal, success."

BLACK AFFAIRS

Minorities will be challenged next four years

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

Black and minority students at the University of Massachusetts will be affected most by the proposed four thousand dollar limit on financial aid, according to Arthur Jackson director of financial aid.

"With the combination of the Pell grant and guaranteed student loans, most students go over the four thousand dollar limit. This proposal will cause students to lose substantial amounts of financial aid," Jackson said. The president's proposal asks congress to deny federally guaranteed student loans to all college students with family incomes above $32,500.

It also imposes a $4,000 ceiling in aid per year including loans and grants for any student, regardless of family income and restricts eligibility of pell grants to families earning $25,000 or more.

Manuel R. Townes, assistant director of academic services at the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Blacks and Other Minorities, (CCEBMS) suspects eighty to eighty-five percent of the minority population at UMass will be affected by the decrease.

"Most minority students receive some sort of financial aid," said Townes, therefore the financial aid cut will affect them greatly.

Minority enrollment is already being affected by the cuts. Many out-of-state students are transferring to schools in their home states, he said.

Townes added there are two sides to the problem, "federal programs will be cut and the University is going to increase their fees."

"The bottom line is that the federal government is no longer going to give minorities special treatment when it comes to financial aid," he said.

In order for students to receive the financial aid that is available they should file their financial aid form on time. The deadline is March 1. "Every student in the country will be competing for limited amounts of money," said Townes.

"Minority students need to make a much stronger voice. They need to become active in coalitions. Write letters to their representatives in Congress," Jackson stressed.

"It would be much more of a struggle in the next four years if my financial aid was cut," said Bridgette Booker, a first year Afro-American studies student.

Jose O. Bou, financial aid counselor at the Bilingual Collegiate Program said, "what the government is doing is creating an atmosphere of antagonism and what people will do is fight back."

He said the aid cuts will unite people of all financial backgrounds, "from below the poverty level to people that make up to 50,000 dollars a year.

The end result should be a student national opposition forcing the government to retrieve the proposal.

"We have not had the student body behind one single issue, there is a long overdue need for UMass to set an example for other (colleges and universities) this is the opportunity and we better take it," Bou said.

Valley shares King's dream

By CHARLES F. CARROLL
Collegian Staff

Rekindling the fire of the late Martin Luther King's philosophy of non-violence, direct action in the struggle for Black civil rights, the issue of apartheid was discussed at a commemorative breakfast early this week.

Keynote speaker, Dr. Cheryl Townsend Gilkes of Boston University Divinity School implored the crowd of 300 people to "see through the veneer of racism and colonialism," in the separatist government of South Africa.

"One half of the black chidren born in South Africa will die by the age of five," she said.

Gilkes referred to Jesus' jubilee and spoke of the global jubilee, based on "restoration, wholeness, and a new beginning." She talked of "restoring order in the world's house, but who's order?"

Gilkes criticized the Reagan Administration for cutting back funds for education on one hand, and "trivializing investment in South Africa" on the other. She exhorted, "the struggle must be our lives."

Gilkes pointed out that while crying with the poor, one must understand the cause of their tears," and that this understanding of the forces of oppression was tantamount to Jesus giving sight to the blind.

Over thirty public relations firms had been hired by the South African government to clean up their image, she said. Gilkes claimed their work was apparent in a recent statement by the Apartheid government about the massive starvation in Northern Africa.

According to Gilkes, the South African minority government cited "the Ethiopian famine as an example of Black African mismanagement," to suggest Blacks are incapable of ruling themselves.

She said this is an example of Botha's government attempt to distract the rest of the world from the real reasons for Apartheid; the exploitation and extermination of the native African people.

Gilkes compared the United States' inability to see the true nature of Apartheid, to the parable of the blind. She said was modelled after the American Indian Bureau of the U.S. and the haulocast of Nazi Germany.

Those who could see through the veneer of racism would be those who could walk with the Lord. The "good news" of Jesus was "good news to the poor and bad news to the rich," said the Baptist minister.

Black History

Paul Laurence Dunbar was one of America's most famous poets of the nineteenth century.

Most of his poems were light, funny, dialect stories about the lives of Black Americans. However, he was also called the "Poet Laureate" of his people for some of his serious poetry.

He was the only Black American in his Dayton High School class and he was selected as the editor of the high school paper. He published his first poem when he was sixteen.

His second book of poetry, "Majors and Minors" brought him national and international fame. In 1897, Paul Laurence Dunbar was invited to read some of his poetry in London as part of the Diamond Jubilee celebration of Queen Victoria.

Shabazz attends X's rededication

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

Betty Shabazz, the widow of Malcolm X will give a lecture at the annual rededication ceremony of the Malcolm X center at 4 p.m. on Sunday in the Southwest residential area at the University of Massachusetts.

Malcolm X was a militant civil rights activist who believed in any means necessary to achieve the human rights of Blacks. He was assassinated on February 21, 1965.

The Center was created in 1971 to serve the education and cultural needs of the Black student population at UMass.

This is the first time in the center's fourteen year history Shabazz has attended the rededication ceremony.

The center, commonly known as the "X" serves as a study lounge, in addition to providing students with classes, a library and resource room and leisure and social events.

"It's a place to get away and relax," said Cassandra Edwards, co-coordinator of the center. Edwards has worked in the center during her four years at UMass.

She has seen the center develop from a social to an educational resource area. She hopes this year's rededication ceremony rejuvinates the enthusiasm and dedication there was when the center was founded.

She also hopes the rededication makes new students see the need for its existence.

The center was named after Malcolm X because the people who founded it thought that it represented the ideals and beliefs of Malcolm X.

Edwards said the ceremony is "A time to sit down and reflect on the past, present, and future."

Gumby makes a comeback

I was walking on campus a couple of weeks ago, the day all of that snow fell on us, and school wasn't cancelled, and everything looked so beautiful and white. The only trouble was that it was freezing. My ears were falling off! Then I started to think about Richie Rich. Do you remember him? He was "The Poor Little Rich Boy." He was so rich that his father built him a Winterwonderland, remember that? He could do all of the fun winter things like iceskate, and go sleigh-riding, but he never got cold or wet because Mr. Rich designed great synthetic snow.

Well, I started thinking about how much easier life would be as a cartoon character. Remember Lotta and Dot? Big, fat, strong Lotta? Even her name was big, as in Lot-ta Lotta. She could eat to her heart's content, break every chair she sat in, and no one cared because she could hit a baseball out of the park.

Then there were the Archies. I'm not sure I would have liked to have been an Archie. Yeah, if you are male it's O.K. The men had it great. Archie always had either Betty or Veronica, whoever he felt like going out with at the time. But we know that Betty was Veronica with blonde hair, and vice versa. Alright, I'll confess. I used to color in Betty's blonde hair with a dark magic marker and that's how I found out. Then I didn't feel so bad for her. How about poor Ethel and what Jughead used to do to her. Boy, talk about rejection! All he cared about were hamburgers.

The Archies did serve as important role models in our lives. Midge and Moose were an example of stability in a relationship. Moose would get a little jealous and pound someone's head into the ground but by the last box Midge would have forgiven him and there would be little cartoon hearts floating by their heads.

What better way to end this little expose than with a tribute to Gumby and Pokey. They, (if you haven't noticed) are making a tremendous comeback.

Parents, children, teachers, workers, and even vigilantes are all softened and reassured by the return of Gumby. It's like being able to see the crew from the Starship Enterprise. When Gumby's around, waiting to be twisted into all kinds of different shapes, do you think about nuclear war? No way. With Gumby back in our lives, everything's gonna be O.K.

The soldiers finally go home

Deborah Kutenplon

When the kindergarten class took an Independence Day field trip to a tank factory, Yaacov Shein's nephew came home and announced he wanted to be a tank when he grew up.

Yaacov, an Israeli reserve soldier, refused to fight in Lebanon. He is one of nearly 150 Israeli soldiers and officers who have served time in jail for similar refusals, but the resistance has been much bigger than that; thousands of soldiers signed the petition of the Yesh Gvul movement which states in part: "We have killed and are being killed too much in this war...And for what?...Through this war you (the government) are trying to find a military solution for the Palestinian problem. But a people's problem cannot be solved militarily."

The Israeli army is finally starting to pull out of Lebanon. But the "people's problem" remains unsolved.

I've heard so many debates between Jews and Palestinian supporters; people hurl accusations at each other, cite case after case of horrendous acts of terrorism committed by the other side, and condemn each other as understanding nothing but force. What does it all mean?

I believe the Jews mean, "We are afraid. We have never been completely safe as Jews in other peoples' lands, even when we have felt accepted by a country. After all, we felt secure in Germany for a long time. As long as a Jewish state exists we will have somewhere to go. Yet Israel's security problems are very real, surrounded as it is by nations hostile to its existence."

I believe the Palestinians mean, "We have had our land taken away, and our freedom. Many of us have lived all our lives inside the camps. We are reminded constantly of the oppression and indignity of our daily lives by the conditions in which we are forced to live, and by the liberties Israeli soldiers and government feel free to take with our lives and our humanity. We must have a land of our own."

But Jewish safety and Palestinian justice are not mutually exclusive. In fact, they may well be mutally dependent.

Yesh Gvul and other Israeli peace groups assert that the occupied territories – in particular, the West Bank and Southern Lebanon – are occupying Israel, with democracy as hostage. No country can say "For these people we are a democracy, for these a military dictatorship" without the democracy rotting from within. Just look at South Africa. Yesh Gvul, which means "There is a limit, a border," is fighting for nothing less than Israel's survival.

There is no question that Jews have been oppressed and often persecuted throughout our history. But can our fear, our desperate scramble for security, justify any action? It matters not that it is a Jewish hand that holds the gun, or a Jewish soldier that rapes an Arab woman as part of the colonization of a people, or Jewish military police that "interrogate" Palestinian suspects to death. Oppression is oppression. That we Jews, who have been victims so long, could do this to another people is shameful. As Yaacov Shein said, "We know what it is like to be Jews. Well, now there is another nation of Jews, the Palestinians."

As always, the question of Nazi Germany comes up. In light of the Holocaust, how can we afford to "allow" the Palestinians an independent state which could possibly someday threaten Israel's survival? In light of the Holocaust, how can we afford not to?

New fee penalizes

I think that the new University resource fee goes too far in spreading the cost of on campus housing to those who don't use it. Since $171 of the fee will go solely to the housing system, off-campus students will effectively pay $19 a month more in rent to someone else's landlord.

Some subsidy may be appropriate. Most undergraduates would benefit from the lower housing costs during their first two years. Everyone living off-campus benefits indirectly because low dorm rents help insure that the dorms will be full, thus reducing demand for off campus housing.

However, it is ridiculous to subsidize so much that dorm costs are reduced. During the past two years the housing system was 100.6 percent full in the fall, 95.0 percent in the spring. Reducing rents further will not reduce off-campus demand because the dorms are already full. It will only penalize off-campus students. This penalty is especially unfair to graduate students because most of them never live in University housing.

An environment in jeopardy

Neil Rhein

Ronald Reagan has done it again. With his grandfatherly smile, a twinkle of the eye, and evasive rhetoric he has managed to ignore one of, if not the most pressing environmental issues of the 1980s. That issue is acid rain pollution.

When one stops to think about it, it is amazing that there hasn't been more public indignation over the Reagan Administration's approach to the acid rain problem. Acid rain is a form of pollution in which sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxide, and other pollutants are emitted into the atmosphere, whereupon they mix and return to earth in the form of highly acidic rain. Most acid rain is falling right here in the Northeastern United States and in Canada.

It has been proven conclusively by independent, impartial scientific panels that this high acidity is responsible for stunted tree growth and "dead" lakes. One half of the spruce trees in Vermont's Camel's Hump Park have died since 1965. In New York State's Adirondack Park there are over 300 lifeless lakes and streams which at one time teemed with trout and plant life.

Some people may argue that the loss of a few fish is not worth the billions it would cost to rectify the situation. But when one considers the fact that fish and trees are both a part of the natural food chain basic to human survival, it should be clear that no price is too high.

Ronald Reagan's stubborn response to all this has been that "more study is needed" before legislation is enacted. He ignores the National Academy of Science, who in 1981 called for a "prompt tightening of restrictions" on sulfur dioxide emissions from Midwest coal burning plants. Unsatisfied with this conclusion, Reagan initiated a White House review of the problem. Their conclusion was that an even stronger and immediate reduction of sulfur dioxide emissions was needed to avoid irreparable damage to the environment. That conclusion was finally made public after being supressed for months.

The miners of high sulfur coal worry needlessly about the loss of their jobs. Mechanical scrubbers could be installed which cleanse the coal of 90 percent of its sulfur, thus ensuring the continued use of their product. The electricity consumers oppose any hike in thier electric rates to help finance the cleanup, claiming it's not their responsibility. But the fact that Ohio alone emits more sulfur dioxide annually than New York, New Jersey, and the New England states combined points to the obvious conclusion that they should share in the cost of emission reductions.

The Reagan Administration has echoed the argument that emission controls would unfairly penalize some states. But isn't it unfair to destory the ecology and future well-being of the fishing, recreation and tourism industries of the Northeast United States and Canada?

Ronald Reagan has proven himself to be a powerful and successful leader. To tackle the acid rain problem, strong presidential leadership is needed to reach a compromise. Simply throwing money at the EPA, hoping in vain that new studies will reach a different conclusion, is not the answer.

An acid rain program would take seven to 10 years to produce a significant reduction. It is estimated that the cost would be $8 to $10 billion annually. In 1986 Caspar Weinberger hopes to spend $277.5 billion on the military, in what Ronald Reagan calls "government's first responsibility" of national security. The continued survival of our environment should fall under that same category and warrant a slice of Weinberger's pie

People, like everyone else

Matthew Benedict

Dick and Jane are housemates. They live in a small but cozy apartment in Pelham. Dick is an engineering major; Jane, an English major. They both like theatre and skiing. Dick is a great cook, while Jane is an accomplished pianist. They are not lovers, but are close friends. They are both homosexuals.

At times, Dick and Jane feel forcibly exiled to Pelham. To live – ostracized – separated even from friends, with seemingly scarlet "H's" embroidered on their clothes. Their neighbors think they are "living in sin." To some, they are.

On some occasions, Dick and Jane have housed friends who needed a place to relax. Broken heart, sour romances; anxious feelings of utter loneliness. Some people look upon Dick and Jane as being lucky: they're away from the mainstream enough not to be labeled or condemned. Dick and Jane feel it a punishment.

One morning, upon going out to his car to leave for school, Dick found the word "FAG" painted in pink all over his car. His heart filled with rage; his wrists clinched. He had enough; this was not the first incident.

Dick walked to the nearest bus stop. On the bus, Dick noticed all the "normal" people. The ones with the bright smiling faces and horny glances at the opposite sex. "What do they have to worry about?" Dick asked himself. "A nose zit? What to wear out tonight? Who to lie to for sex?" He felt like jumping up and yelling "I'm gay!" but he knew, "What would that prove?" Sadly, he settled back into his self-absorbed gloom like everyone else, fitting into the mold so no one would notice his "eccentricity."

Dick and Jane are no different from any other person, gay or straight. They are humans, the same as every one of us. They are not (or should not be) condemned to hell. They are not perverted. They should not be threatened. They feel; they have goals, ideas, desires like every one of us. Except they have an obstacle (imbalance or disease as some would call it) which is difficult to overcome: being a homosexual in a heterosexual society.

"Homophobia is a social disease." How true. It is stifling, judgmental, arrogant. It makes me embarrassed to be heterosexual and Christian. Imagine what life would feel like being a heterosexual in a homosexual society, where everything (marriage, social interaction, advertising, etc.) was homosexually – not heterosexually – geared and based. With the tables turned, certainly the despair, fear, and anxiety would be felt the same.

Dick and Jane are fictitious. But the circumstances and problems are real. Maybe most of us should be thankful we're alive, healthy, somewhat lucky, and not too courageous. I applaud Dick and Jane. "Do not judge, lest thee be judged," and "An eye for an eye," as the sayings go. It is so much easier when everyone works with each other, not against.

The short of it is: Does it really matter?

We do too! So, join us in probing the frontiers of science and technology with basic and applied research at sophisticated levels.

We are not probing just a few frontiers. Consider these: laser optics; infrared electro-optical systems and fiber optics; microelectronics, semiconductors and semicustom IC/hybrid circuits; advanced control concepts, signal and image processing, robotics, CAD/CAM; gas turbine technology, fluid dynamics, combustion, aeroacoustics; materials science; V/STOL technology, aeromechanics, applied mechanics; automotive technology; building systems technology; manufacturing technology, NDE, industrial lasers; computer science, software engineering, artificial intelligence, digital applications and operating systems.

During the remainder of this decade United Technologies plans to spend an average of $1 billion annually on R&D. Few other U.S. corporations make such substantial investments in their future.

A Swedish rock import

By ELIZABETH C. LANGLOIS
Collegian Correspondent

In the past year or so, there has been a huge resurgence of garage rock in the underground scene. Garage rock was originally referred to as "punk", a term that has been convoluted so much that it's become totally meaningless, in much the way "new wave" has. It's about time the Sweden's music scene is known for something besides Abba.

Here come the Nomads, from Stockholm, or thereabouts. I don't know a whole lot about them, but just by listening to their sound and seeing what songs they cover, it's pretty easy to guess what their influences are. A cover shot shows what looks to be a fun-loving bunch, with a Jeff Beck lookalike and a guy who looks old enough to have been playing in any of those obscure 60's bands-complete with Roger McGuinn granny glasses.

The Nomads are in good company these days, with the likes of the Hoodoo Gurus and the Lime Spiders, and NY's Vipers, flooding the market with vinyl. These guys sound like 100 percent fans of rock and roll who probably know every oddball cover in the book from the treasure troves of "Pebbles"-Volumes one through infinity and "Nuggets" Volumes one through four recently released on Rhino Records. All the right elements are here for a great record-the reverence, the lazy competence, and of course the classic instrumentation-fuzztone guitar, Farfisa organ and tambourine. You get the picture. An incredible sound straight from 1967- in fact, this record would have fit right in hen quite nicely. Witness the freaky fuzzed out guitars, wails of psycho feedback, gonzo distortion, the echoes of organ lines weaving in and out of the sonic mire along with some neat harmonies.

Interesting covers. "Sometimes Good Guys Don't Wear White", an old Standells tune (remember "Dirty Water"?), an appropriate cover, the dirty sound being right in tune with the Nomads. "I'm Five Years Ahead of Time", by the Third Bardo, which appears on one of the forementioned collections, explodes in the hands of the Nomads with its hyperkinetic guitar and weird disembodied vocals. Ditto for "I'm Not Like Everybody Else", an old Kinks tune which has also been done by the Chocolate Watchband. Alienation abounds in this track. There is also "Bangkok", an Alex Chilton tune. The Nomads pick up on Chilton and Big Star-Chilton's post Box Tops period- and what a great period that was. It seems like a lot of the great "new wave" bands (the Church, Let's Active, etc.) love Big Star. These guys too are right on target.

The originals and other extremely obscure covers are also great. "The Way You Touch My Hand" takes all the great elements of the aforementioned bands and couples it with some really strong hooks and harmonies. Also strong are "Real Gone Lover" and the scary, "Lowdown Shakin' Chills."

A nasty, dirty guitar sound which video gods ZZ Top can't even touch, strategic covers and fine originals, and a true love for their craft will make this no doubt one of the best of this year. A real bargain too, something hard to come by these days. So what are you sitting there for? Buy, like immediately.

Witness rivets

WITNESS
Directed by Peter Weir
Starring Harrison Ford and Kelly McGillis
Mountain Farms Cinema

By THOMAS HARRINGTON
Collegian Correspondent

Witness is the first American film by Peter Weir, the Australian director who has made Gallipoli and The Year of Living Dangerously. While Witness certainly isn't up to these film's standards, it does distinguish itself as an above average combination of action and drama.

The 'witness' of the title is a young Amish boy (Lukas Haas) who is the only one to view the murder of a Philadelphia policeman. A police detective (Harrison Ford) convinces the boy's widowed mother (Kelly McGillis) to help him solve the case, but finds himself taking the two back to Amish country when things become more dangerous then he had anticipated.

The weakest point about this film is the script, a typical Hollywood mishmash of conspiracies, coincidences, and mandatory love scenes that hardly does justice to the interesting story idea. The only reason the plot implausibilities do not harm the film is because of the superior job Weir and Harrison Ford do of presenting the material.

Weir's direction remains as impressive as ever. His best work is done in the dramatic moments of the film, when Ford and McGillis begin showing their infatuation for each other, but he's quite adept with the more action oriented scenes as well. His depictions of Amish life are a bit too rosey and idyllic (it never seems to rain in Amish country) but he has a lot of fun showing Ford's attempts to adapt to Amish culture.

Harrison Ford is terrific. His tough, chiselled face alone gets him by the action scenes, but his real moments come when he attempts to express his affection for McGillis. Then his cynical attitude disappears, and he becomes like an awkward teenager on a date. It's very difficult to play drama one moment and comedy the next, but Ford pulls it off with ease.

Kelly McGillis does well enough as the Amish mother, but she seems to be a bit young for her role, and much too attractive.

Lukas Haas is refreshingly convincing as the young boy. It's nice to see a movie child that doesn't act like a four-foot adult.

Witness isn't great cinema, but it's sure to distinguish itself as one of the better adventure films this year, proving that Weir can make successful movies in America, and that Ford can play someone besides Indiana Jones.

ARTS

CINEMASCOOP
by Count Ramin Zahed

I was on my way to the Drake the other night when Meryl Streep calls me on the phone. I'm like, "Geez Meryl, are you in Amherst again, on your way to Africa to shoot that new film?" She says, "Well Ramin, I finished shooting Plenty with that weirdo Sting in London, and I thought I should give you a call to see how things were going in the Pioneer Valley." She's quite a lady, that Meryl. Too bad our long distance relationship never quite works out. There's always either Jeremy Irons, who incidentally is beginning to look like a dead sea monkey, or Robbie DeNiro, and now that her co-star is Robbie Redford, I don't stand a ghost of a chance.

This week you have the chance of catching The Mean Season with Kurt Russell as the ambitious journalist and Mariel Hemmingway as her grandfather's granddaughter, no sorry, as Kurt's girlfriend. The film got lukewarm reviews, so I wouldn't bet my title on it. Also on the cliche-lukewarm side is Vision Quest, the latest boy-coming-of-age movie with the up and coming actor Matthew Modine, at the Calvin Theatre. This Modine kid is really rolling. He was great in Birdy and Mrs. Soffel, and he does his best with Vision Quest. The good thing about Modine is that he is not made of the same pretentious-vanity stuff that Rob Lowe and Matt Dillon are. Let's hear it for modesty and class.

Ed Harris and Amy Madigan star in Louis Malle's Alamo Bay. (Trivia question.)

Coming soon; Jennie Dundas and Andrew McCarthy are sister and brother in the comedy Heaven Help Us.

Science fiction fans should be glad to hear that Twentieth Century Fox has finished shooting Enemy Mine, a story of conflict between space pilots starring Dennis Quaid and directed by Wolfgang Peterson, the expert who gave us Das Boot and Neverending Story. Sounds promising.

Yes, John Landis is alive and well. Seems like his Hitchcockian comedy Into the Night, starring Jeff Goldblum and Michelle Pfeiffer (Grease 2), is really well-produced and has a delightful cameo by the great David Bowie. Yeah. At least the trailers look good!

Landis will also have another comedy called Spies Like Us with Dan Akroyd and Chevy Chase, as two fellows who are trying to save the world from nuclear war, probably a fall release.

By the way has everyone seen that new Madonna video "Material Girl"? Talk about beauty. There's already talk about how she truly resembles Marilyn Monroe. Her film with Rosanna Arquette Desperately Seeking Susan is scheduled for a March release. One has to admit that the lady has a unique way of packaging her talents.

You read it in this column first. Rob Lowe is trying to rescue his career again. Ha! He is joined by Emilio Estevez who is truly a chip off dad Martin Sheen's block, Judd Nelson, Demi Moore and the new mistress of the movies, Ally Sheedy, in a film called St. Elmo's Fire. The film is about a group of Georgetown graduates who have to face life after college. Oooooh it sounds extremely painful. They all probably call their fathers in the end and land a great position in a company. We'd better get off this subject or I'll really get out of hand. Keep trying Rob Lowe.

Weekend Winners: You can catch a sensitive portrayal of life in Northern Ireland in Cal which is playing at the Amherst Cinema this Sunday. If you feel like a very mellow, artsy and intelligent French film, I suggest Sunday in the Country, the acclaimed movie by Bertrand Tavernier about a day in the life of a retiring artist, playing at the Academy of Music.

On the other hand, if you need a clever little comedy, with a lot of cameos, catch Murder by Death a tongue-in-cheek whodunit at the Campus Center on Friday.

Killer Question: The effervescent Anne McCrory got the answer right last week. Diane Lane's kiddy love film was A Little Romance. Now here's this week's trivia bit: Amy Madiagan and Ed Harris star in Alamo Bay; Louis Malle's story of a young woman whose love for a Texan fisherman draws her into a deadly confrontation between local shrimpers and Vietnamese fishermen. Harris and Madiagan did another film together last year. Simply drop the name of that film with the time of day in my mailbox at the Collegian and you shall win two passes to see a sneak preview of a new flick called The Sure Thing at the Hampshire Mall. Stick with the scoops and you'll go places, I guess.

A Winter Thought to Cherish: Wouldn't it be absolutely heavenly if Suzanne Sommers did a television miniseries called Dead and Buried Hollywood Wives?

Donald Sutherland is back on the screen with Heaven Help Us, a comedy about a Catholic school in New York.

West Virginia wins it in OT, 76-74

Neysmith (27) dominates in heartbreaking loss, Russell ties

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — West Virginia's Dale Blaney hit two three-pointers in the final two minutes of overtime to give the Mountaineers a 76-74 victory over the University of Massachusetts last night at the Civic Center.

The Minutemen, 12-12, 8-7 in the Atlantic 10, tied the game in regulation at 69 as sophomore point guard Carl Smith hit a 14 foot fadeaway with no time left on the clock. It marked the seventh time in his career that Smith hit a shot in the final seconds to win or tie a game.

In the overtime, senior co-captain Horace Neysmith, who was phenominal with 27 points and 17 rebounds in the game, hit a layup before Bobby Braun hit a free throw that made it 72-69.

Blaney then drilled a 22-footer before Neysmith took an offensive rebound and laid in another to make it 74-72, UMass. Blaney hit again with 31 seconds left from the right side for the winning points.

UMass' final attempt came after Smith was tied up, passed to Ryan with five seconds left. Ryan fed Braun, who missed a hook shot with two seconds remaining. Braun fouled West Virginia's Holden Harley, with one second left, who hit a free throw for the final margin.

For the game, UMass' Lorenzo Sutton had 19 points with Smith adding 12. Senior co-captain Donald Russell tied Mike Pyatt's all-time career scoring record of 1503 with six points. Russell was one-of-nine from the floor.

West Virginia, 17-7, 13-2 in the Atlantic 10 and tied for first place with Temple, a 56-54 winner over George Washington, was led by Blaney's 19 and Harley's 16 points. Rosardo Brown added 14.

"It was a hard fought game, one I thought we had a good chance of winning," UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen said. "This team has a lot of guts. We came back hard and proved that we can play with the best."

"UMass is a much improved team," WVU coach Gale Catlett said. "They came back and gave us a good battle. I felt either team could have won."

In the second half, the Minutemen fell behind by seven, 64-57 with 4:22 to go on a Brown jumper. The Minutemen fought back as Neysmith hit two foulshots, and Sutton swished a three-pointer before Neysmith hit his first career three-pointer with 22 seconds to go in regulation.

Brown then missed a one-and-one with 15 seconds remaining. Gerlufsen called timeout and the Minutemen worked the ball to Smith for another of his patterned last second shots.

In the first half, UMass came away with a 34-30 lead thanks to perfect 12-of-12 foul shooting and 11 Neysmith points.

The Minutemen led by as much as ten, 30-20, as Russell hit two foul shots with 5:11 to go left.

The UMass bench corps of Jackie Sheenan, Tom Emerson, Darryl Carter and Matt Ryan gave Gerlufsen four solid minutes, capped by Sheehan's first basket (and shot) of the season, a drive down the middle that drew a Lester Rowe foul and resulted in a three-point play that gave UMass a 26-17 edge.

The Mountaineers fought back, scoring eight unanswered points to cut the UMass lead to 30-28 with two minutes to go.

Neysmith hit two foul shots, J.J. Crawl answered for WVU before Smith hit a fade away jumper with two seconds left.

West Virginia women outlast UMass, 63-60

Hebel nets 20 for undaunted Minutewomen

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD— The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team entered last night's game with West Virginia seeking a measure of respect that its 1-5 Atlantic 10 record didn't give the Minutewomen.

But as the final seconds expired in the Mountaineers' frantic 63-60 victory, UMass had gained West Virginia's respect. "They've always had our respect," West Virginia co-head coach Bill Fiske said. "UMass did an excellent job against us, and come tournament time, there could be some definite surprises."

The closest UMass got was within two, 62-60, on Hebel's three-point play with 21 seconds to go. The Mountaineers' Lisa Ribble was fouled with six seconds to go by Matthews and she sunk the front end of her one-and-one for the final margin.

Hebel led all scorers with 20 points and the junior guard grabbed 11 rebounds. Juanita Matthews added 12 for the Minutewomen, 12-14, 1-6 in the conference. The Mountaineers, 18-6, 6-1 in the conference and a perennial Top 20 team, were led by All-conference forward Olivia Bradley with 17 and Georgeann Wells with 16.

The Minutewomen led for most of the first half and took a 26-23 lead into the lockeroom at halftime.

The second half was all Bradley as the West Virginia senior shredded the UMass middle 13 second-half points.

"She follows her own miss better than anyone I've ever seen," UMass head coach Barbara Stevens said.

Early in the second half, the Mountaineers erased a 30-29 UMass lead running off 12 unanswered points to take a 41-29 lead.

The Minutewomen refused to fold, reeling off an 8-2 run of their own as Matthews hit a pair of buckets and captain Jerrie Bernier and Karen Fitzgerald added one hoop each closing the score to 43-40.

Basketball doubleheader at Springfield

Track and gymnastics in NE championships

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The third basketball doubleheader of the season takes place Saturday in the Springfield Civic Center when the University of Massachusetts women face Duquesne and the men take on league-leading Temple University.

The women, 12-13, will be going for their fourth win in a row against the Dukes. UMass was a 61-59 winner last season and recently have been led by center Karen Fitzgerald and guard Barbara Hebel. The Dukes depend on guard Becky Oglevee.

The men will be looking for the upset against a tough Temple team led by center Granger Hall and his 17.6 points-per-game. The Owls dumped UMass 65-39 January in Philadelphia. Temple is 13-2 in the league and 19-4 overall.

Buses for the men's game will leave Boyden Gym at about 12:45 p.m. Both the bus ride and ticket is free with a UMass ID card.

In other UMass action, the men's and women's track teams are in the New England championships. The sprinters and middle distance runners for both teams have good chances at placing. The meet is at Boston University on Saturday and Sunday.

The women's gymnastics team (5-9) are at Southern Connecticut on Saturday at 2 p.m. The women swimmers are in the New England championships at Springfield.

The UMass men's and women's ski teams will be in NCAA regional action at the Middlebury College Winter Carnival this weekend. The men will be represented by top skiiers Dan Conway, Bob Faigel and Jon Segal. Top women include Kathy Smiley, Sue White and Colleen Sweeney. The remainder of the teams will be looking to hold on to the ECSC conference title in competitions at Waterville Valley. Both teams were first in the standings going in.

It's a busy weekend for the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team, who face Temple Saturday and host the New England Championships on Sunday, both meets in Boyden Gym at 1 p.m..

"Temple will be a good meet as they are definitely a strong team, but we do have the home advantage," says assistant coach John MacCurdy. "Our line-up will be strong with Joe DeMarco, Roberto Weil and Eric Ciccone competing in the all-around for both meets."

Competing in the NE Championships will be Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Lowell, Dartmouth, (three teams defeated by Umass) Southern Connecticut, (a UMass loss) and the University of Vermont and Springfield College, who haven't met UMass. Lowell's John Knowles holds the defending records in both floor excercise and vaulting and will be a challenge.

UMass senior co-captains Ken Dougherty and Tony Sbarra will be defending their superiority on pommel horse and high bar respectively.

(Collegian correspondent Kathleen Hannan also contributed to this story.)

SOAKING UP THE FEBRUARY SUN - Students take advantage of yesterday's 70° weather while studying at Flagstone Cafe.

Record temps induce outside activity

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

Bare legs and exposed bodies paraded through the University of Massachusetts campus yesterday to sample the warmest day this year, with temperatures hitting a record high of 72 degrees.

Although only partly sunny to cloudy skies prevailed throughout most of the day, many students who were studying outdoors felt that a warm day in February was "only a tease."

"I think it's just a tease," Rob Reisch, a senior marketing major said. "It's letting us know what's around the corner but it'll probably snow tomorrow."

"It'll probably get cold tomorrow," Cherly Adams, a junior finance major agreed. "But its too early to start blowing off work. When it gets warmer, it'll be really hard."

But Devin Kirkpatrick, a sophomore electrical engineering major said he hopes that there will be "more warm days to come."

"You have to do the studying, so it's great to do it outside," he said while computing math problems for his Math 431 class.

While studying federal tax systems outside on the Campus Center stairs with about 70 other students, Jeff Cushing, a junior accounting major said he was "taking advantage of both worlds - studying and great weather."

But not everyone rushed outdoors to get a taste of warmth. Dennis McDonough said he was outside for an hour but retreated indoors.

"My papers were flying around getting lost," McDonough said. "It was a little windy."

Estelle Lajmer, a senior education major spent the day by a cash register in the Hatch.

"Of course it's crummy having to sit here," she said. "I've been watching people come in with shorts all day - it's depressing but they'll all probably catch pneumonia."

According to the National Weather Service, the unseasonably warm weather will leave the area with temperatures in the 50s today and in the 40s tomorrow.

Acid rain report predicts disaster if left ignored

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

BOSTON—More than three-fourths of the state's lakes, ponds and streams will be unable to support plant or fish life if the problem of acid rain is not addressed on a national level, according to researchers at the University of Massachusetts.

At a State House news conference Friday, Gov. Michael Dukakis and Rep. Edward Markey, D-Malden released the results of the Acid Rain Monitoring Project's first phase of testing. Markey also announced his co-sponsorship of legislation introduced earlier this month to reduce acid rain.

In a prepared statement, Markey said, "It is time for us to stop the rain that damages our land. It is time for us to stop the damage caused by pollution raining down on our region."

The results of the first phase of the project, which tested about 40 percent of the state's bodies of water, shows that five percent of them are acidified and cannot neutralize any further acid deposits.

Another 14 percent of the bodies of water tested are listed as "critical." The results also point to the inability of Massachusetts' soils to neutralize acid pollutants.

Sulfur emissions from utilities mix with moisture in the atmosphere and later return to the earth as acid pollutants. The main source of sulfur pollutants are power plants in the mid-Western United States.

In Hampshire Country, 18 of the bodies of water tested are acidified, 78 percent are listed as critical, 166 are endangered. 188, or 23.5 percent are reported as "not sensitive".

About 16 percent of the waters sampled were listed as "endangered" with another 20 percent "highly sensitive." Only 22 percent of all the samples were categorized as "not sensitive" to acid pollutants.

Markey said the legislation, which Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Pittsfield, proposed Feb. 7, would reduce sulfur dioxide emissions by 12 million tons or 50 percent. Sulfur dioxide is the principal pollutant released into the atmosphere by coal-burning power plants. The 12 million ton goal has been cited by the National Academy of Sciences as necessary to prevent further environmental damage, Markey said.

The first phase of the bill would force the nation's 50 top polluters to install mechanisms to reduce sulfur emissions.

The second phase calls for a surcharge of about 40 cents on utility bills around the country. The money raised would then go to the states and be used for further sulfur emissions reduction at the discretion of individual states.

The bill is also sponsored by Massachusetts Rep. Edward P. Boland, James M. Jeffords of Vermont, James Oberstar of Minnesota and Frank Horton of New York.

The monitoring project, funded by the Massachusetts Department of Wildlife and Fisheries, will produce an inventory of the condition of 100 percent of the state's bodies of water after the second phase. About 800 volunteers statewide collected samples which were initially tested at 22 laboratories across the state. Later, more detailed testing was done at UMass chemistry labs.

Amherst College president Peter Pouncey agreed to meet with students to discuss Amherst College's investment in corporations operating in South Africa, after he was confronted Friday by about 100 students.

After the college Board of Trustees meeting, students carrying signs and chanting "Divest now" lined the walkway from the door of the Amherst Alumni House while about 20 others lay down on the walkway forcing the trustees and Pouncey to step over them.

UM student allegedly raped on street bordering campus

A 21-year-old University of Massachusetts student was allegedly raped Thursday night by two young men near Butterfield Terrace, according to the Hampshire Gazette Friday.

The Gazette reported that the student told the police she had left her dormitory on campus and was walking down Butterfield Terrace when two men in their early 20s grabbed her from behind, dragged her into nearby bushes, and raped her.

Police said after the alleged rape, the student reported the assault to the police shortly before 10 p.m. by phoning from a fraternity house on North Pleasant Street.

Police said they took the student to Cooley Dickinson Hospital, where she was examined and released. Police said the student was not acquainted with her alleged assailants.

Chernenko appears after 59- day absence

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet President Konstantin U. Chernenko, looking frail, broke a two-month absence yesterday with a television appearance in which he was shown casting his vote for deputies to the Parliament of the Russian Republic.

The 73-year-old Soviet leader, who missed a key election speech only two days earlier because of illness, murmured only a few words during the less than two minutes of film shown on a news brief.

Chernenko's surprise appearance was strictly managed and limited to a handful of Soviet photographers. It contrasted sharply with the election day coverage of Mikhail Gorbachev, who, in the eyes of many Western observers, has emerged as the ruling Politburo's number two man, and other Kremlin officials.

Chernenko and the other 10 Politburo members were all nominees for parliamentary seats, among the deputies being elected to parliaments in the 15 republics of the Soviet Union.

During his 59-day absence from public, rumors had been intensifying that Chernenko was seriously ill.

There was no film of his marking his ballot and he did not take out his customary glasses to look at it. The next sequence was of Chernenko standing over the ballot box and depositing his vote. He was not shown getting up from his chair.

A Western diplomat reached for comment on Chernenko's reappearance, said: "It must be a very carefully stage-managed performance that they figured they could manage without too much strain on him."

Chernenko reportedly suffers from emphysema, and his condition had been said to be worsening.

The nearly two-month absence was the second lengthy period out of sight for Chernenko, who has been Soviet leader for little more than a year. He succeeded Yuri V. Andropov, who died Feb. 9, 1984, after nearly six months out of the public eye.

Reports that Chernenko was seriously ill also circulated in the capital last summer when he was said to have left on vacation July 15 and did not reappear until Sept. 5.

Trial begins for apartheid foes

BOSTON (AP) - Opponents of South Africa's policy of racial segregation will take their case to court today when 12 people go on trial on criminal trespassing charges in connection with a series of anti-apartheid protests.

The protesters, who include college professors, clergymen, labor leaders and politicians, were arrested in December and January after they refused to leave the downtown Boston office of Deak-Perera, a New York-based dealer in precious metals. The company's business includes the sale of Kruggerands, a gold South African coin.

The protesters are scheduled to appear today before Boston Municipal Judge Charles Grabau. If convicted, they could be jailed for up to 30 days and fined as much as $100.

Barbara Arnwine of the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights, a spokeswoman for the protesters, said the defendants plan to use the "necessity defense ," a legal theory in which they will claim it was necessary to break the law because of the "imminent danger" apartheid poses in South Africa.

The defense has been used in American courts since 1810, she said. Some cases have involved disasters, such as barge passenger discarding cargo in a storm of a parent violating a quarantine law to take an infant to a doctor. It has also been used in cases of civil disobedience, she said.

The Boston protesters were among 1,800 arrested in 11 cities as part of a nationwide protest that began with a demonstration outside the South African Embassy in Washington Nov. 21.

Ware, Mass. - Gunman Matthew Kelly, who allegedly took nine employees of the Mary Lane Hospital under hostage for two hours Saturday in the emergency room, is taken from the scene on a stretcher by Mass. State Police.

Gunman arrested in hospital holdout

Ware, Mass. (AP) A 21-year-old man described as "agitated" and "incoherent" was under psychiatric observations yesterday after he held eight hospital employees at riflepoint for two hours and fired several shots at police before he was overpowered by two women, police said.

No one was injured during the incident that began in a West Brookfield home and ended late Saturday in the emergency room of Mary Lane Hospital after a bullet-riddled chase, according to state police Capt. Robert Dateo.

Matthew A. Kelly, a night watchman from West Brookfield, was taken to Bridgewater State Hospital for observation after his arrest on charges of kidnapping and two counts of assault with intent to murder, said state police Trooper John Rusa of the Brookfield barracks.

Dateo said police didn't return any of the fire at the West Brookfield home, during the chase, or at the hospital, where Kelley apparently went for treatment of a badly cut hand. Police counted seven bullet holes at the hospital alone-five through a window to the outside where police were gathered, one into the admissiondesk, and one in the floor.

One of the hostages, Donna M. Chouinard, said yesterday that Kelley appeared disoriented by loss of blood and almost passed out several times during the ordeal. He never directly threatened the hostages, but frequently pointed his M-14 rifle in their direction, she said.

Ms. Chouinard said a man who identified himself as Kelley's brother told hospital employees after the ordeal that Kelley had fought with his mother earlier in the day and had put his hand through some glass.

At one point, she said, he called police and said, "I don't know what I want. I could kill these people. I have nothing to lose."

96Windows smashed at school

ANDOVER, Mass. (AP) Rock-throwing vandals smashed scores of windows in an Andover junior high school, but school officials expected to hold classes as scheduled today.

Police said yesterday they had made no arrests in connection with the Friday night incident the second vandalism spree at a Massachusetts school during the traditional week-long winter recess.

Andover police Lt. Robert Parker said a school maintenance worker discovered 96 broken windows in a wing of the West Junior High School about 11:30 p.m. Friday. He said the damage was estimated at $5,000.

Parker said police found no evidence of how the vandals entered the school.

The facility, one of two junior high schools in Andover, was expected to resume classes today as scheduled, he said.

Earlier last week, beer drinking teens caused damage initially estimated at $750,000 when they broke into Salem High School and trashed the library and several other rooms.

Eight Salem High School students and two others including the 21-year-old man that bought the beer have been arrested in the incident.

Mike Barnicle speaks to Collegian alumni

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

With a Partagas cigar attached to his perpetually cynical grin, the man often frequents police stations and drives around the Boston area to cultivate ideas for his best columns.

At a gathering Saturday for alumni who worked for the Collegian, Boston Globe columnist Mike Barnicle said, "The perfect day is to drive around town."

"Nothing ever happened in a newsroom - a rape or a murder," he said. It's in the streets and from the police where you get stories because, "People still like to read about people - that's the bottom line."

Barnicle, 41, whose column appears in the Globe three times a week, said the best column he ever wrote is the one that gets done by deadline for the next day's paper.

"I enjoy writing best what I can finish," he said.

Barnicle's column, syndicated in five newspapers, is about people who are affected by people and issues. His favorite characters, often sources for his column, are a man who works at a Cambridge newsstand and a shop steward at the Red Line construction site.

At the Globe since 1972, Barnicle said, "It's the greatest job in America."

"If you're lazy and marginally talented, it's the greatest job - as long as you don't libel anyone," he said. But to Barnicle, who believes Sen. Edward M. Kennedy should go on a diet, libel suits seem to be a part of every day life. Five libel suits have been filed against him in the past 13 years and threats of it come along "all the time," Barnicle said.

Barnicle said in order to pay off bill collectors, he appears regularly with a commentary on the WCVB-TV channel 5 news magazine show, Chronicle.

"I do it for the money," he said. "I don't like TV - it's done something to this country. If you saw Mother Theresa in an aisle" at Super Stop and Shop and "Dick Albert (a Channel 5 meterologist) in another, they'd rush towards Dick Albert."

Barnicle, whose only college education was at Boston University studying history, said if it weren't for the Globe, he would be a police officer.

"I might be a policeman, so thank God I'm there (at the Globe)."

Decision due soon on UMass appeal of racial bias suit

A decision is due "any day now" on a University of Massachusetts appeal of a lower court decision that awarded a former assistant professor nearly $270,000 when the judge decided he was denied tenure in 1976 because of racial bias.

Atty. Richard M. Howland of Amherst said in a recent interview that First Circuit Court of Appeals judges have been reviewing the case since November and "we can expect them to hand down their decision any day now."

Last May, U.S. District Court Judge Frank H. Feedman awarded West Indian native Peter Kumar almost $270,000 in back pay, two promotions, tenure and faculty reinstatement, after deciding that Kumar had been denied tenure as a result of racial bias.

The University appealed that the decision in a higher court last fall and appeal court judges have been reviewing the case since then Howland said,

Kumar said last May that he holds no ill will against the University and might return to the UMass faculty if he had the opportunity.

"The University has every right to defend their actions- I am only trying to get an injustice corrected," he said.

Howland said that he presented the case as a violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, which guarantees that tenure cannot be denied for reasons of racial bias.

University officials have declined to comment on the case.

Speakers to convey experiences, expertise tonight on campus

Soviet dissident to share past

A former Soviet research scientist will lecture on life under past and present Russian governments at 8 p.m. tonight in Campus Center Room 168.

Yuri Tuvim, who emigrated from the Soviet Union to America in 1976 and is now an American citizen, will speak at a lecture sponsored by the Republican Club. His topics will include East-West relations and his own life experiences during the reigns of Josef Stalin, Nikita Krushchev, and Leonid Breshnev. He will also contrast life in the Soviet Union with life in America.

Now in his early 50s, Tuvim spent 45 years within the Soviet Union and was a vocal dissident in the early 1970s of the Soviet system of rule. Scott Sheridan of the Republican Club said Tuvim was much like fellow dissident and author Alexander Solzhenitzyn and, like Solzhenitzyn, was allowed to emigrate from Russia.

Some of Tuvim's experiences in Russia were used by author Hedric Smith in his book on Soviet social life, The Russians. Now residing in Newton, Tuvim works as a research scientist for a high technology firm near Boston.

Sheridan said Tuvim is back by popular demand, after he spoke last year at the University. "Some people liked what he talked about and others disagreed with his observations," Sheridan said, "but people expressed an appreciation of his lecture and that's why we are having him back again."

Wiesel to depict a moral society

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Elie Wiesel, a survivor of Nazi concentration camps and celebrated humanist author, will speak at 8:00 p.m. tonight at the Student Union Ballroom.

"Building a Moral Society" is the title of the speech sponsored by the UMass chapter of B'nai B'rith Hillel.

The speech was scheduled to coincide with the conclusion of Black History Month and the annual Jewish Arts Festival, Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter said.

"He will have something to say for everybody," Perlmutter said. "The message will be for the campus as a whole, not just the Jewish community.

Wiesel was a teenager when he was taken from his home in Sighet, Transylvania (Romania) to the Nazi concentration camp at Auschwitz and later to the Buchenwald camp. He now lives in New York City, teaches at Boston University and has written approximately 20 books.

He is best known for Night, his account of life in the concentration camps. When Wiesel spoke at UMass in 1981, he discussed the plight of Jews in the Soviet Union.

Perlmutter considers Wiesel a personal hero.

"Part of the problem in our modern age is that we don't have heroes anymore," Perlmutter said. "I see Wiesel as a hero because of his spiritual strength, his ability to withstand adversity and his willingness to speak out for human rights and human freedoms."

"I want a group to meet with Ted Cross and his committee," Pouncey said. Cross is the head of the trustees' investment committee. "A general free-for-all is not" an appropriate forum, he said.

Tony Abner, one of the student organizers of the rally, said, "We're very pleased, this is a tremendous victory. In the past, they (trustees) never talked on camera and they never made an agreement."

According to the group that organized the rally Amherst College has $17 million worth of stocks with companies doing business in South Africa.

"This (investment) is a blatant betrayal of Amherst College ideals," said Veronica Jordan, a senior political science and english major. "We're here to embarrass them (the trustees)," she said.

Pouncey, along with other private college presidents, signed a letter urging the American Chamber of Commerce to stiffen its opposition to South African laws restricting where blacks may work and live.

South Africans live under a system of apartheid in which the country's majority black population do not share in the political system.

"Some of the people here have been working on this for as many as five years," Abner said. "It is still only a first step," he said.

According to Dylan Sanders, a student at Amherst, the trustees refused to meet with students earlier last week despite receiving more than 600 student letters requesting such a meeting.

At the rally, students wore green armbands and carried signs saying "Abolish apartheid. Divest now" and "Divest please".

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

But where will they live?

The graduate student senate has planned a rally today to protest a proposed reorganization of University fees which would penalize students living off campus by making them share the financial burden of dormitory and dining hall maintenance.

Currently, a percentage of all student fees is used to pay back loans for bus service, athletics and the Campus Center, while debt service payments for building and repairing residence halls and dining commons are included in room and board fees. Last spring, Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse, who is seldom guilty of soliciting student input before acting, proposed that debt service funding in all five categories be consolidated into one Universal Resource Fee.

Sanjiv Dugal, president of the graduate student senate, said he thinks today's rally will be more effective if conducted without the collaboration of undergraduates. DeNyse's proposal is especially unfair to graduates, who, with the exception of Prince House, do not have the option of living on campus.

But undergraduates, too, should make their opposition to the proposal more audible than it has been. Off-campus undergraduates would be forced to pay an additional $171 per year for facilities they do not use.

H.J. Littlefield, associate to DeNyse, rationalizes this inequity by saying, "People who go off campus are doing it by choice and are not disenfranchised."

Littlefield has acknowledged that the consolidation is intended to discourage students from moving out of the dormitories. "I don't believe we would be a 25,000-student body without the housing system," he said.

But where does the administration expect to house those juniors and seniors it coerces into remaining on campus? Every year, younger students who are required to live in the residence halls find there are not enough rooms to go around and are housed temporarily in the Campus Center hotel or thrown into emergency "swing spaces," which in turn cuts down on needed study space.

Graduate students should not be forced to help maintain the housing system, unless they happen to live in the one dormitory open to graduates. Nor should undergraduates who are eligible to leave this already overcrowded system be forced to pay more in an effort to browbeat them into staying. If shortage of debt service funds is the issue, then on-campus students should continue to pay the current amount, not $74 less as proposed by DeNyse.

It remains to be seen whether UMass administrators will be sensitive to student concerns on this and other issues, such as DeNyse's deviously introduced plan to eliminate the Campus Center Board of Governors. But graduates and undergraduates alike must raise their voices to reach ears which are clearly not cocked in their direction.

Save funding for RSOs

Stephen C. Erickson

"We don't have to fund RSO groups." With these words SGA Treasurer John Mooradian announced the SGA leadership's position regarding the present budget crisis, a crisis that has been aggravated by this very leadership. Presently, our student government is running critically short of funds, so much so that drastic cuts in next year's budget must be made. With Moordian's callous comment, he has divulged what has been long suspected as the leadership's strategy — to cut the volunteer student organizations while maintaining the many paid positions governed by the SGA leadership.

Unless something is done, the real student groups will fall prey to the patronage of the SGA leadership, fueled by an all too apathetic student body. Chief among the pork barrel groups is the Student Center for Education, Research and Advocacy (SCERA). If the average student has never heard of this arm of student government, he should have, because it received $88,000 of student money in fiscal year 1985 and is budgeted for $102,000 in fiscal year 1986. SCERA was formed in 1978 "with the goal of creating a democratic university where students would have more of a voice and substantial influence." Seven years later, SCERA is a little known organization with a huge payroll. Claiming to promote student empowerment, it maintains its existence almost exclusively through paid staff. Yet in this time of tight money, our leadership is prepared to cut the vital operating funds of the many all-volunteer groups which are comprised of literally thousands of students in favor of boondoggles like SCERA. So much for a "democratic university".

Our student government spends $102,000 on paid staff annually. If the SGA Senate even attempts to maintain this figure for fiscal year 1986, as its leaders say they will, then the real student groups will be left with nothing, save thousands of volunteers with no money for guest speakers, issue awareness, socials, trips, cultural activities, advertising, etc. These groups, given the adequate funding they deserve, make our university the diverse place that it is. The small, highly dedicated organizations of many stripes educate, stimulate, and nourish as with new insights and ideas. They include the Veterans Service Organization, the People's Gay Alliance, the Twenty-five Plus Club, Students Advocating Financial Aid, the African Students Association, the Radical Student Union, the Women's Leadership Project, the Asian-American Student Association and last but certainly not least, the Republican Club, to name only a few. Unless SCERA is cut drastically, many, if not all, of these groups will be cut critically, perhaps fatally.

It is interesting to note that the issues SCERA claims to deal with are covered, or could be covered, by other smaller volunteer organizations. Yet with the money that goes into SCERA under present levels, the Women's Leadership project could be funded 22 times, the PGA 28 times and yes, the Republican Club sixty-two times.

Every student group is in danger of dying. It is time for the RSOs to put aside past differences in ideology and band together to protect the students of our university. With a united voice we must respond, "Yes Mr. Mooradian, you do have to fund R.S.O. groups."

Stephen C. Erickson is a Collegian columnist and president of the UMass Republican Club.

Promoting a double standard at UMass

Civility to homosexuals has become an important issue on this campus recently, but has the right to civility been earned? This minority is assuming that they must be treated with civility by the majority simply because they are a minority. Being a minority means being different and it is human nature to be negative towards people who are different. In time minorities are accepted but only after they have been assimilated into the community and become a part of it. However, the homosexuals on this campus seem to take great pride in setting themselves apart through organizations such as the People's Gay Alliance and the Lesbian Union. By maintaining these institutions they create friction between themselves and the host community. Just as the students and faculty of UMass would not be willing to accept a chapter of the Ku Klux Klan or the American Nazi Party, they will not accept the PGA or the Lesbian Union, and consider the latter two to be offensive.

Aside from their institutions, the homosexuals are apparently incapable of accepting the opinions and criticisms of our community. Homosexuality is viewed with varying degrees of distaste by the majority of people on this campus. Yet when even the most liberal gives voice to his or her opinions on this, that person is condemned and caricaturized as a semi-human demagogue.

We are confronted with a double standard on sexuality: homosexuals are free to express themselves, heterosexuals are not. Freedom of expression is for all people, not just the minorities (or so says the American Constitution). As soon as civility is shown by the homosexuals of this community then civility will be shown to them.

Puppet theater charms Hampden

By RENEE BACHER
Collegian Staff

Sunday afternoon. The sun was shining, the frisbees were flying, and I buried myself in a dark little hole in Southwest called "Hampden Theatre" to see a puppet show.

No, I was not particularly psyched to have undertaken the responsibility of covering this performance on such a glorious day. The audience was filled with rug-rats creeping around on the floor ooohing and ahhhhing. One two-year-old took the liberty of sitting on my lap and pulling my hair throughout the performance.

I must say, though, that Dan Butterworth, the puppeteer, and his helpers pulled off a marvelous show. Sunday's performance was entitled, "Intergalactic Space Circus." Although three fourths of the audience were children, there was something incredibly mature and surreal about the show.

Butterworth, dressed in black, danced on the stage while skillfully manipulating his marionetts to the tunes of Pink Floyd, Taj Mahal and others. At times I felt like I was in the midst of a cartoon. Butterworth made his way through the audience wearing an array of frightening masks and selectivily scared only the people who didn't appear to have the capacity to scream themselves blue in the face. At other times the performance was as relaxing as sipping a glass of wine during an evening in front of the fishtank. This was definately an enjoyable experience, and a good alternative to normal collegiate entertainment.

I might even go so far as to say that this performance was better than an afternoon at the planetarium. Hampden Theatre is really an undiscovered oasis nestled in the midst of bustling Southwest. It's small and very personal, and the audience is able to experience one-to-one contact with performers. Hampden is the "off-Broadway" of UMass.

Past performances at Hampden have run the gamut from terrible to wonderful. You take your chances when you go, but usually, the price is right (free) and the atmosphere is worth the gamble.

Hughes' club pleasing fare

By ELAINE SENAY
Collegian Staff

It is easy to like The Breakfast Club. This film strikes a chord with all Americans who have made it through high school. What makes this such a fine movie is that it is truthful. Director John Highes has not forgotten the pain and pleasure of adolescence when high school is the proving ground.

John, Clare, Andrew, Brian and Allison have been sentenced to a long Saturday of detention. Their principal has classified these five as a criminal, a princess, a jock, a brain and a basket case. All five characters live up to their stereotypes that have been created by peer and parental pressure. Director Hughes gives telling clips of dialogue between the kids and their parents as they are being dropped off at the high school. Hughes reveals personalities in brief scenes, leaving the audience to fill in the rest.

While each character embodies a universal definition of our high school classmates, all five try to explain and justify their image to the others and to themselves. The Breakfast Club is played out against clear physical boundaries of the school library. Within its walls Clare (Molly Ringwald) must face the fact that she is a spoiled princess. The others, too, come to know themselves. Hughes creates a forum where all of them open up to each other. They learn for the first time about the thoughts and feelings of people they would never have dreamed of associating with.

Hughes uses John (Judd Nelson) and later Allison (Ally Sheedy) to bring out the other three performers. Sheedy is particularly effective; she is silent for almost half of the film, then suddenly she "comes out" and throws the others off their guard. While the other four regard her as a weirdo, she proves to be the most insightful of the five. She has no friends and therefore she sees their high school world in an unclouded manner. As an actress, Sheedy is entertaining as she delights the audience with her very physical performance.

Although the screenplay (by John Hughes) is a little weak, the young actors and actresses compensate for this. If The Breakfast Club had been entrusted to the less able, it would have fallen into the promising yet unsatisfying trap. This film has some plot problems but the overall smart style overcomes them. The ending is sad. But at the same time it is a reaffirmation of youth and of forever looking towards the future.

Senior Pete Lucchini (competing his first season in nearly two years due to a previous knee injury) jumped into the line-up throwing an excetional routine on the parallel bars to steal a 9.05, first place, and the NE title.

At this point in the meet the Minutemen were far in the lead but pushed for more. Co-captain Tony Sbarra stole the show and a standing ovation with a perfect routine on high bar receiving a NE championship record of 9.70. Sbarra took first place and defended his title for the second consecutive year. Freshman Roberto Weil tied Springfield's Leo Doran for second place earning a 9.1.

No other teams came near the tumbling expertise of UMass on floor exercice. The passes were clean and strong, consisting of various double back tucks and pikes. DeMarco took first with a 9.5 and beating out defending champion Knowles once more. Lucchini took second with a 9.45, and to clean-up, Gorgone took third with a 9.15. Together with Eric Ciecone, Dougherty, and Weil, UMass scored an impressive total of 45.5 points for the event.

Ciecone, Weil, and DeMarco were three of twenty gymnasts competing in the all-around. DeMarco easily captured first with a 52.25, Weil was second with a 51.85, and Ciecone sixth with a 47.75.

It was the first time in a while that DeMarco outscored teammate Weil.

"Toward the end of the meet I realized Joe was ahead, so I tried even harder," Weil said. The two have a friendly rivalry.

"It was much easier to compete in rotation style, it was more like a practice, because it was just our guys back to back," said Dougherty. "We were more relaxed. It also helped being in our own gym."

The Minutemen host to Springfield college at 7:30 next Saturday in Boyden.

"It'll be one of the toughest meets of the season," said Coach Roy Johnson, who organized the championships, "we encourage spectators to attend."

The gymnasts are preparing for the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastic League competition which takes place March 8-9 at Springfield College.

"UMass started freelancing on offense because they were down by 15 and bingo, they popped a few long shots and we were fighting for our lives. You figure if Neysmith was in there, they shoot even a little better from the floor and I go home a loser," Chaney said.

For the Minutemen, Donald Russell had 15 points included his career 1,504th, breaking Mike Pyatt's school record. The record-setter came with 16:43 to go in the first half on a free throw after a Hall foul. Smith added 13 and freshman Lorenzo Sutton seven. Bobby Braun had 11 rebounds with Neysmith hauling down seven, as did Sutton. The Minutemen were hurt by 13 of 51 shooting from the field, but committed only seven turnovers. Temple was 20-of-51.

In the first half, UMass got up by as many as five, 19-14 as Russell, free from the pressure of breaking the record, had nine of the first 12 UMass points.

Braun hit a layup with 6:29 to go that put UMass up 23-19. The Minutemen managed only three Smith foul shots the rest of the half, falling behind 30-26 at the break as Hall had six of his 13 first half points in the last six minutes.

The scoring drought continued for ten minutes of the second half. Only two Neysmith free throws with 16:23 to go broke up 13 Temple points (17 dating back to the first half) as the Owls shot out to a 43:28 lead.

In the 16 minute stretch without a field goal, UMass outscored 24-5. In two games, the Minutemen have shot 25.7 percent against the Owls' matchup zone defense.

The Owls continued to score, keeping the margin at 15 with a Rayne free throw that made it 46-31 with eight minutes to go.

But the Minutemen came back, Neysmith scored, Smith hit two foul shots and a jumper before Hall broke the mini-streak with two foul shots.

Smith drilled a three-pointer with 3:00 to go, and it was 48-40. Hall hit again at 2:45 for the last Temple points. Sutton knocked in a three-pointer, Braun hit two foul shots before Russell stepped to the line with 1:37 left and UM down 50-45.

Temple called timeout, and UMass stepped into the pain. The referee disallowed the timeout and called a lane violation before Russell even shot, he made the second and it was 50-46.

Hall missed his turnaround, freshman Wilbert Hicks, who for the first time this season played a lot of minutes against a good team in a critical situation, gathered in the rebound.

Smith hit again with 1:05 to go and the UMass defense forced Evans to walk with 24 seconds left, setting up Smith's last second chance.

★ Women

Rebounding from a disappointing 63-60 loss to West Virginia on Thursday, the Minutewomen jumped out to a startling 12-0 lead with Bernier scoring six of her 12 first half points. Duquesne responded with a 15-7 run to cut the UMass lead to two on an inside bank shot by Tanya Larrydale, but managed to get no closer as the Minutewomen matched the Dutchesses basket for basket until Burtoft extended the UMass lead to four at halftime, 33-29.

"I won't say that I wasn't worried," Stevens said. "But I was hoping we could maintain our composure."

"She was upset at halftime because it was a four point game when it shouldn't have been," UMass guard Barbara Hebel (10 points, six assists) said. "We've led by four in previous games and lost."

Hebel opened the second half with a 16-footer to increase the lead to six. Hoping to douse a possible run, Duquesne head coach Paul Hindes initiated a defensive strategy of constant change-ups geared to confuse the Minutewomen. It didn't work however, as they increased their lead to nine on a layup by Mary Marquedant, the result of a three-on none fast break.

"He was changing the defenses so much that you could see that his players were confused," Hebel said.

Bernier led all scorers with 23 while Burtoft had 12 and Hebel added 10. The Minutewomen, now 13-14 overall and 2-6, in the Atlantic-10, out rebounded the Dutchesses 40-38, including 17-12 edge on offense.

The victory vaulted UMass into 6th place in the Atlantic-10 while Duquesne took over the cellar. All nine teams in the Conference will participate in Friday's Tournament, and with the eighth and ninth seeded teams playing in an opening round contest, UMass has a good chance to escape first-round play. Announcements for Coach, Player, and Rookie of the year will be made.

we need the hoop. I'd call it again."

So now, UMass (12-13 and 8-8 in the Atlantic 10) travels to New Jersey and face Rutgers, also 8-8. A side trip to Pittsburgh and the steadily-improving Duquesne Dukes looms after that. Rutgers was beaten already this season, Duquesne is one of the eight league losses.

"It's real simple, we have to win to keep the pace," Smith said. "We proved we can play with the good teams, now we have to keep it up going into the tournament. We'll get by, we're a different team then we were when we started.

UMass certainly is a different team, a better team to be sure. Thanks in good part to a player that probably still wants another chance at his play, Carl Smith.

Yesterday marked the last home game for the seniors Horace Neysmith, Ron Young, Bobby Braun, Donald Russell and George Ramming. The five received awards and gave their parents momentoes of their four years at UMass. All will graduate as four-year lettermen.

Russell was glad to be free of the pressure to set the UMass all-time scoring record. He missed his first two shots before getting a foul shot to fall for the mark set by 1978 grad Mike Pyatt. He finished the game with 1,518 career points. Neysmith has 1,377 career points, fourth place all-time. He needs only 19 points to pass Edwin Green for third place. His 905 career rebounds puts him second all-time, still 144 behind the Doctor, who accomplished all his records in two seasons.

Springfield guard Chris Bailey, who is the best high school player in the area, is still considering attending UMass.

The 5-10 point guard, who would be groomed to replace Smith in two seasons, is considering offers from other schools, but is being pushed by friends and relatives toward UMass. His brother Orville is one of Worcester Poly Tech's stars. Gerlufsen and his staff are still looking for frontline players to plug the holes left by Neysmith and Braun, although the play of Wilbert Hicks showed much promise yesterday. Despite not scoring Hicks had four rebounds and played all-league center Granger Hall tight.

Temple escapes UMass- barely, 50-48

Russell eclipses career point mark, UMass still 4th

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Despite everything- the 25 percent shooting, the 16 minutes without a field goal and leading-scorer Horace Neysmith riding the bench with five fouls- there was still a chance.

The University of Massachusetts had fought back from a 15-point deficit against league-leading Temple and with 24 seconds to go in the game the Minutemen trailed by only a single hoop, 50-48.

Sophomore point guard Carl Smith dribbled over halfcourt and let 16 seconds elapse before signaling for a time out. Eight seconds remained in the game.

All 2,433, a season-high in the Springfield Civic Center, knew what UM coach Ron Gerlufsen would call for, a Smith drive to the foul line and his patended turnaround jumper. Seven times Smith had tried such a shot with the Minutemen needed to tie or win in the waning seconds, and seven times he had succeeded.

He's now batting .875. Smith's shot-one that both the 5-11 guard and Gerlufsen said he should have taken- fell off the front of the rim, due partly to good defense by Temple's Howie Evans. Temple center Granger Hall surrounded the rebound and the Owls breathed a sigh of relief.

"We blew them out (65-39) at our place and today we could've lost, very easily, Temple coach John Chaney said. "They've improved quite a bit and I personally don't want them in the tournament, they think they can play with the big boys, and they're right."

But, respectability aside, the loss stands and the Minutemen fell to 12-13 and 8-8 in the league, good enough to stay in a tie for fourth place with Rutgers. They face the Scarlet knights in New Jersey on Thursday.

Losers of two straight, UMass has played well against West Virginia (a 76-74 overtime loss on Thursday night) and Temple after early season blowouts, but still lost.

"It's nice to say that we showed we can play with the good teams in the league," Gerlufsen said. But it's disappointing to lose this way just as it is getting blown out, maybe even more so. It's not good enough just to compete. We want to take the next step and win."

The Owls, 20-4 overall and tied with West Virginia for first in the A-10 with a 14-2 record, got 24 points out of Hall and 10 out of forward Charles Rayne. They shot only a marginal 39 percent and were outrebounded 40-39 by a smaller UMass team. Not one for the scrapbook.

The magic is still there for Carl Smith

Peter Abraham

Carl Smith lay on the shiny wooden floor of the Springfield Civic Center, arms outstretched and head down.

For the first time in eight attempts, his play, the play that always rescues the University of Massachusetts when they need to win or tie a game in the final seconds, had failed. The 14 foot turnaround jumper, the one-on-one playground move that he works on for hours by himself in the gym, didn't work, and no kind words from teammates or coaches were going to help now. He whipped off his wristband and flung it across the court, it landed at the feet of the Temple Owl. Trying to interview the magician after his best trick had failed, the reporter figured, wasn't going to be easy.

But Carl Smith is a realist. No pouting, no kicking lockers or slamming doors was going to put a W where the L was going.

"Hey, it didn't work. There's a first time for everything," he said. "Maybe its time to get another last-second shot in the playbook."

"I had the shot, I got to the seam of the defense, he (Temple guard Howie Evans) was right on me, but I've hit the same shot in the same situation before, it just didn't fall."

And the Minutemen lost, 50-48 to the league-leading Owls. As always, Smith was a key performer for coach Ron Gerlufsen, hitting an important three pointer that sparked a late comeback. Smith had seven straight UM points that took UMass from a 46-33 deficit to a 48-40 margin. In the clutch, he is always there for UMass.

"He's incredible in tight situations, I never thought once about not calling the play for him," Gerlufsen said. "You can say that the odds are against us, but if the business you're in is making a million, you don't get out. He's the guy I look to when

Minutewomen cripple slow-starting Dukes

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

Sometimes dreams don't come true.

Following the University of Massachusetts women's basketball 75-66 Atlantic 10 victory over Duquesne on Saturday at the Springfield Civic Center, UMass head coach Barbara Stevens told what she had dreamt about the night before.

"I had a dream in which I was playing in a game in which all my players were purposely throwing the ball out of bounds," Stevens said. "I told this to my players before the game and was pleased that it wasn't fulfilled."

The Minutewomen responded by committing a season low 11 turnovers in winning their seventh out of their last ten games. Combined with an unusually high shooting percentage (44.3) Stevens had plenty to smile about.

"I think everyone just came together in a game we had to win," UMass captain Jerrie Bernier said. Certainly, the key to the game was, however, Bernier's season high 23-point performance.

In dominating the middle, the 5-10 junior forward proved, along with 6-1 freshman center Sue Burtoft (12 points and a game high 12 reboinds), that the UMass inside game, which has toiled in the shadow of the opposition for much of the season, may be a force to be reckoned with at the Atlantic-10 Tournament this Friday in Philadelphia.

DeMarco leads men's gymnastics to NE title

Sbarra breaks record

By KATHLEEN HANNAN
Collegian Correspondent

Although the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team accepted a loss to Templeton Saturday, 260.55-265, Sunday afternoon compensated as the Minutemen easily took first place in the New England Collegiate Gymnastics Championships at Boyden with a total of 259.85 points.

UMass beat out the University of Vermont, Springfield College, Lowell, Dartmouth, and Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The meet began on pommel horse where co-captain Ken Dougherty defended his first place NE title with a 9.2. Sophomore Steve Baia performed a solid routine to clear second place with an 8.95.

No titles were won on the still rings although the scores were mostly high eights with junior Joe DeMarco taking a 9.1.

In vaulting, Phil Gorgone executed a handspring pike somersault over the horse, landing firmly to receive a well-deserved 9.45. Gorgone who has just recovered from a knee injury, took first place, beating out defending champ John Knowles of Lowell, who received a 9.2. "I saw John's vault and it was damn good, I knew I had to do better, and I stuck to it." said Gorgone.

The Honorable Jose Fernandes-Lopes, the Ambassador from the Embassy of the Republic of Cape Verde, visited the UMass campus between February 18-20. Mr. Lopes was invited as a guest of Chancellor Joseph Duffey to come here and meet with administrators and faculty to discuss possibilities for some type of academic collaboration between UMass and the Republic of Cape Verde and to meet with Cape Verdean students here.

Mr. Lopes, educated in Portugal in agricultural engineering and history and serving as ambassador for almost 5 years, said that the trip was an enormous success. He was very impressed with the scope of the University and left making a commitment to contract the Minister of Education in Cape Verde to encourage further academic collaboration with Umass.

The ambassador identified three areas of possible collaboration with the University. The first and most important priority for Cape Verde is the field of management. Middle level management positions are needed to run businesses and agencies in the country. The other priorities are in seeking training in such areas as fishery and marine biology and hotel, restaurant and tourism administration.

Paul Barrows, Director of CCEBMS, who was responsible for setting up the Ambassador's visit said the visit was, "A milestone in our efforts to assist Cape Verde. To my knowledge this is one of the first ambassadors from an African country to visit UMass. I think the Ambassador was very much impressed with the administration, the campus and in particular the Cape Verdean students he had a chance to interact with."

"A Soldier's Story"

Expressions of Conflict

by Segun Eubanks
Nummo Staff

In 1944, America was at War with Germany, Italy, and Japan. However, for Black soldiers in the U.S. Army the enemy was much closer to home. The Negro Ensemble Company's production of "A Soldier's Play," presented last Saturday at the Fine Arts Center, poignantly expressed the physical and mental conflicts that Black soldiers had to endure at that time period.

"They still hate you," were the last agonizing words of Technical Sergeant Vernon Waters, a Black career army man, as he is shot dead in the late night hours by an unknown assailant. Special Army investigator Richard Davenport, a Black Captain, is assigned to the case by white superiors who do not raallly want the case to cause racial antagonisms, because two white officers were suspected.

Aside from the investigation, Davenport must deal with attitudes of white officers who have little respect for his authority. "Being in charge just doesn't look right for negroes," said Captain Charles Taylor, a commander of the unit of all Black soldiers whose biggest assignment in the Army was to play baseball against white teams.

As Davenport begins to unravel the events leading up to the murder, through dramatic flashbacks of the soldiers who were interogated, he finds the inner dilemma that Sergeant Waters was battling. Through his fight to maintain dignity and gain respect for Black soldiers from their white counterparts, Water developed an extreme hatred of certain Black soldiers whom he called "lackeys." Soldiers who sung and danced for the whites, had very little education, or were very naive were considerad by Waters to be a disgrace and an embarassment to the Black race.

Waters had a particular resantment to one such soldier, Pvt. C.J. Memphis. Waters set up Pvt. Memphis and had him thrown in the stockade. While in the stockade Memphis committed suicide. Waters became very distraught and took to drinking. The night he was murdered he got in a fight with two white officers. However, he was killed by two black soldiers after confessing his deeds concerning Private Memphis.

The irony of the struggle was pointed out when Captain Davenport announced that the company, after finally being sent into battle, was wiped out in a Garman invasion.

The production was, to say the least superb. Directed by Douglas Turner Ward, author of "Day of Absence" and "Happy Ending" and co-founder of the Negro Ensemble Company, the play has toured extensively throughout the country and has won critical acclaim everywhere. The audience at the Fine Arts Center, easily got their money's worth for this unforgetable performance.

Steering Towards Unity

by Marilyn G. Bou
Nummo Staff

In an effort to upon communication between the exsisting Third World orginizations at the University of Massachusetts, The Third World Steering Committee has requested all organizations to send one or more representatives to the weekly meetings held in the Shirley Graham DuBois Library in the New Africa House.

The Committee also serves as a network for recruitment for the organizations. Efforts to create the committee first began last summer. Student leaders and administrators held informal meetings to lay the ground work for a committee. "An intent of this com- to share information and support one anothers effort," said Rick Townes, Academic Advisor for the Committee for the Education of Blacks and other Minority Students.

Efforts to create the committee first began last summer. Student leaders and administrators held informal meetings today the ground work for a committee. The goals and objectives of the Committee promotion of festivities without overlapping of events, promotion of communication both within the organizattions and the community at large, and coordination of events with several registered student organizations so that improvement of social and academic activities may be incrased. Dominique Harris said, "The Committee is a way for Third World Student organizations to sit down and communicate, look at themselves, what they are doing, where they are going and where they want to be.

The committee is stirring much excitement within the community. Richard Harrigan, vice-president of Iota Phi Theta, Inc. said, "The momentum is definitely on the upswing. The coalition of student and administrative leaders working together to achieve success in the New World Community at UMass is thrilling. I saw this as a catalyst for other New World students to become doers instead of dreamers."

The State of Black America

by Rod Clare
Nummo Staff

John Jacobs, the head of the National Urban League, spoke on the state of Black America last Thursday at Amherst College. In his message were tones of hardships, insensitivity, reconcilation and most of all, hope for all of America.

Mr. Jacobs said, it is no myth that Blacks have made significant progress in America during the past 25 years. He gave figures that showed that in 1959, 56 percent of Black America were poor while in 1979 only 31 percent were classified as such. However, the Reagan position that equal opportunity is here for all so there is no need for affirmative action programs, is false said Jacobs.

Under President Reagan, Mr. Jacobs said "the level of poverty for Black America has risen to 36 percent and threatens to go higher." Mr. Jacobs also said that while poverty affects Blacks disproportionately, more whites are on welfare than Blacks, so it is just not a Black problem, it is America's problem.

In the process of fighting poverty, Mr. Jacobs further pointed out that there are some things that only Blacks can solve for themselves. One is the alarming rate of Black teenage pregnancy and the need of a supportive father in such cases. Black children were also mentioned as problems that Blacks themselves have to overcome.

Mr. Jacobs stressed the need for America to continue to live up to its obligations forall of its citizens. The issues of peace and poverty in Mr. Jacobs's estimate are going to be the agendas around which Blacks and their white allies will unite. Adding that the Black-white Jewish rift is not as large as it made out to be. Mr. Jacobs said the Urban League and some white Jewish organizations are organizing programs in which they both will participate to show that the coalition, though slightly weakened, still exists.

His final topic for the evening was the issue of divestment from South Africa. Mr. Jacobs stated that he does not favor total withdrawal, but a stance in which no more American companies would go in and the companies that are already there would not expand. America, in his view, needs to be able to influence South African policies and withdrawal immediately won't solve the country's problem. As a last note he warned that U.S. companies have little time to enact changes in South Africa or a more militant leadership than that of Bishop Tutu may arise.

A note on the Graduate Fair

Heed well the words of of Herbert Spencer, "There is a principle which is a bar against all information, which is proof against all arguments and which cannot fail to keep a man in everlasting ignorance: that principle is contempt prior to investigation." This principle by Herbert Spencer, is one of eight standard rules of a student, edified not only to myself but to all students within the Department of Pan-African Culture at Kent State University by Chief Fela Sowande of Nigeria during the turbulent years of the late sixties and early seventies. This recollection is for you the reader who may have missed the Minority Graduate Student Association's Graduation Fair on February 14th at the Hampden Student Center, simply because he or she was "pre/post" occupied with the idea that the fair was inept and served no purpose.

Although, professional recruiters from the participating intitutions (except State University of New York), did not attend, some of the graduate students who particpated as recruiters attended the schools as undergraduates and/or as graduates. Others looked at the information provided by the participating graduate school one or two weeks prior to the fair in order to familiarize themselves with that institution. However, all the recruiters at one time or another took the obligatory steps necessary to get into graduate school, one of which is to graduate with a Bachelor's Degree!

For a people, especially young people who are supposedly conscious not only of race but have a conscience of all oppressive measures within/without the Third World community you cannot remain naive or acquiescent and expect to survive in an educational arena that is not just.

Paulo Freire, a visitor to this campus (try not to miss him), has written in his Pedagogy of the Oppressed, There is no such thing as a neutral education process. Education either functions as an instrument which is used to facilitate the integration of the younger generation into the logic of the present system and bring about conformity to it, or it becomes "the practice of freedom," the means by which men and women deal critically and creatively with reality and discover how to participate in the transformation for this world." If the Third World undergraduate community is to have a hand in the transformation and restructuring of education then they must prepare diligently, efficiently, effectively and in concert with one another to be successful.

The Minority Graduate Fair is just a beginning by Third World graduate students to communicate with their younger brothers and sisters and it won't be the last. So the next time "JOE SMOE" puts on a show, you come.

R.S.O. Funding in Jeopardy?

The Student Government Association (SGA) Treasurer, John Mooradian is in the movement of trying to end Registered Student Organization (RSO) groups. Mr. Mooradian said at the SGA coordinating committee meeting on Friday February 22, 1985 that "We don't have to fund RSO groups."

I talked to Mr. Mooradian about what he meant by his words. Mr. Mooradian answered my question by saying, "RSO's are groups whom are not part of the senate." This means only fourteen groups out of the fifty groups would be getting money from the SGA Budget committee. These fourteen groups are:

Academic Affairs,
Attorney General Office
Committee Public Policy
Economic Development Office
Finance/Budgets
Government Affairs
President's Office
Senate Governing Board
Senate Operation
Senate Rents and Fees
SCERA
SGA Payroll
SGA Affirmative Action Office
SGA Communication Office

These fourteen groups budget is even bigger than the other 46 student group (the RSO's) budget. For example, Scera's budget last year was $88,248.50; Scera requested a $102,000 budget. Senate operations budget was $65,484.24, President's Office $20,039.20 and Academic Affairs $22,117.54. Most of the money for these senate RSO groups are payroll. Furthermore, these people didn't even do their jobs right because if they did we wouldn't be in the trouble we are today! Do you know whom you should blame? I'll tell you whom, the SGA Treasurer John Mooradian and his buddy Chris Sullivan the SGA speaker.

John Mooradian also told me, we the SGA senate and the Budget committee should fund the SCERA coordinator of Anti-Opression. This position has been vacant for six months now and the cost of the position is $14,000.00. I personally disagree with Mr. Mooradian because we don't have the money to found this particular position. Mr. Mooradian said to me, in the SGA Constitution article 1, part G, "Developing and implementing methods of exposing and combatting human oppression," gives grounds to fund this position.

I think we should not fund this position because we have other groups whom are doing the same human oppression work on campus. We don't have the money to give to SCERA for this vacant position. Also, in the SGA constitution it doesn't say we (the senate) should fund the SCERA coordinator of anti-oppression. As you can see, Mr. Mooridian is just giving us his "B.S."

Therefore, I am asking the rest of the UMass SGA Senate to join me and the budget committee to vote down the motion of funding the SCERA vacant position. What Mooridian fails to consider are the needs of the students. For the price of one SCERA professional at $14,000, Third World students can recieve the social support, benefits and programs of all of the following organizations:

African Students Association
American Indian Student Association
Black Mass Communications Project
Cape Verdean Student Alliance
Concepto Latino
Korean Student Association

If the SGA Treasurer's policy is put into action, all of the groups above would be cut and slashed to zero! NUMMO NEWS, the only minority newspaper on campus, would be chopped along with the other RSO's. That's right, the paper you are now reading would be history.

It is important to say that Mooridian doesn't want to cut just Third World groups, but all groups that are not part of the Senate.

If you do not want to see our RSO's die, then do something about it. You can: 1) come to the Third World Caucus meeting at 6:00 p.m. in the Dukes room of the Student Union. 2) Come to the Student Senate meeting this Wednesday at 7:00 p.m. in the Campus Center. 3) Talk to your own dorm senator and tell them how you fell. 4) If you really want to help, leave a note in the Budget's mailbox in the Senate office, 4th flr. SUB.

WE BUILT THE PYRAMIDS

by Chris Williams
Nummo Staff

Many myths still exsist about African people and thier history. One of these myths is that the Ancient Africans, now reffered to as Egyptians, did not build the pyramids. Instead, many claim that they were built by various outsiders like the Biblicel Hebrews or more conviently by the Arabs from Western Asia. The purpose of this article is to show that neither of these two groups had any role in the construction of the pyramids in Egypt.

According to popular belief, the pyremids were built by the Hebrews of The Old Testament while they were enslaved in Egypt. First of all, the pryamids were completed by the XIII dynastic period before Joseph had even entered Egypt. The first pryamid that was built in Egypt was the Step Pyramid of Sakara in the III dynasty. It was built by an Ancient Egyptian multi-genius called Imhotep, who is the real father of medicine. Imhotep was also the Prime Minister to King Zoser, and it is from him thet we get the saying, "Eat, drink and be merry for tomorrow we die." It should also be noted thet when the Egyptians built their pyramids they always used Imhotep's method of using steps to outline the basic structure of the pyremid. The most well known of all the pyramids is the largest of the Great Pyramids et Giza that was built during the IV dynasty. This giant pyramid, which wes designed by an African named Cheops, is 451 feet high, has 2,500,000 blocks of granite, each weighing 2.5 tons and it took 100,000 laborers thirty years to build it.

Cheops, Fourth Dynasty Pharaoh, builder of the Great Pyramid: a Black man resembling the present-day Cameroonian type.

Abrehem, who is supposed to be the first of the Biblical Hebrews, wes born in Ur in Western Asia sometime during Egypt's XIII dynasty. Many people believe that the Hebrews were enslaved in Egypt end it wes during their enslevement that they built the pyramids. If indeed this enslavement did take piece (there is no historical proof of this), the Hebrews were not enslaved by the Egyptians during this period, which wes the XIV to XV dynasty, because the Egyptians were under foriegn rule. This means that if the Hebrews were enslaved in Egypt, they were not enslaved by the Egyptians. Besides, how could the Hebrews build pyramids in the XIV end XV dynasties when all pyramid construction ended in the XIII dynasty? Joseph hed not even entered Egypt as yet, and when he did, and subsequently his family, the pyramids were already built.

Furthermore, nowhere in the Old Testament is it mentioned that the Hebrews built the pyramids. The book of Exodus describes what the Hebrews did in the following passage: "So the Egyptians pot slave-drivers over them to crush their spirit with herd labor. The Israelites built the cities of Pithom end Rameses to serve as supply centers for the king." - Exodus I.II Today's English Version.

The next group that is given credit for building the pyramids are the Arabs from Western Asia. The Arabs had nothing to do with the construction of the pyramids, because they did not enter Africa in any large numbers until 639 A.D., thousands of years after the pyremids were built. Besides, when the Arabs entered Africa in tha savanth century thay came as colonizers and anslavers of Africa and its people. Many of the tombs and templas in Egypt ware destroyad by tha Arabs. These Arabs had no raspect for Egyptian religions, in spite of tha fact that tha so-called 'Wastern' raligions of Judaism, Christianity and Islam avolved out of tha Egyptian Mystery Systam. Readars who ara intarasted in pursuing this subjact should consult tha following books: "Man, God and Civilization" by John G. Jackson, "Tha Egyptian Book of tha Daad", translated by E.A. Wallis Budge, and "African Origins of tha Major 'Wastern Raligions'", by Yosaf ben-Jochannan.

This discussion would not be completa without discussing tha raason why most peopla baliave that Africans did not build the pyramids. Tha answar is quita simple, the need to baliava in whita supramacy. In ordar for white supremacy to exsist, white supremists hava to usa all of their rasourcas to show that Africans did not build pyramids. Tha very idea of Africans building these gigantic monumants debunks tha idaa of whita supremacy. After all, Africans were supposed to ba in tha deap, dark jungles of Africa waiting for so-called "Christian" Europe to bring them the "blassings" of Chrisianity and tha "fruits" of Western Civilization. With the avidance presented in this article I hope that one would think twice before saying any outsiders of Africa built the pyramids, spacifically the Biblical Hebrews and the Arabs

Author talks of Jewish tragedy

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

Renowned author and Holocaust survivor, Elie Wiesel, praised those who sheltered Jewish refugees fleeing the Nazis as people "who saved the honor of humankind," but lamented that so few had the courage to do so, in a speech last night at the University of Massachusetts.

Wiesel, before an overflow crowd in the Campus Center Auditorium, said that only by actively recalling past tragedies such as the Holocaust can society avert future catastrophes of even greater magnitude.

"We go out of our way to say thanks to those who in times of darkness opened the door" to Jews, he said. "But how many were there?

"The question is, what happened to the others? Where were they? How could Hitler alone cause so many tragedies?" he asked. An estimated six million Jews died in Nazi concentration camps before and during World War II.

The Holocaust, revealed that "it is possible for an entire society to remain indifferent to the plight of an endangered people," Wiesel said.

The title of Wiesel's speech, sponsored by the UMass chapter of B'nai B'rith Hillel, was "Building a Moral Society."

"An immoral society is one where it is possible for a ruler, on a whim, to endanger an entire people," he said.

Wiesel said there can "never be any analogy" between the Holocaust and any other tragedy in history. Yet he added, in reference to the threat of nuclear war, that "the impossible is possible."

"Nobody can guarantee that a ruler someday will not wake up and, in a fit of anger or madness...press the button.

"The world today is not an encouraging place to live," he said, citing "repression" in the Soviet Union, Poland, Afghanistan and starvation in Africa. "We must face all these victims. If we don't we are accomplices.

"But if we tell the tale (of past tragedies), we create a shield for ourselves" against future ones, he said. "The sum of memories creates our own refuge."

Former UM student appeals ruling

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

A former University of Massachusetts student is appealing a judge's decision not to hear his $500,000 racial discrimination lawsuit filed against Mount Holyoke College in 1983.

A Hampshire District Court judge granted summary judgement, which rules there is not evidence to proceed with the case against Zagloul Ayad, on June 15, 1983. Ayad is a former employee of Mt. Holyoke College. He is now claiming that George Nassar, his attorney at the time, did not submit necessary documents at the summary hearing.

Robert Moynihan, Mt. Holyoke personnel director said in a court deposition that he told Ayad that if he did not resign his position as a cook at the school, he would tell police that Ayad had accosted a woman.

Ayad, who claims he was actually fired because he is an Egyptian and a Moslem, and that there was unrest in the Middle East at the time, said Nassar failed to submit several documents at his hearing that could have proved he was not at the school when the alleged attack occured.

Mt. Holyoke has filed a counter suit for $500,000 plus legal fees, which claims Ayad was discharged because he failed to perform in a satisfactory manner. It also claims he accosted a student, Ayad said, though no criminal charges have been brought against him.

Ayad's present attorney, Joan R. Neddleman, said she was reluctant to comment on the case.

"I would like to find a different way to handle it," she said.

Mt. Holyoke refused to identify the alleged victim, Ayad said.

Ayad was a continuing education student at UMass at the time of the alleged assault, and he said there are three professors at the school who can support his claim that he was not at Mt. Holyoke at the time of the alleged attack.

The South Hadley Police Department has no record of an assault, he said. The Mt. Holyoke security department has records of an assault complaint, but the name of the person who filed the complaint was deleted, Ayad added.

Dissident blasts Soviet political system

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Correspondent

Yuri Tuvim, a dissident of the Soviet Union and a research scientist, said last night at the University of Massachusetts that for America to deal properly with the Soviets, people must become knowledgable about the nature of its totalitarian system.

Before a capacity audience in room 168, Campus Center, Tuvim, a former Soviet citizen, related his experiences and impressions gained from 45 years under various communist regimes.

He emphasized the importance of the average American becoming aware that the Soviet system in the long run depends on world domination for survival.

Early in the lecture Tuvim made clear his belief that the Soviet Union is actually two countries. One country contains 260 million citizens who have little power and another is populated by a half-million people who rule the Soviet Union, such as party members, bureaucrats, secret police, and ministers of the state.

The average citizen, he said, has a shortage of even basic necessities while the ruling elite have access to "special medical care, food systems, apartment housing, and even gas stations."

Grad students rally against fee proposal

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

About 300 University of Massachusetts students rallied outside the Student Union Building yesterday, and then marched to the Whitmore Administration Building in protest of the proposed Universal Resource Fee.

The noontime rally was attended mostly by graduate students who claim the fee will be unfair to them because they don't use many of the buildings that the fee will be paid for.

Students chanted "No way, we won't pay," and sang a song led by a member of the graduate student senate.

Sanjiv Dugal, president of the senate, said the University would "add insult to injury" if it implemented the fee since "graduate students are paid less for their teaching here than at any other school."

The Universal Resource Fee is a consolidated $261-per-year charge designed to pay off one large debt service on many campus buildings, including the Campus Center, residence halls, dining commons, the Student Union Building, and other non-academic facilities.

Currently, there are several debt services on the buildings which are paid off by a variety of student fees, such as the Campus Center Fee and the room and board fees.

The new plan is much more efficient financially and will save the University millions of dollars, officials have said.

"I may not agree with the graduate students, but I understand their arguments," Associate Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance, H.J. Littlefield said yesterday.

The resource fee was approved "in principle" by the trustees last year, Littlefield said.

Graduate student senators will attend Wednesday's trustee meeting in Boston to protest the proposal.

Yesterday's group marched to Whitmore and walked straight up to the third floor office of Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey.

The chancellor was at lunch when the students arrived, but said in an interview later, "It's not my proposal."

About 250 students signed a "guest list" to inform Duffey that they were there to see him.

Most of the graduate students at the rally said the important underlying issue was the low pay they receive as teaching assistants and researchers.

"Our stipends are far too low," Christos Karastamatis, vice president of the senate, said. "No graduate student will be able to afford this, nor should they have to."

George Claxton, 26, the graduate senator from the anthropology department, said "We're not even allowed to use these buildings. It's easier for their bookkeeping not to differentiate between graduate and undergraduate students, but we will be paying for their efforts."

Amherst college holds hunger awareness day

In response to human suffering in many parts of Africa, an Amherst College group has declared today "A Call to Action on the African Crisis" and will present a variety of events on the topic.

The Amherst Africa Response Coalition, in conjunction with Bread for the World, UNICEF, and Oxfam America are sponsoring activities aimed at increasing awareness of the current hunger crisis in Africa.

Amherst College President Peter Pouncey and several Amherst professors will address the "necessity of responding to the suffering," at 4:30 p.m. in Johnson Chapel, Jeffery Hall, founder of the coalition said.

And following, C. Payne Lucas, founder and executive director of the hunger agency Africare will speak at 8 p.m. Hall said a phone bank will be provided for students to call their Washington representatives and urge them to support two current bills on the African crisis.

The goal of the coalition, formed this semester, is to raise $100,000 for four hunger agencies: UNICEF, Oxfam America, Church World Service, and Africare.

Embezzler sentenced to jail

BOSTON - A 45-year-old widow who admitted that she embezzled more than $2 million from a Worcester bank was sentenced yesterday to three years in federal prison.

U.S. District Judge John J. McNaught imposed the penalty on Mary Leona Savoie of Dudley, who worked for 15 years at the Guaranty Bank and Trust Company and secretly diverted bank funds over a three-year period.

When she entered her guilty plea last month in the same courtroom, Mrs. Savoie cried and confessed, "I just did it."

Authorities said it was the largest bank embezzlement in the state in recent years. The $2.1 million she was said to have taken during three years beginning in 1981 was nearly twice the $1.2 million that 11 bandits stole from Brink's Inc. in Boston in 1950.

At Guaranty Bank and Trust, Mrs. Savoie was described as a hard-working, loyal employee who had risen to assistant manager of the accounting department.

Investigators said the mother of four had no known vices, no major debts and no criminal record. But they said she maneuvered $2,128,777 from the bank into accounts she had opened for herself in New York and Canada.

She told others that the money to improve her home and to buy cars for herself and her son came from her husband's life insurance policy.

Boy held in shooting of mother

DOUGLAS, Mass.—A 15-year-old boy described by acquaintances as quiet and well-liked was charged yesterday in connection with the fatal shootings of his mother and his maternal grandparents.

Joseph Perkins, 15, was arraigned in a closed session in Uxbridge District Court and pleaded not delinquent to charges of juvenile deliquency. District Attorney John J. Conte said that within seven days he would ask the case be transferred from Juvenile Court to Superior Court, where the youth would be tried as an adult on charges of murder.

Judge Anthony N. Compagnone ordered Perkins held at Metropolitan State Hospital in Waltham where doctors will determine if he is mentally fit to undergo court proceedings. The case was continued until March 12.

The Douglas Memorial High School student was arrested Sunday at a Braintree motel after the bodies of the three family members were discovered in their home here and police were alerted to look for the youth and his mother's missing car.

Man accused of uniform theft

SPRINGFIELD — A Peabody man foiled in his attempts to remove former basketball star Wilt Chamberlain's jersey from a mannequin in the Basketball Hall of Fame pleaded innocent yesterday to charges in connection with the break-in, police said.

Judge James P. Dohoney of Springfield District Court set a March 25 pre-trial conference for Andrew G. Mecrea, 37, who police speculated intended to sell jerseys and other basketball memorabilia from the museum to collectors. He was freed on $1,000 bail.

Former Boston Celtic Bill Russell's game shirt, which had been cut off its manneguin with a razor, also was recovered, police said.

Hall of Fame spokesman Jerry Healy said Monday that Russell's mannequin would remain naked while his uniform is in police custody.

"We had to resew Wilt," Healy said. "We had to put his pants back on."

Army ROTC may oust lesbian

BOSTON — A federal district court must reconsider whether a declared lesbian can stay in an Army ROTC program because of new evidence about her homosexuality that could make her unfit for duty, a federal appeals court has ruled.

In a four-page opinion written by Judge Juan Torruella, a three-judge panel of the 1st Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals set aside a decision by a federal magistrate that reinstated Diane Matthews in the ROTC program at the University of Maine's Orono campus.

Salem students return to school

SALEM, Mass.- Students returning yesterday to Salem High School after vandals ransacked the building were asked to put themselves in the place of the brothers and sisters charged in the destruction.

"We wanted them to be sensitive to those individuals, who certainly must be feeling very tense today," Principal Edward A. Curtin said.

Curtin said the 1,400 students broke into discussion groups before classes began yesterday to talk about the $300,000 worth of vandalism and the arrest of 12 people, 10 of them students at the school.

Vandals who broke into the building during last week's winter break smashed hundreds of windows, destroyed expensive equipment and emptied fire extinguishers.

Most of the damage was cleaned up last week in a marathon effort by school workers, a professional cleaning contractor and residents who volunteered their labor to allow the school to reopen as scheduled Monday.

Curtin, who led one of the 21 discussion groups with students, said his session "went extremely well."

"I tried in a limited period of time to talk to them about the extent of the damage, when it happened and explain to them how the community cooperated in an unbelievable fashion," he said.

"We tried to deal with their own emotions and their own feelings about this," he said.

The reaction of the students, he said, was "just one of concern - a lot of questions as to what's going to happen to the students and in just what way their individual education is going to be impaired. We ensured them the impact to their education is going to be minimal.

UMass professor blew whistle on side effects of DES drug

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

A biochemist currently teaching at the University of Massachusetts was responsible for sounding the first alarm on what has become, decades later, widespread outcry over the use of the synthetic hormone diethylstibestrol, commonly known as DES.

In 1960, biochemistry professor Anthony M. Gawienowski, then working at Kansas State University, urged the Federal Drug Administration (FDA) to investigate the long term effects of DES, now strongly linked to cancer of the breast and uterus but for nine years his voice went unheard.

DES was given to an estimated 2 million pregnant women during the 1940s and '50s on the belief it would prevent miscarriages, and routinely injected into beef cattle until the FDA ordered it off the market in 1978.

Gawienowski's suspicions about DES were first aroused in the late 1950s when he injected the drug into rats and mice.

His experiments found not only that radioactive DES went into the skin, but that its residue was found to pervade body tissues, especially the liver.

Gawienowski recalls he became "perturbed" when he learned the drug was widely used as a means of improving the bulk of poultry and beef.

He obtained the livers of butchered DES cows and "found some that contained four milligrams of DES residue per pound of liver tissue."

"There is no reason to assume," Gawienowski warned in 1960, "that the hormone taken in meat will behave any differently than it would as an administered drug (pill)."

Gawienowski informed the FDA of his findings, but it wasn't until 1969 that they responded by asking him for more details on how to analyze DES in meat products.

At the time of Gawienowski's findings DES was no longer being prescribed to pregnant women, not because of its carcinogenic properties, but because it was ineffective in preventing miscarriages and had unpleasant side effects, such as severe nausea.

When first marketed, DES was thought to be a cheap substitute for the natural hormone progesterone, while sharing the natural substance's capacity to prevent spontaneous abortion by keeping the uterine environment intact.

However, even after it was known to be carcinogenic, until 1978 the drug was legally used in this country to stimulate growth in beef cattle which would later end up on the nation's dinner tables.

Gawienowski attributes the FDA's slow response to vigorous lobbying on the part of both powerful cattle and pharmaceutical industries.

UMass professor of biochemistry, Anthony M. Gawienowski.

"Cattle given DES will grow 15 to 20 percent faster on the same amount of feed," he explained, adding, that this gave the cattle industry "very strong motivation to use it."

He also said "when a pharmaceutical company is making very large profits from a drug it is in their self-interest not to find out its harmful effects."

Gawienowski recalled that when he first became worried over the effects of the drug, he contacted a major company, Eli Lilly, responsible for its production, to suggest they needed to do research on it.

"The research director told me to investigate it myself. They should have really done it themselves," he said.

DES was finally banned by the FDA in 1978, after the Environmental Defense Fund, for which Gawienowski is a consultant, sued the Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, and the commissioner of the FDA.

At the same time a federal task force was established to investigate the effects of the drug, which are believed to include: high risk of breast cancer in mothers who took the drug; high risk of a rare vaginal cancer in both mothers and their daughters; higher rate of miscarriages among daughters of DES women; and reproductive abnormalities in both sons and daughters of DES women.

Gawienowski is still concerned now, that the drug "is being bootlegged and is still given to cattle."

In 1980, FDA inspectors found nearly a half-million head of cattle illegally implanted with DES pellets and more than 1,200 cattle illegally fed DES.

Gawienowski, though no longer actively involved in researching DES, is worried again, but this time with the use of "certain herbicides on plants," he said.

"I have communicated my concerns to the Environmental Protection Agency and environmental defense fund but have heard nothing from them yet," Gawienowski said, adding that the situation reminded him of the DES incident.

But he is still hopeful "we can learn from the DES incident and avoid it from coming up again in the future."

Amherst cops probe alleged campus rape

Amherst police said yesterday the alleged rape of an 18-year-old University of Massachusetts student which occured on Butterfield Terrace last Thursday night is being "actively investigated."

Police said the student told police she had left her dormitory room on campus and was walking down Butterfield Terrace when two men dragged her into nearby bushes. She said one assailant raped her while the other subdued her.

Police said the student reported she screamed when she was attacked but no one heard her, and that the two men ran off when a motor vehicle passed the scene of the incident.

The student described the assailants to police as white males in the late teens or early 20's.

Rape services offered

The following is a compilation of available resources at the University of Massachusetts for victims of rape or sexual assault, friends of the victim, and those who wish to increase their awareness concerning issues of violence against women:

• The Everywoman's Center runs a counselor/advocate program which offers 24 hour services to victims of sexual violence. Trained counselors provide a crisis line and direct services to victims of rape, sexual assualt, incest, battering, and sexual harassment. Services include long and short term counseling, support groups, information, advocacy, and referral. Everywoman's Center: 545-0883, Twenty-four hour crisis number: 545-0800.

• The University Health Services provides medical care for victims of rape or sexual assault. The Campus police will transport victims to the health center, where they can receive a medical examination, and be asked to give a description of the incident. Follow up care includes pregnancy testing, testing for sexually transmitted diseases and attention to emotional needs. If desired, a rape counselor advocate or a member of the mental health staff is available. Health Services 24 hour phone: 545-2671.

• The Department of Public Safety, located in Dickinson Hall, has a sensitive crime unit to help victims of rape and sexual assault. they have personnel who have received specialized training in the treatment of rape victims and can arrange for immediate medical, legal, and counseling assistance. The law provides that all reports of rape and conversations between police and victims shall be completely confidential. The campus police rape hotline: 545-2677.

Graduate eyes land development

By JOSEPH McCORMACK
Collegian Correspondent

Mount Toby and the wildnerness around it in Sunderland, although beautiful and easily accessible, are relatively underdeveloped and unknown according to a former Univeristy of Massachusetts student who wants to change that notion.

Despite skepticism from faculty members, Chris Ryan, a 1984 graduate with a bachelor's degree in geography, said he would like to see UMass get more use out of the 1,000 acres it manages on Mount Toby, sandwhiched between Routes 116 and 63. A trail guide of the region which he wrote will soon be published, Ryan said.

"They don't even know what they have up there....It's a gem, he said. Ryan gets excited when he describes the networks of trails that are "just sitting up there, waiting to be used."

Ryan said the trails are "excellent" for cross country skiing, snowmobiling, and hiking. Ryan has several ideas for improving Mount Toby for other acitivities, which include hiring a forest warden to oversee the area, turning part of Cranberry Pond into a beach with lifeguards, building tentplatforms, and renovating some abandoned buildings. The cost of implementing the ideas would be an initial one of about $60,000, and $30,000 annually, Ryan said.

The areas of land UMass controls are managed by the forestry and wildlife department. Professor Brayton Wilson said its management plan is concerned with maintianing the area for forestry research, aesthetic scenery, and fishing.

Ryan stresses that a recreational master plan is needed.

"The forestry and wildlife department policy is lacking in recreational management, Ryan said.

Ryan wrote the beginnings of a recreational plan that the town of Sunderland is interested in. "I would like to see Sunderland, the university, and private landowners cooperate in developing the area, he said.

However, Professor Donald Mader, head of the forestry and wildlife department, is concerned that increased use of Mount Toby may jeopardize research and demonstration projects in the forest.

"If it's developed too intensively, it will also develop problems," he said.

Past problems include nude bathing at Cranberry Pond, broken gates, along withhorses, trail bikes, and four-wheel-drive vehicles eroding the trails and roads.

Mader said that the faculty committee of the department has discussed their idea to organize recreation at Mount Toby.

The department has decided that it would take a "major effort" to come up with a plan that would increase recreation and protect research on Mt. Toby, he said. At this time, they are "reluctant" to do so, Mader said.

Mader estimated that the cost to organize the area for recreation and protect research would be greater than what Ryan estimates.

Before starting on his Mount Toby project, Ryan mapped out trails in the Holyoke range. The first 1,000 copies of his map have sold out. The Mount Toby map is due out from the printers in two weeks, and will be available at the University Store and local sporting goods stores.

Soviet dissident, Yuri Tuvim

Claiming that the free and relatively good life of the western nations is "a big seduction for the Soviet people," Tuvim said the main goal of the ruling class is to keep the people in the Soviet Union under control by the use of an internal secret police and army. Another goal of Soviet policy, he said, was "external expansion of their prisons throughout the globe and erosion of the seductive freedom of the democratic countries."

Tuvim said the majority of citizens resent the exclusive privileges of the rulers and that this creates tension within the society, a potential explosion which the Soviet Union tries to avoid by the use of force and anti-West propaganda.

Tuvim emphasized that "dealing with Russia should be linked to human rights issues which are the Achilles Heel of the Soviet Union."

A unified front of American public opinion might affect the political actions of Russia, but, Tuvim maintained, "every American must become knowledgeable of the issues with respect to the Soviet Union and present a consistent, coherent foreign policy through the election of the right people into office."

Letters to the Editor

Incivility works both ways

In John F. Till's letter yesterday, the question of the "right to civility" was raised with respect to a minority at UMass: the homosexuals. It is seemingly apparent that Till feels homosexuals haven't "earned" the right to civility. Perhaps homosexuals haven't, but the majority, in this case, heterosexuals, haven't exactly been deserving either. I seem to recall a certain "Heterosexual fight back" rally with the intent to burn a homosexual in effigy last semester.

I find it strange to have the PGA and the Lesbian Union compared to the Ku Klux Klan and the American Nazi Party. It has been said that the homosexuals seem to take "great pride" in setting themselves apart by their institutions, thus creating friction. On the other hand, don't the Republican Club and the Radical Student Union etc. set themselves apart, and seem quite proud of it?

Lastly, the alleged "double standard" on sexuality, stating heterosexuals are not able to express themselves freely. Heterosexuals state their feelings often, and frequently in a condemning fashion. Both sides are guilty of incivility towards the other. However, it seems to me that homosexuals are being deemed guilty until proven innocent.

Nazis, Klan inoffensive?

What did John F. Till mean (in "Promoting a double standard at UMass") in yesterday's Collegian by the statement, "Just as the students and faculty of UMass would not be willing to accept a chapter of the Ku Klux Klan or the American Nazi Party, They will not accept the PGA or the Lesbian Union, and consider the latter two to be offensive?"

Does he mean by saying "the latter two to be offensive" that the American Nazi Party and the Ku Klux Klan are not offensive? He also implies that because the majority of the population is not homosexual the majority find homosexuality offensive.

We do not feel offended by the PGA or the Lesbian Union. What offends us is Till's attitude towards minorities and his desire to suppress their individuality.

Showing affection is risky

We will not attempt to take issue with the entirety of John F. Till's letter in yesterday's Collegian. It is simply too large a boondoggle. We will however attempt to expose the blatant untruths in one simple sentence fragment--"Homosexuals are free to express themselves, heterosexuals are not." This is simply untrue and representative of much that is wrong with homophobic thought. Heterosexuals have the entire culture industry; T.V., movies, printed media. All these are geared towards straight relations, expressions, and ideals. For Till to think otherwise is simply overly paranoid homophobia in action. Even in Northampton, one of the most open communities in the country, does one see men walking hand in hand on a warm Sunday? No. Does one see two women kissing on the Amherst Common? No. However, Till as a heterosexual male, or any other heterosexual male, is free to express his sexuality virtually anywhere.

Gays and lesbians risk violence against them if they show open affection towards one another. This includes verbal, institutional and physical violence. One need only look at the all too often instances of anti-gay beatings to realize this fact. When was the last time a straight man was harrassed, beaten or killed merely for being straight?

Straight people are indeed welcome at most gay events, because straights and gays are all people, worthy of basic human rights, respect, and yes, even civility.

'Persecution' of a minority

I wish John F. Till had defined his idea of a "normal" human being before he labeled homosexuals as "being different." Am I correct in assuming that this means a "good American" would have to be white and heterosexual? I am both, however, I consider myself an individual living in a unique, diverse society.

If one looks around the campus, it is not difficult to notice men and women arm in arm, holding each other in public, and expressing themselves to each other in various ways. The rarity is an instance in which two men, or women, are seen physically touching each other openly. May I ask then: who is being withheld from expressing themselves in this large university?

I was appalled at seeing homosexuals being compared to "the Ku Klux Klan," and the "American Nazi Party." There have been no violent, or non-violent marches, or angry, destructive bands of homosexuals seen accosting the Jews or the blacks on campus. Perhaps, Till, I have been missing something.

I was not alive, fortunately, during the decades and centuries in this world when blacks, Jews, and other minorities were being overtly persecuted by primarily intimidated, sadistic whites. It saddens me to witness the persecution of another minority, in this righteous American society; one that has always included the homosexual.

It is the variety of the people and their ideas here at UMass, that make it an enjoyable and stimulating environment to live and study in. Perhaps we will never learn to respect and accept individuals as people, simply because they do not adhere to some unwritten "law of the norm." Personally, I cannot help being thankful that I am not a mindless, colorless "clone," and that I am exposed to the hopes, dreams, desires and intelligence of others who are so wonderfully unlike me.

American policies serve extremists

"Thought's a luxury. Do you think the peasant thinks of God and Democracy when he gets inside his mud hut at night?"

—"The Quiet American" by Graham Greene

The heat under the Reagan administration's rhetoric concerning Nicaragua has been turned up a notch.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz asserted last week that the people of Nicaragua were falling "behind the iron curtain." Speaking to the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco, he said, "Those who would cut off freedom fighters...are, in effect, consigning Nicaragua to the endless darkness of Communist tyranny."

Reagan administration officials continue to claim that the CIA-backed contras are simply disillusioned, democratic ex-Sandinistas. By repeatedly asserting this palaver the administration hopes the notion will become common currency, accepted as truth. The situation is not so simple.

In the Nov. 11 Sunday N.Y. Times Magazine, foreign affairs columnist Flora Lewis pointed out that the contras are neither all ex-Sandinistas as the Reagan administration claims, nor all members of Somoza's National Guard as the Sandinista goverment claims.

Andrew M. Paven

The fact is, CIA funding makes strange bedfellows. To make sure covert aid is spent efficiently the CIA requires splinter groups to join forces before it loosens its purse-strings. Lewis writes: The attempt to achieve "maximum effectiveness is mirrored in U.S. pressures on the Nicaraguan contras...Eden Pastora, the Costa Rica-based ex-Sandinista, has told plaintively of the rebuffs he met from the U.S. because of his refusal to join with Nicaraguan-contras based in Honduras under the leadership of ex-supporters of the deposed dictator Anastasio Somoza."

One of the problems is that American foreign policy wears its ideological blinders when convenient. The blinkers allow us to support "democracies" such as South Africa and South Korea while seeking to overthrow governments such as Nicaragua's.

The fact that the Sandinista government receives their support from the Soviet Union is as much a result of U.S. policy as it is Sandinistan initiative.

In seeking to overthrow as brutal a regime as was the U.S.-backed Somoza, the revolution led by the Sandinistas was necessarily violent, and it attracted supporters from all ends of the political spectrum. Writes Lewis: "There were Communists, and militants to the left of Communists, and there were businessmen, middle-class professionals, publishers, dedicated democrats."

In 1979, Somoza was overthrown. The U.S. joined with the Organization of American States in recognizing the new junta. "But," writes Lewis, "because of the new government's ideological mix, Washington was tentative with urgently needed aid. The U.S. seems to prefer to deal in monochromes--all white hats or all black hats. We have a way of intensifying polarization instead of countering it. That serves extremists...People who resist brass knuckles aren't as adept at using them, and the fiercer the battle, the more likely that the victor will be the toughest."

While the administration seems to search for ideals in Nicaragua, they should note that what is available is a choice between better and worse. For the peasants the overthrow by the Sandinistas was better than continued rule by Somoza.

In the Quiet American Pyle, the American, is talking with the British journalist, Fowler. Fowler asks, "Do you think they know they're fighting for Democracy?" "They don't want Communism," answers Pyle. "They want enough rice," replies Fowler.

The Somoza regime was not overthrown for the advancement of geo-political strategy, but because enough people of all persuasions were sufficiently outraged at its atrocities to rise up in revolt. In contrast, in four years the 15,000 U.S.-backed contras have failed to win and hold a single town--the fact must say something about their popularity.

The late Senator Frank Church once said, "We will marvel at the progress in our own neighborhood, measured from the day we stopped trying to repress the irrepressible and exchanged our unreasonable fear of Communism for a rekindled faith in freedom."

A Soldier's Play stunning

A SOLDIER'S PLAY
Saturday, February 23,
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

"Any man who don't know where they belong must be in a lot of pain."

The above-quoted line from Charles Fuller's Pulitzer Prize-winning A Soldier's Play, presented last Saturday night at the Fine Arts Center (in conjunction with the New World Theater) by the Negro Ensemble Company, sums up the powerful message the play conveyed to and enthusiastic audience.

The play (upon which the Academy Award nominated film A Soldier's Story is based) takes place at a Louisiana army base during the Second World War. Vernon C. Waters (played by Tony Major), a black tech/sergeant, has been murdered, and in the course of the following investigation, the truth about the black soldier's situation in WWII is exposed. Ultimately the audience realizes that it hardly matters who pulled the trigger: it was Waters' unresolvable inner conflicts about the army, his race and himself which sealed his fate.

The Negro Ensemble Company (or NEC) presented a powerful rendition of the play, neatly balancing the tension and emotion of the work with a kind of austerity that saved it from becoming melodrama. The NEC lived up to its name and reputation with its superb ensemble playing. The authority and absolute authenticity with which the barracks scenes were played carried the audience past disbelief. Personalities quickly emerged through the enforced military standardization: because of this the group dynamic which led to the tragedy becomes clear.

Faced with such uniformly strong performances, it is difficult to choose those deserving special mention. Two who stood out were Dan Martin, who, as investigating officer Captain Davenport, brilliantly portrayed a soldier torn between his duty and his instincts; also remarkable was Cedric Turner as Private C.J. Memphis, at once victim and symbol of the army's institutionalized racism. Only spatial limitations prevent the crediting of each player in the production; seperately and as a group they embodied the term "professional."

National praise heralded the arrival of A Soldier's Play, and the NEC, to Amherst. The Company, now in its 18th season, is an award-winning black-controlled organization oriented toward the utilization and encouragement of all aspects of black participation in theater arts. Based in New York, the Company tours extensively throughout the United States and abroad. The NEC's production of A Soldier's Play was part of the 1984 Olympic Arts Festival in Los Angeles.

The caliber of this performance should once again make area residents thankful for the cultural asset we have in the Fine Arts Center.

Shabazz cites human rights issues

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

The need for a broader view of human rights and the need for the development of a clear cut strategy for ending Apartheid in South Africa were emphasized in a lecture by Betty Shabazz Sunday at the University of Massachusetts.

Shabazz spoke at the rededication ceremony of the Malcolm X Center. A registered nurse and host of a weekly radio program for women in New York, she was not made aware of the Center's existence while pursuing her doctorate degree in education at UMass in 1975.

The Center is named after her late husband and civil rights leader. She was "delighted and overjoyed" for the creation of the social, cultural, and educational meeting place.

"You should press very hard for human rights," she said, adding one should "support equality for all women and men and children, even the slaves, the barbarians and not just a small group."

For the rest of the year, she said people should focus on a thorough process of change for the issues of freedom, social interaction, the homeless, the poor, the disenfranchised, and the minority veterans. She said the black veterans who fought "in support of liberty" are not equally honored, as they should be.

"When minorities maximize their strength it yields power." Although blacks and minorities might not have the influence or the control, they have the motivating force with the vote," she said.

Another area one must monitor over the next 12 months is the number of arrests made in cities nationwide in protest of South Africa's policy of racial segregation. "Those going to jail by pre-arrangement are dying and really living inhuman conditions," she said.

The arrests, which started with a demonstration outside the South African Embassy in Washington Nov. 21 and have included college professors, clergymen, labor leaders, and politicians are overshadowing racial incidents in the South African nation.

Betty Shabazz speaks of the need of "pressing and fighting for human rights" Sunday at the rededication of the Malcolm X Center in Southwest.

The feminization of poverty, the end result of labor and economic discrimination to women, should also be taken notice of. Females are half of the world's population and yield two-thirds of the work, yet they receive one-tenth of the world's income and own less than one one-hundredth percent of the world's property.

"It is important that one thinks and not be persuaded by the media who already have an agenda, and that's why you need an agenda," she said.

She said people were boggled down by the methods for achieving black civil rights usesd by Malcolm X and the Rev. Martin Luther King. "The method negated the bottom line [freedom]."

Angelou sends message to all

By KIMBERLY BURGE
AND YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Bringing a message of self-worth and self-love to young people and tracing the survival of black people solely through literature, Maya Angelou delivered a moving and electrifying speech last night in Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts.

Singing and reading excerpts from poems of such noted writers as Countie Collens, Nikki Giovanni, Mari Evan, James Walden Johnson, Paul Dunbar, Gordon Parks and others, as well as using African sayings, she binded the history of black people with humor and pride.

She said she uses black poetry because "it is so rich, so beautiful, seldom cherished and never taught." But she emphasized that literature is "credited with the survival of people."

"Literature encourages us to develop courage," which in turn helps build bridges that attempt to reach others. Literature, she said, "encourages a generation to survive, better than that, it encourages one to thrive."

Angelou stressed the importance for one "to avail yourself with education. There is a world of difference between being trained and being educated."

She also encouraged young people in the audience to "take advantage of the library. Angelou said education is a becoming and an ongoing process.

When speaking of self-love, Angelou said it was "dangerous for a person to believe he or she is loved by a person who does not love themselves."

Quoting the African saying that one must "be careful when a naked person offers you a dress," she said loving one's self should not be looked at selfishly, but selfully.

Memories of her childhood were told with love and humor.

"Women are phenomenal. It's too bad that we don't trust ourselves enough to test our potential," she said reading her poem "Phenomenal Woman."

Minutemen run seventh in New England

Two-mile relay wins title

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Sparked by a victory in the two-mile relay, the University of Massachusetts men's track team captured seventh place in the New England championships this past weekend at Boston University.

The quartet of Mark Themea, Mark Schrebler, Craig Moburg, and Bill Stewart turned in a 7:35.85, two seconds ahead of Northeastern and Lowell, to take the regional title.

"They ran a good race, we were ahead, fell behind in the third leg, and Stewart took in for the win," coach Ken O'Brien said. "I'm basically pleased with how we finished, I'd hoped for sixth maybe, but we did pretty well."

Boston University, on their home track, won the meet with 122½ points. Northeastern had 116 in second, Boston College was third with 63, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Lowell were 4-5-6, UMass had 27 points.

"BU was considered the favorite, they have strong field events people that score well," O'Brien said

The Minutemen have one more competition before getting ready for the outdoor season, the IC4A championships next weekend.

UMass will go with the two-mile relay team and two runners, one middle-distance and one long. Last season the two mile relay team was sixth and the coach hopes to duplicate, or better, that accomplishment.

"Villanova's two-mile relay has done a 7:25, so you can see wht we are up against," O'Briend noted. "Villanova, Penn State, and George Mason will contend for the team title, I hope we can score a few points."

Women are seventh

Mile relay record paces UMass in New Englands

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's track team, behind a record-setting mile relay team, took seventh in the New England championships at Boston College over the weekend.

The Minutewomen set a meet and school record in the relay, coming from second place behind a blazing 56.9 quarter mile by Barbara Cullinan in the third leg.

"They ran a great race, especially Barbara," coach Kalekeni Banda said. "It was great to set a record and I think we have a shot at doing well in the Easterns (next weekend at Yale)."

The record-setters were Leah Loftis, Sue Goldstein, Cullinan and Kayla Morrison. They had a 3:52.79.

In the 55 meter dash, UMass took third through fifth, led by Bridgette Booker in 7.21, a tenth off the school record. Morrison had a 7.31 and Cari Fleischman a 7.33.

In the long jump, Fleischman set a school record with a 17-7 leap. Cullinan was second in the 400 at 57.17. Loftis took third in the 600 with a 1:26.16 and freshman Sarah Kitchell was sixth in the 1,000 at 2:47.13.

The University of Connecticut won the title with 98 points, Boston University was second with 67, a surprising UMass-Boston was third at 58, Boston College took fourth with 56, Northeastern followed with 47 before Vermont at 40½, just ahead of UMass' 39.

"Considering Bridgette had the 48-hour flu, she ran very well," Banda said. "It was a good effort to make seventh because we are basically a young team."

"We were eighth last season, so the improvement is there," Banda noted. "I think we look strong for the outdoor season."

In the Easterns, Banda said he would enter the relay team, and 1,000 yarder Maureen O'Reilly.

Feinberg rules the NE waves

Senior wins 200 freestyle, women finish eighth

By NANCY A. BUKAR
Collegian Staff

Senior freestyler Liz Feinberg capped off a tremendous career with a New England title in the 200-yard freestyle to pace the University of Massachusetts to an eighth place finish in the women's swimming championships at Springfield College.

Feinberg, who was undefeated in individual competition this season, set a school record with a 1:56.25 in the 200-yard freestyle.

"She really smoked the field, she swam an excellent race," coach Bob Newcomb said. "This was a great year for Liz."

She was second in the 100-yard freestyle with a 53.78, just behind Sue Sullivan of Boston College (53.80). In the 50-yard freestyle, Feinberg was fourth in another close race. She had a 25.43 with only tenths separating her from first. The 500-yard free saw Feinberg get a tenth with a 5:20.17.

Other bright spots for UMass included freshman Margaret Cameron with a pair of 13th places. She swam a 1:13.32 100-yard breaststroke and a 2:38.88 200-yard breaststroke.

Another freshman, Maura Skelley, was 15th in the 400-yard individual medley with a 5:01.31. Junior Sue Freitas was 16th in the 200-yard butterfly at 2:24.78.

The 200-yard freestyle relay team of Lori McCluskey, Feinberg, Skelley and Freitas took fifth at 1:43.62. Cameron, McCluskey, Skelley and Feinberg, in a different order this time, were fourth in the 400-yard free relay with a 3:46.90, four seconds better than their previous best.

"We had a little sickness that may have kept us from going higher, but on the whole we finished about where I expected," Newcomb said. "I'm pleased with our effort, Liz was super as always and the freshman placing was a good sign for the future."

Boston College won the meet handily with 855 points. Maine was second with 675. New Hampshire, Springfield, Northeastern, Smith and Vermont followed before UMass' 192 points.

"BC is a strong program, they had swimmers in every final, sometimes five or six in the scoring heats, they're unstoppable," Newcomb said.

Minutemen whip BU for indoor soccer title, stymie UConn (again) in semis

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team is proving just as successful indoors as out.

The Minutemen won four of five games, including a victory over rival University of Connecticut, to win the Plymouth State tournament this past weekend.

UMass, which posted a winning season in the fall after a series of down years, defeated New Hampshire and the host school, 4-1 and 2-1 respectively, to advance to the semifinals.

There, they defeated the Huskies, who also lost to UM in the fall, 3-2 in the second sudden death overtime on a Paul Giordano goal.

"They're (UConn) probably pretty upset, that's two wins for us," UMass assistant coach Pat Bauman said. "It was the first time we won this tournament and it shows how we're progressing."

Mike Bellino and Andy Bing also scored against UConn. Don Donahue made ten saves in goal. The Minutemen were ahead 2-1 before the Huskies tied it late in regulation.

Giordano, Serafino, and Bing (twice) scored in the final as Donahue registered five saves. UMass cruised to the title after taking a 3-0 lead.

The Minutemen will also play in the UConn, Rutgers, and Hartwick tournaments this spring.

Grad students Boston bound with signatures

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

The graduate student senate's opposition to the proposed reconstruction of the Universal Resource Fee will come to a head today when students present 1,065 signatures to the Board of Trustees in Boston.

The proposed fee is a consolidated $261 yearly charge that partly repays debt service on money borrowed to construct and renovate buildings on campus including the dining commons, residence halls and other campus buildings. If the proposal is passed, graduate students would end up paying an additional $159 for buildings they do not use.

"We collected 1,065 signatures from students to give to (University of Massachusetts President David C.) Knapp and the trustees to say that we are opposed to the increase," Sanjiv Dugal, senate president said. "We timed the rally on Monday to make an impact on the trustees."

Dugal said six graduate students, including himself, will each give a speech at the meeting on how they feel about the fee and its effects on graduate students.

Dugal said potential graduate students look at schools in terms of stipends and living costs because "they are unable to go out and work as waiters or waitresses because of their studies." Thus, the increase in the fee would deter graduate students from choosing UMass.

"Our main concern is not purely selfish," he said. "The quality of research of graduate students will go down."

"The assistantships we offer are one of the lowest in the country," he said. "It will not attract the best graduate students."

Dugal said some faculty members have expressed concern about the feel and agreed that the increase will "affect applicants, especially in the School of Engineering."

Dugal explained that the graduate engineer students already pay a $200 lab fee and the increase would add insult to injury.

Since graduate students teach more than 16,000 students in labs and discussion sections the "whole quality of undergraduate education will go down," if the best students are not recruited, Dugal added.

Jim Keller, Student Government Association co-President and trustee member said he hopes the trustees will "recognize that there are a lot of inequities" in the proposed feel.

"What students have to do is show that the inequities can be overcome," Keller said. "Their (the administration) goals can be met under a modified proposal."

Old info booths put to new use

Students to monitor parking

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

Students began to work yesterday in parking lot information booths in place of campus security guards, who now have more time to patrol the campus, said Robert Joyce, chief of University of Massachusetts police.

The UMass parking office began stationing the five booths with students to monitor cars, check parking stickers and give information to visitors. The booths are located at entrances of centrally-located parking lots, but have not been used for two years, James Lee, parking coordinator, said.

"Parking is scarce," Lee said. "Every space becomes precious when there's a shortage."

Lee said the students report parking problems such as illegally parked cars to campus police.

"It makes sense for a place as big as this with so many ways to get in and out, for us to take care of visitors in terms of parking," Joyce said.

Lee said 24 students were hired by the parking office and trained by the Department of Public Safety. The students are only on duty during the weekdays to give out maps and directions to visitors. Mostly on the weekends, however, visitors need information, he said.

Lee said a drive-in information booth has been discussed for over eight years, but no definite plans have been made to build one in the near future.

"The students in the information booths help fill an immediate need until a long-range solution is found," Lee said. The permanent information booth would be located either at Haigis Mall, by Whitmore Administration Building or by Southwest residential area.

'84 Olympians recall training

Crew gold medalists say athletes life is hard

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

Holly Metcalf, a member of the Olympic gold medal women's crew team, was denied a spot on the national team as an undergraduate when one judge never heard of Mt. Holyoke College and turned her away.

Metcalf, who now works at Mt. Holyoke as coach of the crew team, spoke last night at Amherst College as part of the Woman-speak program with teammate Kathy Keeler, about the problems of coming from a small school and training for the Olympics.

Keeler, who now coaches the crew team at Smith College, said training was "a long struggle and a lot of work. I'd been trying to make the team since '79. It takes about ten years of rowing to be competitive." Keeler said that while attending Wesleyan College she had to wake up every day at 6 a.m. and train for four hours a day. "After college it's even harder because you have to go to work and then practice after when you really are too tired to."

Senate set to vote on SCERA position

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

The undergraduate student senate will vote tonight whether to continue funding a professional position in the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

The senate Budgets Committee brought the SCERA anti-oppression coordinator position under review because it remains vacant.

The senate Coordinating Committee voted 6 to 1 Friday to recommend keeping the $13,000 per year position, while on Feb. 14 Budgets Committee voted to recommend its elimination.

The position has been vacant since August 1984, SCERA Director Debbie Piltch said yesterday. The center formed a search committee, which was hindered by "problems in the hiring process," Piltch said.

"None of the candidates met all of the qualifications," she said.

A second search committee, with a new job description was formed over intersession and is nearly finished with the search, Piltch said. Until the position is filled, other SCERA members work overtime to "fill in the gaps."

"We're not working up to par, as if the position were filled," she said. The senate should keep the position because it is the "only position the SGA has designated for that purpose (uniting anti-oppression work across campus)."

"It's the only consultant to the SGA," Piltch said.

"At this time we really don't have the money for it," Jordan Rosner, assistant to the budgets chair, said Sunday. "It looks good for the student government to cut itself before cutting RSOs (registered student organizations)."

The senate will have about 25 percent less money to allocate next year, according to the budget report issued Feb. 19.

Senate treasurer John Mooradian said the Coordinating Committee voted to keep the position because the Student Government Association constitution requires the senate to combat oppression.

"There was a prevalent feeling on the committee that this (position) was dictated by the constitution," he said.

"The senate is going to have to prioritize what groups get cut," Mooradian said.

Rosner said the senate can fulfill its constitutional duties through funding of RSOs. Established student groups like the People's Gay Alliance and Hillel already work against oppression, he said.

Duffey may address SGA

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey may address the Undergraduate Student Senate tonight.

Duffey's secretary, Lillian LaMountain, said Duffey will attend a board of trustees meeting in Boston at 2 p.m. today. If the meeting lasts until 5 or 6 p.m., she said, he will be unable to return to UMass in time for the senate meeting.

Duffey had accepted the senate's invitation to speak before the trustee meeting which was rescheduled from Feb. 6, when it was postponed due to the weather.

It is not clear whether Duffey has a prepared speech, or what he will speak about. The senate Coordinating Committee has selected seven questions solicited from senators to ask Duffey, treasurer John Mooradian said.

Metcalf said that Mt. Holyoke was not as supportive as it could have been. Athletics are played down at Mt. Holyoke. Some professors were helpful, but a lot weren't.

"For me it was a dilemma between studying and seeing how far I could take my training, seeing what the sport was about at a high level," Metcalf said.

Metcalf said the writing and music she was studying became a lot better as a result of her athletic training. "Rowing is really all about rhythm, just like music," she said.

Both Metcalf and Keeler emphasized that the Olympics were very different from any other competition because the significance of the games added more pressure. "It was the first time a women's crew team was favored to win a gold medal," Metcalf said.

"The attention from the press was really incredible, hard to believe. Everyone wanted to interview us. The race had a lot of emotional intensity because there were a lot of insiders, people who knew a lot about crew, and a lot of family members," Keeler said.

"It was like racing your first race all over again. We were very nervous, but we trusted each other totally. If that trust wasn't there, we might have panicked when we got a little behind. But we took it as hard and high as we had to go to win," Keeler added.

Metcalf said the most important things needed to succeed in crew are strength, technique and endurance. Training consists mainly of working out on rowing machines eleven times a week.

Keeler said she has no plans to enter the 1988 Olympics because "it's hard to continue training for another four years at that level of intensity." Metcalf said she plans to continue in a sport called sculling, which involves an individual rower.

Nun defies image of church women

By BETH PASTINO
Collegian Correspondent

The image of nuns dressed in long black habits covering their bodies from head to toe is perpetuated in stereotyped movie portrayals and childhood memories of Sunday mass and religious education once a week. When speaking with Sister Mildred Marengo of the Newman Center at the University of Massachusetts however, one discovers that within the strict confines of patriarchal Catholicism, Sister Millie is a very modern woman.

"Women (in the church) are definitely looked upon as inferior," Sr. Millie said. This "power struggle" in the hierarchy of the church is not always recognized or admitted to and it is "one of the biggest barriers to equal ministry" in the church, she said.

With the decreasing number of men entering seminaries, the church has turned to nuns to supplement the educational and ministerial needs of the congregation. According to Sr. Millie, there are 118,000 nuns in the United States, 45 percent of whom work outside church in areas such as marriage and pastoral counseling. These are jobs previously filled by priests. Sr. Millie said it is the inevitable increase of nuns filling these jobs that will make it eventually possible for "women to work as peers with clergy."

Women on Campus

Despite these limitations, Sr. Millie has taken on more responsibilities since coming to the Newman Center from Notre Dame three years ago. She said she is aware that some women, particularly college students, are "very conscious and angry with the negation of rights, but feels anger is not a solution to the problem of sexism in the church.

Sr. Millie also acknowledges the widespread "ignoring" of the church's official position on birth control and abortion.

"In days past, especially before Vatican II, there was tension between the person and a God who was feared," said Sr. Millie. "Today, there is a struggle to know a loving God."

Sr. Millie sees her role at the Newman Center as one of "providing a woman's presence on a staff of three men," and being available to offer a "woman's perspective" in the counseling of issues troubling to young women.

"There is a growing effort on the part of the University to move toward equality for women," Sr. Millie said, but added, "As in all segments of society, however, there is a long way to go."

HRTA Career Day attracts hungry employers

By RONDA APPLEBAUM
and BRIAN McALARNEY Collegian Correspondents

Burger King and Howard Johnson's representatives came to the University of Massachusetts yesterday, not to talk hamburgers but to participate in the 10th annual Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration Career Day Conference in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Representatives from Holiday Inn, Sheraton and Hyatt hotels were also at Career Day to recruit students and offer information about their companies. The HRTA department supplied pamphlets and set up booths with video displays of more than 30 companies.

"We find out what they can offer us and the companies find out what we can offer them," Paul McNeil, a senior HRTA major said.

"It is a help session for future employers," added Fred Findler, a senior HRTA major and one of the many students who volunteered to organize the event. "Companies have a better feel for who's out there and what students are looking for."

"The students here as a group are the best we've seen this year," Jim Ladota from Saga Corporation said. "The UMass program is one of the top five in the country for us."

There is "tremendous competition" among the companies to employ the graduates, HRTA department Head Stevenson Fletcher said.

One company offered training programs to 15 of the 26 applicants, he said.

"They've found the best crop at UMass," he added.

Adam Metsch, corporate trainee at Hyatt Hotels and a 1984 graduate of UMass, said that he is recruiting students for Hyatt's Corporate Management Training Program. He said students who are accepted into the program are seen as the future of Hyatt.

Peter Manning, faculty adviser of the Career Day said approximately 35 companies will be coming to interview UMass students in the spring.

Leftist author speaks out on women and poverty

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Americans must become increasingly aware of how sexist economic policies cause increasing poverty among women, according to Barbara Ehrenreich who spoke to a crowd of 200 people last night at Smith College.

Ehrenreich, author and co-chair woman of the Democratic Socialists of America, who gave the annual Florence Simms Lecture on "The Feminization of Poverty and The Politics of the 80's," said Americans must view public policy with the same standards they apply to their own lives.

"Our vision of change at this time in this country has to go beyond any one issue. We are going to have to see the connection between domestic racism and the Reagan administration's support for repressive nations. We are going to have to draw the relation between sexism and the (administration's) attempted denial of women's rights in this country," she said.

Noting that 90 percent of those on welfare are single women supporting children, Ehrenreich said poverty is being "feminized" by current policy that places more women and children on the welfare roles, because of the sexist bias built into the modern economy.

"There is an ever apparent assumption that men should be paid enough to support a family. The negative correlary to that is that we also assume that a woman doesn't even need to learn enough to support herself. This is based on a stronger assumption that every family has a male breadwinner," she said.

"The jobs available to women and minorities do not pay enough to lift anyone out of poverty," Ehrenreich said. Jobs traditionally defined as "women's work" like waitressing, light assembly line work or clerical or computer work done at home are increasingly available, but pay less than the average job a man may have.

Ehrenreich also said that the "work-at-home" trend is increasingly attractive to big businesses because women have no chance of organizing for higher pay or better conditions because they never meet one another and are separate from the entire company process in their home jobs.

Investment in SCERA pays big dividends

We take issue with Collegian columnist and UMass Republican Club President Stephen Erickson's description of SCERA as a "Pork Barrel" and "Boondoggle" group.

SCERA, in this past year alone, helped save the UMass undergraduate student body in excess of $1.5 million in tuition costs. SCERA, in conjunction with the Public Policy Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate published a research report on the effects of a 15 percent to 7½ percent for the 1984/85 academic year; thus saving each student over $80. This is a total savings of $1,520,000 for the entire UMass undergraduate student body. If the "average" student has never heard of SCERA, she/he certainly should have; SCERA has transferred part of an $88,000 investment (total budget for FY '85) into a $1.5 million savings on aggregate tuition costs.

If the "average" student has never heard of SCERA then all she/he has to do is ask the University administration. SCERA discovered that our Board of Trustees has violated its own divestment by-law by investing in six companies which are operating in South Africa. SCERA successfully encouraged UMass Treasurer Brand to divest from three of these companies and are presently in negotiations regarding the other three companies. SCERA has saved UMass students the indignity of supporting the fascist South African state.

SCERA, in addition, has been the primary student group responsible for numerous services and programs which our name has not been identified with such as the University's sexual and racial harrassment grievance procedures, Martin Luther King Week, International Women's Event, Holocaust Memorial Week, and Art Against Apartheid. The existence of SCERA is essential if programs are services that promote student rights such as those listed above are to continue.

SCERA's budget for FY '86 is not $102,000 as Mr. Erickson states. In fact our FY '86 budget is yet to be determined. SCERA is well aware that the SGA is experiencing a fiscal crisis and that every RSO including SCERA will have to take severe budget cuts. SCERA does not advocate the elimination of funding for any RSO group; nor do we appreciate Erickson's objective of pitting RSO groups against one another. The pending issue at this Wednesday night's senate meeting is not which RSO groups should be funded. The issue is if the coordinator of anti-oppression work at SCERA is a necessary position, and should RSO groups in conjunction with their governing boards be able to determine their priorities, their needs, and what aspects of their budgets should be cut if necessary.

Next time Erickson writes an editorial he should tell all the facts, not just choose those which suit his interests and his needs.

Some advice for a columnist: 'get a grip'

In response to Rusty Denton's mindless column in Thursday's Collegian concerning the Greek area fraternities on UMass campus:

Denton stated "...Sororities at UMass are reasonable." Well, aren't you kind, Denton. He went on to also say "...there are a few courteous, mature fraternities, but most of them are the pits." Did you study Emily Post, Denton? In short, Denton put down our Greek system; an insult directed towards a few frats on campus is taken as an insult to all Greeks.

I am capable of writing a very eloquent letter, however, I have just a few tips for you and I'll make my statements brief:

Delivering pizzas is an honest job, Denton, but get a real one, anyway.

If you have a nasal problem when you are in a frat try a new deodorant, I recommend Dry Idea.

You are disturbed when you see a woman and a man displaying affection? Try Amherst Single's, you are showing signs of sexual frustration.

You find Playboy centerfolds offensive on fraternity walls? Well, it's a lot healthier than having pictures of nude men on their walls. Or didn't that occur to you?

Lastly, you, yes I do mean you Denton, are cordially invited to attend open rush next fall. Oh, you are graduating? Bummer.

Denton, my favorite phrase I donate to you: "get a grip," and find another subject to foam at the mouth about. The University could stand one less student like you, let alone the Greek area. See Denton? I didn't use whitewash, but I've clearly indicated who the real loser is.

Angela Forster
Chi Omega Sorority

Doesn't anyone care?

Rita Murphy

It had the makings of a Hollywood drama — a university dormitory, and a series of "suspicious" fires. Fires which, in the words of Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, held all of UMass "hostage."

What went on in Crampton House during the fall semester of 1983 is difficult to imagine. Seventeen fires brought media coverage from major newspapers and television stations across the country.

Yvette Henry was a senior chemistry major and a resident assistant in Crampton at the time of the fires. She was arrested on Dec. 2, 1983 and charged with one count of arson.

Yvette Henry is also black.

Two weeks ago, the Collegian printed excerpts from a special report done by the Committee on the Status of Minorities. That body was asked by the Rules Committee of the faculty senate to answer a series of questions about Henry's detainment and subsequent arrest by the police and treatments of her by UMass administrators and others involved in the case. The committee asked various individuals who were "present and involved" on the night of Henry's arrest to come before them and help piece together what happened that Friday night.

Based on the information obtained by the six who chose to speak to the group, the committee found that by detaining Henry for several hours without arresting her and without an attorney present despite her repeated requests for one, was a violation of her civil rights. The group also found that Henry was treated more harshly than non-minority students arrested and in some instances even convicted of "much worse crimes." It was also found that the dean of students office displayed insensivity in the case and as a result of the publicity surrounding the case, recruitment of miniorities may suffer.

That report has not yet been made public. Few people have it, and it seems, few people could give a damn about getting it.

The faculty senate could care less. At their last meeting, not one senator demanded that the rules committee release be made public so that anyone, faculty, students, lawyers, the media, could read it and perhaps learn from it.

What could be learned from it?

The most important lesson would be that what happened to Yvette Henry must never be allowed to happen again to any student. One of the reasons for the report in the first place was to help formulate a mechanism to insure that in times of duress, the University will act in a responsible and civil manner to those involved, including students.

That didn't happen in the Yvette Henry case as the report makes perfectly clear. But no one seems to care. Two weeks have gone by since parts of that report were made public, but there has been no public demand for the report, no outrage that a students' civil rights were, in the opinion of one committee, violated.

It seems the Collegian is the only group publicly displaying dismay at the behavior of the administration and faculty senate in not releasing a report that is highly critical of the University administration.

David Booth, chairman of the rules committee said the group never meant to "supress" the report. But still, few people have access to it. The Collegian is the only newspaper that obtained a copy. Booth also asked a Collegian reporter why the newspaper is making such a big deal out of the report. He asked the reporter, "Is your editor black?"

One of the reasons for the report in the first place was to help formulate a mechanism to insure that in times of duress, the University will act in a responsible and civil manner to those involved, including students. That didn't happen in the Yvette Henry case.

What that has to do with anything escapes me. Maybe Booth can explain why it is he thinks only blacks are concerned with racism. And then maybe he can explain why his committee is hiding the report from the public. We should expect any group representing the University to be open and public about an event of such significance. All students, black, white hispanic, Asian, (all people for that matter) should have the right to know what their administration did or didn't do in the Henry case. If that administration is guilty of racism, then all of us should demand an explanation and should demand to know all the facts involved.

That's the way it is should be, but no one seems to care that that isn't happening. Faculty don't and students don't. Instead of displaying outrage at the failure to release the report, all the Undergraduate Senate did last week was nothing, as usual. People just seem to have forgotten about Yvette Henry, or want to forget. People seem to just not care. It's too bad it has to be that way.

Not exactly 'intellectually stimulating' fare

The speech given in the Campus Center Monday night by Soviet dissident Yuri Tuvim was extremely disappointing and it is a shame that the College Republicans could not spend student money on a more enlightening speaker. While most of us would agree that there are some significant problems with the Soviet system, Tuvim gave us absolutely no analysis of why these problems exist. Tuvim's entire argument centers around the circular logic that the Soviets are bad because they are totalitarian, and that they are totalitarian because they are bad. This is an intellectual discussion?

I was also disappointed with Tuvim's immature attitude in dealing with several questions from the audience. Beginning an answer by telling someone that you don't like the length of their hair makes one wonder whether the rest of your answers have any validity. I suggest to the Republicans that they spend our student fees on bringing speakers to campus that will have something intellectually stimulating to say, not more of the simplistic rhetoric that Tuvim gave us.

BIBLIOFILE
BY BRADFORD VERTER

BIBLIOFILE is a new column surveying recent books and bibliophilic events. It will appear on alternate Tuesdays. Fan mail c/o Collegian.

With the first run of midterm exams coming up, industrious students will be seeking new sources of helpful review material. There is a new book out which such students should avoid at all costs: Science Made Stupid by Tom Weller (Houghton Mifflin, $6.95 paper).

Science Made Stupid is subtitled How to Discomprehend the World Around Us, and for good reason. The book consists of mirthful pseudoscientific misinformation: alternate explanations of astronomy, relativity, dinosaurs, and the like, designed to confuse and entertain. Unfortunately, most of the jokes are bathroom-wall humor and many of the illustrations are sexist. Thus the book does not come off as well as it should, despite its great potential.

A much better book in a similar vien is From Beowulf to Virginia Woolf by Robert Manson Myers (University of Illinois Press). Wielding clever quips, penurious puns and a mixed bag of metaphors, Myers traverses the bumpy road from Eng 201 to 202, destroying all that is held sac-read by professors.

From Beowulf to Virginia Woolf, "An Astounding and Wholly Unauthorized History of English Literature," is consistantly witty and intelligent, and above all, convincing: where were Wordsworth and Coleridge published if not in Lyrical Ballast? It is a shame that Myers limited himself to English literature and was unable to discuss Russian works such as Enema Karenina by Warren Piece.

A new short story writer with a great deal of style is Randall Silvis, author of The Luckiest Man in the World (University of Pittsburgh Press). Silvis won the 1984 Dure Heinz Literature Prize for his short fiction, and understandably so. His stories are powerful and moving, if often a bit ponderous. Particularly so is his story "Trash Man" which deals with a guilt-ridden garbage collector.

I'd like to see more work by Silvis, but somehow I doubt I will: the jacket blurb was more intersted in relating the history of the Drue Heinz Literature Prize than telling us anything about the individual author.

UMass seeded sixth

St. Joe's, Penn State favored in Atlantic 10 women's tournament

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

For enthusiasts of Atlantic 10 women's basketball, Philadelphia is the only place to be during the first week in March as the Conference Championship gets underway this weekend at St. Joseph's University.

With the regular season concluded, all that remains is the final push toward the title that awards the winner with an NCAA National Championship Tournament Berth. Coaches develop ulcers, players lose sleep, and after all is said and done, speculation will still persist. The season boils down to the final weekend, the winner takes all.

"None of what has occurred during the season matters anymore," University of Massachusetts head coach Barbara Stevens said. "This is where it all counts, this is everybody's last hurrah and this is where everyone must play their heart out."

The Atlantic 10 is a balanced, nine-team conference, respected around the country for its quality play and diverse scheduling of non-conference opponents. Featuring such well rounded membership, the single elimination tournament should be exciting. Upsets are sometimes a factor, and this year may be no different.

But as in every sporting event there must be a favorite, and this year St. Joseph's University appears to be the team to beat. The tournament host, the Hawks (23-3 and 7-1 in the conference) pounded the Minutewomen, 75-48 earlier this season at a time Stevens described as gloomy.

"St. Joseph's has been playing very good ball," Stevens said. "They beat Penn State (presently nationally ranked in the Top Ten) earlier at home, and having the home court advantage once again, I would expect them to be one of the favorites."

Penn State certainly can make a strong argument as the team to beat. The 24-3 Nitt Lions, seeking their third consecutive championship, returns all of five of its starters from last year's NCAA East Regional Finalists.

"Penn State is probably the most well-rounded and best coached team in the conference," Stevens said. "They take games one at a time. I think they are too good to allow themselves to look past other ballclubs. They are definitely one of the favorites."

Temple and Rutgers Universities (17-8 and 19-8 respectively) do battle in the opening round at 8:30 p.m. The two are finishing successful campaigns with both flirting with national rankings throughout much of the year. However, Temple appears on the rise while Rutgers on the decline.

"Temple is super talented with lots of height and quickness," Stevens said. "If there were to be a darkhorse favorite in the tournament, it would have to be them.

"Rutgers seems to be a little disappointed with their season. They have the tallest team in the conference but I think they might be a bit weak in the backcourt," the coach noted.

Along with West Virginia, narrow 63-60 winners over UMass last week, the conference's top five squads appear to be the paper favorites while the Minutewomen, 13-14, look to be the best of the rest.

"I think the rest of us will be playing on heart and desire," Stevens said. "But none of what has occurred during the season counts anymore."

anymore."

UMass guard Juanita Matthews (20) drives against Duquesne in Springfield on Saturday. The Minutewomen face West Virginia in the Atlantic 10 tournament on Friday in Philadelphia.

The tournament officially begins on Thursday as 8th seeded Duquesne, 75-66 losers to UMass last Saturday in Springfield) takes on 9th seeded George Washington with the winner advancing into the quarter-finals to play top ranked St. Joseph's, Friday at 6 p.m.

Other quarter-final games feature third seeded West Virginia against the sixth-seeded Minutewomen at 1 p.m.; 2nd seeded Penn State taking on 7th seeded Rhode Island at 3 p.m.

The tournament continues Saturday with each of the semi-final games at 1 and 3 p.m. The conference championship follows on Sunday afternoon.

Minutemen face crucial road games this week

Need split for Atlantic 10 tourney bye

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It's actually pretty simple, if the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team can win one of its two games this week, it will have one less game to play in the Atlantic 10 tournament.

The Minutemen, at 8-8 in the league, are in a three way tie for fourth with Rutgers and George Washington. They face Rutgers in New Jersey on Thursday night and Duquense (6-10) in Pittsburgh on Saturday.

The top six teams in the league get a first-round bye in the league tourney (March 6-9 at Rutgers) and with a single victory, UMass will have that day of rest.

But it won't be easy. The Minutemen defeated Rutgers 83-72 back in January and the Knights, behind high-scoring John Battle, want both position in the standing and revenge. the Dukes, 59-53 winners over UMass, must beat George Washington at home and UMass to get a bye. The colonials face West Virginia in their last game. Rutgers has last place Rhode Island.

You can't assume anything, but let's say that Duquense will lose to George Washington, and the Colonials will in turn drop their last game to West Virginia. They will finish at 9-9. Rutgers should beat URI and UMass should win one of its two. A Duke loss to GW puts UMass in the second-round, as does any UMass win. Final pairings, should the teams end tied, will be determined by head-to-head competition. UMass has split with GW and has at least a split with Rutgers. After that, a probably even more complicated system is employed.

"It's a mess, but I know this, if we win a game we get the second round and I don't care who we play there, as long as we play," coach Ron Gerlufsen said yesterday.

And that thought, despite the many possibilities, says it all.

Sophomore point guard Carl Smith, with 322 career assists, is third on the all-time UMass list behind Joe DeSarcina (431) and Alex Eldrige (518). Both marks are approachable for the 5-11 guard.

IN league statistics, senior co-captain Horace Neysmith is second in rebounding with 9.0 a game. Bobby Braun is third with 8.6.

Mass Consumption, Phi-Sig and Balls lead pack in Intramural hockey league

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The 1985 Spring Intramural ice hockey season is in full swing with a trio of teams leading the nine-squad field.

Phi-Sig, at 4-0-1, has presented a serious challenge to defending champions Mass Consumption, 3-0-1. The two undefeated teams lead The Balls (3-1-0) by only one game in a tight pack at the top.

Other challengers for the title include Aces High, Stousso, and Shoot-To-Kill. All three will be fighting for one of the six playoff spots open.

The playoffs are slated to commence just before Spring Break.

Mass Consumption appears to be stronger than past season, an unfortunate fact for the other teams as they are the defending titlists.

The team is led by high-scoring Mike Matthews and Ken Plizka. Defensive stoppers Bob Gomez aqnd team Captain Paul D'Entremont have also proven to be capable scorers, dangerous from the points.

Speedy Brad Terco is another ingredient that the Consumption crew hopes adds up to another title.

"We're hoping to keep up our present pace," Gomez said last week. "Phi-Sig is playing good hockey right now and getting the championships again will be a definite challenge."

In other Intramural news, the basketball and gymnastics seasons have been progressing and the playoffs and final meets are scheduled soon. More on those championships closer to the time.

Nassau tailback UMass bound?

The Nassau pipeline may be sending another football player to the University of Massachusetts.

The Long Island community college that gave the Minutemen wide receiver/defensive back Lonny Brock and linebacker/fullback AlNeri may also send its tailback.

Assistant coach Steve Telander said that the running back, "would be the fastest player on the team," and that only official acceptance of his application is needed to enroll him at UMass.

A George Barnwell-type of runner, with better size, his speed would be about 4.5 in the 40-yard dash is indeed he is UM's fastest player.

He would be the 25th recruit to be signed by coach Bob Stull and the fourth junior college/prep school transfer in the recruiting class, already considered UMass' finest in some years.

THE SPECIAL REPORT on the Yvette Henry arson case

Editor's Note: In December of 1983, Crampton resident assistant Yvette Henry was charged with setting one of a series of fires that occurred in her dormitory that fall. Though the charge was later dropped, in the meantime she was suspended from school, fired from her job, barred from campus and later permitted to attend classes only in the presence of an escort. She has since filed lawsuits totaling $13 million charging the University and law enforcement officials with violations of her rights.

The following text, a full reprint of a special report on the Yvette Henry case authored by the faculty senate Committee on the Status of Minorities, was presented to the senate Rules Committee last May and was recently obtained by the Collegian. Its intent was to investigate what really happened on campus that fall and to recommend sanctions to ensure that any possible rights infringements do not occur again.

The report has not been edited for length, style or structure other than dividing it into more paragraphs to make it easily readable in print. Appendizes have not been included and the reader should be aware that the interviews on which the report is based were not conducted under oath.

I. Introduction

The Committee on the Status of Minorities received a memorandum dated December 19, 1983 from Robert Jones, Secretary of the Faculty Senate, asking the committee to address the subject of "Concerns arising out of the arrest of Ms. Yvette Henry". We were presented with five questions:

1) Were Ms. Henry's civil rights violated or infringed?

2) Did the treatment accorded her differ from that accorded non-minority students?

3) In the Committee's examination did the Dean of Students Office behave properly with respect to Ms. Henry?

4) Did the behavior of the Dean of Students Office with respect to Ms. Henry differ from its behavior toward non-minority students?

5) How and to what extent will the treatment of Ms. Henry affect the University's efforts to recruit minority students and bring them to the Amherst Campus?

Since the request had originated from a discussion of the Rules Committee, this committee asked Chester Davis, the chairperson of the Rules Committee, to meet with us to clarify the request and to give us some background on the case. He met with the committee on February 7. The minutes of that meeting (along with minutes of meetings with other guests) are included in the appendix. Professor Davis explained that the Rules Committee and the Senate attempt to respond to problems and issues by using the existing structures of the Senate. Since the case involves a black woman, it was considered appropriate that this committee be involved in looking into it.

The initial discussion of the case focused on several issues which guided our subsequent investigation. First, the committee had many questions about the "psychological profile", which we were told was the basis of the arrest. Second, we attempted to clarify our ability to answer the questions in the Senate request. In particular we were concerned about our ability to make a judgment on the issue of civil rights.

Third, the committee had many questions about the apparent breakdown of the normal process of running the Student senate funds position in controversy

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted last night to continue funding a professional position in the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

The senate voted 26 to 42 against a resolution cutting funding for the SCERA anti-oppression coordinator, a position unfilled since August 1984. The motion was recommended by the senate Budgets Committee, which automatically reviews all vacant professional positions.

"We all realized we're going to take severe budget cuts," SCERA Director Debbie Piltch said. "We're willing to absorb the cost of this position through our budget."

Many senators spoke out against continuing the position because of the senate's tight budget.

"Basically, if we fund all the professional positions we have and also try to fund ourselves, we fall short," Jordan Rosner, senator from John Adams House, said. "The budget committee has suspended all hearings, why have hearings if we have no money to give out?"

The senate will have about 25 percent less funds to allocate next year, according to a budget committee report presented to the senate Feb. 13.

"The budgets committee has been made out to be a real villian," Robert Griffin, Grayson senator, said. "Being fiscally responsible means cuts. Last time we ran into budget trouble, we lost control of the Student Activities Office."

"We're looking at a position where we can fund senate positions and WMUA and that's it," he said.

David D. Moore, Third World Caucus senator, read a prepared statement he said reflected the majority of the caucus' stand on the issue.

"We denounce the motives and actions of the Budget Committee in motion to eliminate the SCERA anti-oppression position," he said. "We too recognize the impending economic bedgutary restraints that face the SAFF...we call upon you to seek out input of your constituencies."

In other business, the senate voted unanimously to recommend the Faculty Senate pass the current draft of the Academic Grievance Procedure, submitted by the Academic Affairs Committee.

Nuclear war issue largest: McGovern

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON -- Former Democratic presidential candidate George McGovern spoke at Smith College last night and said he "regards nuclear war as a transcendental issue before the American public."

In an address entitled, "Hope in The Nuclear Age," McGovern said that the foundation of that hope is the "willingness of the leaders of the Soviet Union and United States to face the reality" of the destructive capability of nuclear weapons.

McGovern, former senator from South Dakota, also told the capacity audience he believes hope for salvation from nuclear destruction of the world lies in the American and

Woman freed of oil charges

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP)—American businesswoman Marie Lee McBroom was acquitted yesterday of six charges of illegally exporting oil from Nigeria—offenses that could have resulted in the death penalty.

She was freed after the acquittal and went to the U.S. Embassy, where she telephoned her daughter in New York City.

Dana McBroom Manno said her mother "sounds great. She sounds in very good spirit."

Embassy officials would not let reporters talk with McBroom. Charge d'Affaires Donald Gelber told The Associated Press: "She's so excited she doesn't want to talk to anyone right now."

McBroom, 59, of Jersey City, N.J., went on trial Dec. 10 in the Lagos Special Military Tribunal before Judge Adebayo Desalu.

Salem wants students out

SALEM (AP) - School Superintendent Henry J. O'Donnell said yesterday he will ask the School Committee to begin expulsion proceedings against 10 Salem High School students charged in last week's $300,000 vandalism spree at the school.

Meanwhile, a second private security guard who was on duty the night of the destruction was barred from further duty at the school.

O'Donnell said he received the police report on the incident from Police Chief Robert St. Pierre on Tuesday, and, "based on what the chief has said and confidential information, I'm making the recommendation that we start expulsion proceedings."

If the School Committee agrees, the students could be expelled within two weeks after hearings, O'Donnell said.

The group of Salem teens allegedly broke into the high school and vandalized the media center and 70 classrooms on three floors, smashing equipment and 243 windows in a six-hour spree, then left undetected by the two security guards.

O'Donnell and St. Pierre, along with high school Principle Edward A. Curtin, several students and other law enforcement officials, have been called on to help Essex County District Attorney Kevin Burke decide on a recommended sentence for students found guilty or delinquent in the case, Burke said Tuesday.

The 10 Salem High students have been charged with breaking and entering in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony, and malicious destruction of public property.

Another Salem youth arraigned on the same charges last week is a student at North Shore Regional Vocational School in Beverly, and the 12th suspect has been charged with contributing to the delinquency of minors by buying beer for the youths.

If found guilty, the maximum sentence for the five juvenile suspects would be detention in a Department of Youth Services facility, Burke said. For the six adult suspects, the maximum sentence for the breaking and entering charge would be 10 years in a state prison, and for the malicious damage charge, one year in prison, Burke said.

Hijackers quit after 5 hours

VIENNA, Austria (AP)—Two Syrians being deported from West Germany yesterday hijacked a Lufthansa airliner carrying 43 people on a flight from Frankfurt to Damascus and forced it to land at the airport in Vienna, officials said.

The hijackers left the plane and surrendered to authorities at 9:18 p.m., after nearly five hours of negotiations, according to a statement from Lufthansa headquarters in Frankfurt.

They had previously released all 33 passengers after about 2½ hours of negotiations, said an airport spokesman. The eight-member crew had remained aboard the Boeing 727.

The hijackers were believed armed with knives and a broken bottle, and had threatened two flight attendants, Schwechat Airport authorities said.

One of the hijackers told negotiators "if somebody approaches less than 150 meters the captain will be killed," according to Gerhard Kastelic, another airport spokesman.

After one hour of negotiations, 21 of the passengers were released, and the rest were set free an hour and a half later, as the result of negotiations between the air pirates and Lufthansa officials, said airport spokeswoman Hildegard Ehmsen.

Filene's workers on strike, first in 70 years

Basement and other New England stores not affected in union action

BOSTON (AP) Managers manned the cash registers yesterday while clerks and other workers picketed outside the entrances to Filene's department stores on the opening day of the store's first strike in its 70-year history.

The picketers shouted for customers not to enter the store and chanted anti-managment slogans at the people walking through the employee entrance at the rear of the Filene's store in downtown Boston, but the strike appeared peaceful.

Some shoppers honored the picket lines at the Natick store, but others entered the store to shop, The Middlesex News of Framingham reported.

"Our stores are open for business as usual and we expect no operational problems," said company spokeswoman Robin Reibel. "We anticipate that many of our employees will want to return to work and we welcome that."

More than 60 workers walked the picket lines at the Natick Distribution Center, but only four or five strikers were outside the Natick Mall store, the newspaper said.

No further talks were scheduled with the company as of yesterday afternoon, said John Thinney, vice president and business manager of United Food and Commercial Workers Union Local 1445.

The strike affects 11 stores and three distribution centers but neither Filene's basement stores nor four stores in New Hampshire, Maine and Connecticut, because workers there are not union members, union officials said.

Man dismembered on Cape

BARNSTABLE (AP) - The head, feet and hands of former Yarmouth Selectman Franklin Taft Greene had been sawed off before his body was buried in a shallow backyard grave, allegedly by his son, according to a Barnstable County medical examiner.

Greene's son, Brendan, 21, accused in the slaying, was ordered Tuesday to Bridgewater State Hospital for 20 days of psychiatric evaluation after Hyannis psychiatrist Dr. Salvadore Jacobs testified that young Greene was "legally responsible" for his acts.

Jacobs, who urged sending Greene to Bridgewater, testified at Greene's arraignment before Judge Brian Rowe on a first-degree murder charge in Barnstable District Court.

The elder Greene, 58, was found Monday in the grave in the backyard of his Yarmouth home near the Bass River.

Barnstable County Medical Examiner Dr. Arthur Bickford said Greene was dead when his body was dismembered. The autopsy did not indicate what kind of weapon was used to kill Greene, he said.

Bickford said the autopsy showed Greene was killed by "blunt force injuries to the head, causing multiple skull fractures and lacerations to the brain."

Cape and Islands District Attorney Philip A. Rollins requested the psychiatric evaluation, saying Jacobs' opinion of Greene was based on one interview.

"He (Greene) was quite willing to talk to me for a while," Jacobs told the court. "He understood very, very well...He is not, in my opinion, hallucinated or deluded.

Boston rates high in survey

NEW YORK (AP) - Boston is the second best place to live in America, just after Pittsburgh and before cities such as San Francisco and Atlanta, according to the 1985 edition of Rand McNally's "Places Rated Almanac."

Boston jumped from its 18th ranking in the first edition, published in 1981.

"It looks like the rest of the country has finally noticed what the people of Boston have known for a long time. Boston is a great city," Boston Mayor Ray Flynn said yesterday

"Boston residents have put the divisions of the past behind them," he added, "and the new spirit that has been sweeping across this city must have been felt around the country."

Yuba City, Calif., which until yesterday was best known for almonds and a mass murder, has a new but dubious distinction - it's been labeled the worst American city to live in.

Pittsburgh, considered by many to be a dying mill city of the industrial northeast, has eclipsed the Sunbelt's gracious Atlanta as the No.1 city in the country, the book says.

"Rand McNally should stick to producing maps," said Joe Benatar, chairman of the Board of Supervisors in Sutter County, where Yuba City is located near Sacramento in the agricultural Central Valley.

Rand McNally vice president Russell Voisin defended the methodology of the study of 329 metropolitan areas, saying, "We didn't make the places good or bad."

No. 3 honors went to Raleigh-Durham, N.C., which also was in the top 10 last time, followed by San Francisco and Philadelphia.

New York City's suburbs on Long Island, comprising Nassau and Suffolk counties, ranked No. 6, up from 48. Similarly, the previous edition's "worst" city, Lawrence-Haverhill, Mass., near Boston, shot up to 154th.

Woman denies embezzling funds

NORTHAMPTON (AP) - A Greenfield woman pleaded innocent yesterday to charges she embezzled $17,994 from the Heritage Bank for Savings in Amherst while she was a bank clerk.

The money - the second embezzlement to be reported by the bank in three years - is said to have been taken between April 1983 and January 1985 while Tina L. Russell, 26, was an assistant savings servicing supervisor at the bank.

Mrs. Russell pleaded innocent in Hampshire Superior Court to 10 counts of larceny of more than $100 and one of allegedly forging a withdrawal slip, Assistant District Attorney Edward D. Etheredge said.

Students need to lobby for financial aid

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students and their parents must oppose President Ronald Reagan's proposed financial aid cuts by contacting their representatives in Congress, administrators said.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said that if Congress is no notified of public concern, some of the proposed cutbacks may pass. He added that a grassroots effort of this kind will be "more important than any strategy people set in Washington."

"I don't think Reagan will get what he wants, but if Congress doesn't hear from people, he may get some of it," he said. "I think there will be congressional resistence, but we shouldn't take it for granted."

Dean of Academic Support Services Larry G. Benedict said yesterday that Reagan's plan would foster an elite system of education in this country.

"This country is built on the promise of people being able to optimize their chance to become better, productive citizens," he said, "and I think it is the government's responsibility to ensure that students will be able to attend the college of their choice."

Reagan s proposed plan would place a ceiling of $4,000 on the total amount of aid that any student could receive for a school year, and would deny loans to any student whose household income is higher than $32,500.

Duffey noted that Secretary of Education William Bennet's defense of the aid cuts "have evoked a nationwide response. People are organizing by themselves, writing letters and visiting their congressmen."

Arthur Jackson, director of financial aid, said yesterday that he and other campus administrators will accompany about 50 area students to Washington Sunday for a four-day trip to lobby congress, present petitions and work with subcommittees to prevent the aid cuts.

Mt. Farms mall bringing business back

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The desolate Mountain Farms Mall on Route 9 in Hadley, which two years ago had only five stores in a mall built for 35, may soon be bustling with shoppers.

The mall manager, Charles Lang, said the mall will soon be full of discount stores and he hopes this will be enough to revitalize the shopping center.

New success at the mall, which never closed two years ago when it was referred to as the "dead mall," will depend on its leasing an anchor store, Lang said. An anchor store is the major store found in any shopping center which occupies a larger space at one end of a complex. Lang added that the anchor store he's looking for will be a major discount store, but will not have a national name.

The mall now houses about 30 discount stores, many which have already opened, and several others that will open in the coming months. The discount stores offer consumers an alternate shopping environment and save them money in the process, Lang said.

"Things are looking good and we've come a long way," he said. "The fact is that it's a re-emergence and better times are coming."

Lang said the shopping center has added many discount stores, including a shoe store, furniture store, rug store, card and gift shop, computer center and auto shop.

Lang said he wants to get a women's and men's clothing store and a big discount department store in the mall.

He said the decision to lease space again in the mall was made two years ago.

"We are heading towards being a discount mall," Lang said. "Five stores are in the process of negotiating leases," and "the mall is two or three months away from more occupancy."

Lang said both the Mountain Farms Mall and the Hampshire Mall have had attendance problems in the past few years due to inflation, gas prices and competition from the Holyoke Mall at Ingleside.

Fred Warren, owner of Just Fun Arcade in the Mountain Farms Mall, said the re-emergence won't affect his arcade that much.

"The majority of the so-called new stores do very little for us, with the exception of the rug store," he said. "I'm guardedly optimistic," Warren added.

Audrey McGuirk, an employee of The Rug Store, said that she is very pleased about the re-emergence of the discount mall.

"Everything (stores) is going to help business," McGuirk said.

Soviet citizens' expressed desire to avoid such a calamity.

"We can either halt the arms race at this time through meaningful negotiations with the Soviets or we can launch off some destabilizing trillion dollar folly like the Star Wars proposal (a space-based missile defense system) and keep escalating the arms buildup," he said.

The Soviets could respond to the Star Wars concept by either building a very costly reciprocal space defense system or by developing less costly newer missiles designed to thwart the Star Wars defense, thereby continuing the arms buildup, he said.

The possibility for mistaking a relatively innocent object on a radar screen for an incoming missile grows as newer weapons systems become faster and more sophisticated. McGovern cited examples of American defense locations going to upper level alerts over innocent objects judged to be missiles or planes. He mentioned the tragic Korean jetliner incident involving Russia's destruction of what it thought was an intelligence gathering plane. America should learn from the failure of Vietnam in respect to U.S. involvement in Central America. American intervention on the side of the Contra rebels only heightens the conflict, he said.

Conduct code up for review

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

The Dean of Students office and the Student Government Association are distributing the latest draft of the revised Code of Student Conduct to a number of University staff, faculty and students.

Dean of Students William F. Field and SGA co-President Rick Patrick plan to solicit comments on the document in hopes of bringing it before the undergraduate and graduate student senates and then to the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees for approval next month.

The code has been in the process of revision since last spring. Administrators and SGA leaders began meeting at the end of last semester to hammer out agreements on a few disputed changes.

The latest version, as given to the Collegian Monday, includes significant additions which were areas of dispute in the negotiations: the use of judicial advocates to defend students in disciplinary hearings, and "interim restrictions," which the dean of students can impose on a student who is a "perceived threat" to the University community.

Patrick, however, said he would be "very surprised" if the final code retains the latest draft's wording on interim suspension. It has been the object of controversy since December 1983 when Field imposed it on Yvette I. Henry, a student accused of setting one of a series of residence hall fires. Charges against Henry were later dropped. Last May she filed two $6.5 million lawsuits, one of which charges Field with illegal suspension.

The new interim action provisions, if approved by the trustees, would authorize the dean of students to hold an "emergency board" meeting with representatives from Housing Services and the student attorney general's office and to "place the minimum restrictions" necessary on any student considered a threat to the community.

The latest draft permits interim suspension if the student does not abide by other interim restrictions or "is unwilling or unable to appear" before the emergency board.

The new interim action provisions...would authorize the dean of students to hold an "emergency board" meeting...to "place the minimum restrictions" necessary on any student considered a threat to the community.

This would allow interim suspension to be imposed while a student is in police custody, as happened in the Henry case. But Patrick said he expected "a lot of discussion...on the legality of this section."

"I'd be very surprised if the language remains the same," he said. "The intent of (the section) was to give the opportunity to the student to appear."

Other revisions include:

- The creation of a University hearing officer to preside over all disciplinary boards except appellate ones, "with the goal of the uniform treatment of students and the consistent interpretation of the code," Patrick and Field wrote in a cover letter to the new draft.
- The addition of a prohibition on harassment of a person "because of race, sex, sexual orientation, religion, age, national origin or ancestry." This section also prohibits "hazing in the sense of...punishment or humiliation."
- An expanded definition of sex offenses which encompasses "sexual assault or any other uninvited behavior of a sexually explicit nature, including...unauthorized public exposure of buttocks and or genitalia."
- A prohibition on tampering with or gaining unauthorized access to computer files.
- The proposed elimination of the middle-level appeals boards. All appeals would then be heard by the highest campus judicial body, the University Discipline Board, for "a more expeditious appeals process," the cover letter said.

Last November, Patrick expressed his opposition to interim suspension, saying, "You can't just waive basic constitutional rights and suspend someone without a hearing."

At the same time, Field said allowing advocates to represent students would put campus hearing boards at a disadvantage because "those boards are composed of lay people." Under the latest draft, up to two advocates may advance arguments for each party in a hearing.

"The University hearing officer will be able to deal with any disruptive or unprofessional behavior of advocates," the cover letter said, adding, "By bringing back advocates, victims will not have to suffer the burden of presenting a case."

"There are quite a few compromises in (the new draft)," Patrick said. "We felt very strongly about student advocates."

Field said, "I don't think compromise is the right word...We've been trying to come up with the best draft, and this is the best one we could come up with."

Field said he plans to send copies of the draft to about 80 faculty and staff members, while Patrick will distribute it to other faculty and staff members, SGA senators and officers and hearing board members.

A senate committee's report on Yvette Henry

University and the apparent vulnerability to outside intrusion and control. The comittee was interested in understanding the legal and institutional bases for such an abdication of responsibility.

Fourth, there were questions about the role of the police, since it was reported that the police had been harassing a number of minority students for some time before the day of Ms. Henry's arrest.

After some discussion, the committee decided that it needed to get more information and that it wanted to hear the full range of perspectives on what had happened during this whole period.

II. Description of the events in the case

It is necessary that we look back to the spring of 1983, in order to understand completely what happened in the fall. It appears that during the spring there were 17 intentionally set fires in various dorms across the campus. From the perspective of one witness, in spite of expressed concerns from the residence areas, there was little responsiveness from the administration during the spring.

During the fall, the first of the fires was reported on 9/25/83. The standard procedure includes notification to the local town fire chief who in turn reports all suspicious fires to the state fire marshall. In the usual case, the investigation would be left up to local officials. After there had been a series of fires in Crampton and Cashin, the local public safety officials began to have more concerns. There began to be a great deal more media attention given to the fires, and the administration of the University began to get pressure from both inside and outside of the University to do something.

On 10/12/83 the state fire marshall and the district attorney took charge of the investigation. The first fires had been in trash rooms, but after telemetry equipment was placed to monitor those areas, the fires began to take place on bulletin boards and later in the bathrooms. The level of concern of the investigators rose when a series of threatening notes were found. These notes said things like: "Crampton will die young" and "Gasoline on the floor". (Local newspapers have recently reported that a janitor in Crampton was convicted and sentenced for writing some or all of these notes.)

This escalation in the level of the threat was taken very seriously, and the energy of the Department of Public Safety became focused on prevention. Restrictions were placed on admittance to the dorm, and there were guards on duty around the clock. Still the fires persisted. Students in large numbers complained to the Dean of Students Office about the disruption to their lives and work.

Two extraordinary things happened early in October and in November. First, because the investigation was not being successful, the FBI was asked to come in to help. The FBI has a special unit which creates "psychological profiles" of the likely criminal in particularly difficult cases. The profile is based upon information which is provided by the local law enforcement people. Such computer based profiles have been used in a large number (perhaps 200 to 300 each year) of particularly difficult and heinous crimes (serial murders, rapes, kidnappings, etc.).

These profiles are supposed to be used only to narrow down the number of suspects in a case—not to effect an arrest. That is, such profiles are not considered evidence that a person is guilty. Such profiles are completely dependent on the information provided by the local police.

In this case it appears that the FBI (the profile developers) were told that minority students were under suspicion. The second thing that happened was that Vice-Chancellor Madson called together a group to coordinate the investigation and response at the level of the University administration. Several weeks before the arrest of Ms. Henry, a decision was made in this group that any person arrested for the fires would be suspended immediately.

Director O'Neil told the committee that during the first weeks of November there were newspaper reports released to the effect that the number of suspects was being narrowed down with the help of the FBI. (It was not altogether clear whether this was true or simply a device suggested by the FBI for frightening the arsonist into confessing.)

Three students in Crampton were recruited by the investigators to be informants. The tension was so great during these weeks in November, that even members of the University police were under suspicion. It was during this period also that many black and Puerto Rican residents of Crampton began to complain to the Legal Services Office that they were being harassed by the police—i.e., being followed, repeatedly questioned, and having their rooms searched without warrants.

On November 27 there was a further escalation of the threat. On this day a fire was set inside a dormitory room in Crampton. It seems that the investigation intensified at this point, and the major suspect was Ms. Henry. On Friday, December 2, Dean Field received a call from Phillip Cavanaugh, the Associate Director of Public Safety at UMASS and the local person most involved in the investigation. He asked the Dean to stay close to his phone, which the Dean took to mean that an arrest was about to take place.

In fact, later that day he was called and asked to meet Mr. Cavanaugh at the campus police station, which he did at 4:45. Mr. Cavanaugh convinced the Dean that Ms. Henry was the arsonist and that she was an imminent danger to the dormitory and to the campus. He insisted that a search of her room was essential.

The fire alarm was set off at Crampton, and the building was evacuated in order to search for explosives. The Dean was present at Ms. Henry's room when two police officers searched her room and found nothing. Mr. Cavanaugh met with the residents and told them that there was no danger and that their problem with the fires had been resolved.

The Dean went to Director O'Neil's office at the police station and remained there until the arrest later that evening. Sometime between 5:00 and 5:30 P.M. Ms. Henry was stopped at the door of Crampton and asked to go to the police station ostensibly to be shown something there, and she went voluntarily. But she was interrogated intensively until around 8:00 P.M. that evening, when she was finally arrested.

Frank Oglesby, a close friend of Ms. Henry, called John Lopes, a staff member at CCEBMS, and informed him about her being picked up. The two of them went to the station, but were unable to get much information about what had happened. They were finally told that she was picked up based on a "psychological profile" which she fit.

Students endorse release of report

By LESLEY CLARK
and RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate unanimously passed a motion last night demanding that the faculty senate Rules Committee publicly release the special report on the Yvette Henry case.

According to the motion, "the report, if released, would make available the information regarding the past, present and future effects of University."

John Ruddock, who proposed the motion, said it was necessary for students to have access to the report because its contents directly involve students, particulary minority students.

Gayle Wintjen, chairwoman of Academic Affairs, said she was disturbed that at the last faculty senate meeting two weeks ago, no member of the faculty bothered to ask about or even respond to the report.

Marilyn Bou, a student senator, said the University has an obligation to release the report because it is a public document.

"The University has a lot of face to lose, the information in the report is public information."

In order to pass the motion, the senate first had to suspend the rules. They originally voted down suspending the rules because another motion was included with the faculty senate motion. Bill Collins, another senator, later made a separate motion dealing solely with demanding the public release of the report.

After being told that she was being questioned in the detective unit located in a trailer outside of the police station, Mr. Lopes went to the unit and found Ms. Henry being questioned by three police officers (state trooper Jay Bowman, UMASS police officers Michael Grabiec and officer Cheryl Sponburgh). He was ushered out and told that an announcement would be made around 8:00 P.M. He then called Thelma Griffith-Johnson, the University's Affirmative Action Officer.

When she arrived, she was also unable to get much information. She asked if a lawyer had been secured for Ms. Henry and whether the latter had been allowed to make any phone calls. Charles DiMare, the director of the Legal Services Office was called. In the meantime, other concerned individuals had been called and arrived, including Paul Barrows and Gloria de Guevara, Director of Educational Access and Outreach.

None of these people were given much information about what was happening. University officials insisted that the investigation was in the hands of outside agencies. Whenever any statement was made to justify the arrest, the "psychological profile" was mentioned.

When Mr. DiMare arrived, he asked District Attorney Ryan, "What do have on her?" The District Attorney reportedly answered, "Not much." Mr. Ryan reportedly continued by saying that the police had advised him that Ms. Henry was the arsonist and a danger to the campus, based on the FBI "psychological profile." After questioning Ms. Henry, Mr. DiMare was convince that she was not the person responsible for the fires.

Meanwhile a second search of Ms. Henry's room was carried out -- this time with the permission of Ms. Henry and Mr. DiMare. A cash bail of $10,000 was set. After some discussion of alternatives, she was sent to the jail in Greenfield. Dean Field wrote out a suspension letter on the spot and presented it to Mr. DiMare. Director O'Neil presented a "notice of trespass" order that evening as well.

Ms. Henry spent two nights in jail and was released on bail on Sunday, 12/4/83. There was a meeting on 12/7/83 to discuss the details of the suspension and the trespass order, and in order to make arrangements for Ms. Henry to continue going to classes. The meeting included Dean Field, Ms. Henry, her mother and her attorney; University attorney Sidney Meyers; and two observers, Paul Barrows and Gloria de Guevara.

On 12/23/83 all charges against Ms. Henry were dismissed by the District Attorney because of a lack of evidence. It was noted, however, that the District Attorney might present his evidence to a grand jury in the spring, but he indicated that Ms. Henry was no longer a suspect. Dean Field sent a letter on 12/30/83 rescinding the suspension and all other restrictions against her.

III. Questions presented by the Faculty Senate

As far as we know, the details of the case outlined above are not disputed. There may well be some disagreement on the interpretation of the events by the several people that we interviewed. (We have included minutes of the interviews with each of the visitors we saw as a committee.)

The remainder of this report will be an attempt to provide information which bears on the questions presented to us by the Senate. We are stating the opinion of our committee based on the testimony heard, and we hope that this information will provide a basis for the Senate's own judgment in the matter.

A. Were Ms. Henry's civil rights violated or infringed? None of the members of the committee have legal training, and it is particularly difficult to give a definitive answer to this question. We did, however, ask those who gave testimony their opinions on this question. As we expected, there were quite different opinions.

Director O'Neil said that he believed that no violation of civil rights had taken place because he assumed that Ms. Henry's rights were read to her. (Nowhere in the information that we gathered is there a report that Ms. Henry was read her rights, given an opportunity to make a call, or allowed to leave during the period that she was being questioned in the detective unit, although she reportedly asked several times to do so.)

Dean Field likewise believed that there had not been such violations. He felt, however, that this was a matter to be addressed to others, since he was not part of the investigation nor of the arrest itself. His role was as the representative of the University carrying out a prearranged decision to suspend any person who was arrested for the fires.

He agreed that the plan to suspend before there was a person arrested was unusual, but he felt that the circumstances were so unusual that the action was warranted.

Both Thelma Griffith-Johnson and Charles DiMare believed that there had been violations of civil rights on several grounds. First, there had been a search of Ms. Henry's room without a warrant. Second, she was subjected to grueling interrogation for several hours without the benefit of legal advice. It appears that the "psychological profile" had indicated that the arsonist would confess when confronted, and the police were counting on a fast resolution of the matter.

Mr. Dimare felt that it was contrary to Ms. Henry's civil rights that she was suspended without a hearing. According to Mr. DiMare, this may be both unconstitutional and contrary to the Regulations and Policies of the University. Dr. Johnson felt that the ruse used by the police to get her down to the police station could be construed as attempted entrapment. During the questioning Ms. Henry was not allowed to leave and was not allowed to make any phone calls.

The facts that Ms. Henry was questioned without the presence of an attorney and that her room was searched without a warrant are not points of disagreement among any of those who gave testimony. But these are the facts which we feel may be the most suggestive of violations of civil rights. This committee, therefore, gives its opinion that Ms. Henry's civil rights were violated.

B. Did the treatment accorded her differ from that accorded non-minority students? One of the later questions focuses upon whether the Dean of Students Office treated Ms. Henry in a way different from non-minority students. Here, therefore, we are addressing the part played by other agencies.

One major question has to do with the nature of the "psychological profile" created by the FBI. From all that we have heard, it seems clear that this computer-generated profile depends on the information which is given by local police. It seems very unlikely that the computer would generate a profile which would indicate that the arsonist was Black or Hispanic.

Given that the local police did not have evidence sufficient to make an arrest when the FBI help was first sought, we are left to conclude that the local police assumed that the arsonist had to be a minority person. Nothing has been told to our committee which would in any way justify such an assumption on the part of the police.

It is also clear that the computer was fed a good deal of misinformation. The most striking piece of misinformation was that a black person had written the notes because of the syntax of the notes. It appears that subsequently it was assumed that Ms. Henry had written the notes. (Later it was reported in the newspapers that a white female janitor had written at least some of the notes.)

Second, several of those who spoke with us reported that they were aware of complaints by minority students that the police had been harassing them. This accusation was made more specific by referring to repeated questioning, being followed, and room searches without warrants. Director O'Neil, however, responded that many white students had been questioned and that the tension was so great that even his own police officers were suspects.

Third, the bail that was set in the case of Ms. Henry seems completely out of line, considering that another student arrested for setting a fire in another dormitory three days later was allowed out on his own recognizance. This student was also suspended by the Dean immediately upon arrest for the fire. The fire was set on 12/5; the arrest and suspension took place on 12/8; but the trespass order was not issued until 12/13.

★Henry report

Field, it was clear that in the past students who had been accused of much worse crimes were not dealt with by the local law enforcement agencies as harshly as was Ms. Henry. All those who spoke with us agreed that there was tension bordering on hysteria among the people who were involved in the investigation and the arrest.

It appears that many otherwise responsible individuals accepted uncritically the validity of the "psychological profile" and the predictions based on it (e.g. suicide, mass murder, etc.). This led them to the conclusion that everything had to be done to keep Ms. Henry locked up.

Based on the above, it is the opinion of the this committee that the treatment accorded to Ms. Henry was different from that accorded to non-minority students.

C. Did the Dean of Students Office behave properly with respect to Ms. Henry? The consideration of this question must begin with a discussion of what would be considered "proper" behavior in this situation by the Dean of Students Office. No statement of general responsibilities and policy of the Dean of Students has been obtained. The following assumes that these responsibilities generally include the protection of the individual student welfare and rights and the enforcement of University Regulations and Policies.

We recognize the responsibilities for the welfare of all individual students, including, in this case, all the residents of Crampton Dormitory. We also recognize that personnel of the Dean of Students Office were limited by the information received from police investigators.

Sections of the Code of Student Conduct in the University Regulations and Policies dated September 1983, which seem relevant to an understanding of proper behavior are paraphrased here:

I(B) Low key approaches such as counseling, guidance, admonition, and example are preferred to disciplinary proceedings. If these fail to resolve the situation, proper procedural safeguards are to be observed to protect the student from unfair imposition of serious penalties.

I(C) In situations involving disciplinary sanction, the student must be informed in writing of the charges against him/her, have an opportunity to appear before a judicial body or official, know the nature and source of evidence against him/her and to present evidence on his/her behalf and an opportunity to appeal before any entry of an adverse notation on any permanent record.

III(B.1). Specifies that cases of suspension shall be heard by the University Discipline Board, even when the Dean of Students suspends because of a presumption of an immediate threat to the University community.

III(E.2) Provides justification and procedure for removal of a student from a residence hall or from the Resident Hall System. Requires efforts of house government and residence hall staff to correct the situation and specifies a right of appeal.

IV Seven sanctions specifying procedural rights of students, including a hearing with timely notice, right to present evidence, and to be advised by a person of his/her choosing, and the presumption of innocence in all cases.

Relevant events as told to the committee:

1. A search of Ms. Henry's dormitory room about 5:00 P.M. on the day of the arrest. The Dean of Students gave permission for this search. Ms. Henry neither gave permission nor knew of this search. There was no warrant. Later that evening, after the arrest, much was made of carefully obtaining permission from Ms. Henry and her lawyer to have the room searched.

2. Ms. Henry was asked to go to the Police Station voluntarily, which she did, and was questioned for two and a half hours before arrest. This two and a half hours of questioning was allowed to continue with the full knowledge of the the Dean of Students. He allowed it to continue without knowing if her rights had been read to her (they apparently had not been) and did not contact a lawyer during this period. A lawyer was contacted only after Thelma Griffith-Johnson, the University Affirmative Action Officer, arrived at the Police Station.

The lawyer arrived two hours after the arrest. In the opinion of Paul Barrows, the Director of the CCEBMS Program, (a member) of the Dean of Students Office seemed to be in charge of relationships with the public at the Police Station on the night of the arrest. He seemed to Mr. Barrows to be more interested in creating publicity for the arrest than in protecting Ms. Henry's rights and welfare or in informing the minority administrators who had gathered at the station on that evening.

3. The suspension and trespass order apparently resulted from a decision made two weeks before the arrest that anyone arrested for setting the fires would be suspended immediately.

4. In the summer and early fall of 1983 a procedure had been cooperatively developed by representatives of minority faculty and staff, the Dean of Students Office, staff of the Office of Student Affairs, and the staff of the Department of Public Safety. This procedure was to facilitate the involvement of respected members of the minority community in dealing with any situation in which a minority student was in serious difficulty.

The arrest of Ms. Henry was the first opportunity for this procedure to be used. It was completely ignored by the Dean of Students and his staff, in spite of attempts to implement it by minority administrators. Some who testified had the impression that members of the Dean's staff were pointedly ignoring all black people who were present at the police station.

It is the opinion of this committee that the Dean of Students and his staff did act improperly in a number of instances in dealing with Ms. Henry. We do recognize the extreme pressure they were under at the time to get the fires stopped and to protect the welfare and rights of other students. But we believe that the Dean and his staff should have been able to remain calm and exercise proper judgment in order to protect the welfare and rights of Ms. Henry as well.

Specifically, we feel that both the spirit and the letter of the University Code of Student Conduct were broken in the circumstances of her pre-arrest questioning, in the failure to obtain legal help for her during this period, and in the pre-arrest room search. We also question the procedures used in the suspension and trespass order in this case.

Finally, we feel that the Dean could have helped to achieve more reasonable treatment of Ms. Henry by the law enforcement agents in the post-arrest discussions.

D. Did the behavior of the Dean of Students Office with respect to Ms. Henry differ from its behavior toward non-minority students?

The committee believes that there were several significant differences between the treatement received by non-minority students and Ms. Henry from the Dean of Students Office. Dean Field and Mr. DiMare, for instance, told us that before this year there had been only two students subjected to immediate suspension (without a formal hearing) by the Dean of Students Office.

One involved a man who was going around campus with an automatic rifle; the other involved a student who was chopping through a dormitory director's room door with an ax. Mr. DiMare also stressed the fact that other students who have been accused of serious felonies -- including rape and murder -- have not been suspended, even though some of them were actually convicted of the crimes.

Paul Barrows reported to our committee that two white students who had been convicted in the past of setting fires on campus had been reprimanded -- but not suspended. Around the same time that Ms. Henry was arrested a white male student was arrested and charged with rape, but he was not immediately (nor subsequently) suspended from the University.

Dean Field claims that his office had information after the arrest that the victim was not going to press charges. The fact that no immediate suspension took place suggests differential treatment.

From all that we have heard, it seems that the welfare and rights of Ms. Henry was of minimal importance to the Dean of Students Office. (One staff member, in particular, gave some observers the impression that his role was to protect the police rather than to protect Ms. Henry's rights. This is consistent with reports that the Dean of Students Office was insensitive to and unresponsive to minority student needs.

We believe that the staff of the Dean of Students Office was substantially less sensitive to the needs of Ms. Henry on the night of the arrest than we would have expected them to be. In the context of some of the testimony about the night of the arrest as well as reports about previous complaints, it is possible to conclude that her minority status was at least partially responsible for this.

E. How and to what degree will the treatment of Ms. Henry affect the University's efforts to recruit minority students and bring them to the Amherst campus?

The only person interviewed by the committee who commented on this question was Mr. Barrows. He reported that he had heard from University recruiters that prospective black students were raising questions about the Yvette Henry case and expressing doubts about the University of Massachusetts.

We feel, therefore, that we cannot provide a definitive opinion on this issue at this time. Perhaps a thorough investigation of this matter could be conducted in the future with the cooperation of the Admissions Office and the Office of Institutional Studies.

III. Summary and Conclusions

Based on the statements made to us by six individuals who were present and involved on the night of Yvette Henry's arrest, this committee expresses the following opinions:

Why we published it

Today, the Collegian has published, in its entirety, the special report on the Yvette Henry case which the Rules Committee of the faculty senate refuses to release publicly.

The Collegian obtained the report two weeks ago and printed excerpts from it. At the same time, the Board of Editors asked the faculty senate to demand the release of the report in the interest of students.

That request went unanswered.

The Collegian feels that it is a disservice to students, faculty, and all members of this campus to ignore both the report and the rationale behind it. The intent of the report was to closely examine the events leading up to, and immediately following, the arrest of Henry, a former UMass chemistry major, and resident of Crampton House, in December 1983.

Henry was charged with one count of arson in a series of fires occuring in the dorm where she was a resident assistant. The charge was later dropped due to lack of evidence.

Following her arrest, Henry was suspended from the University, prohibited from taking classes, barred from the residence halls, fired from her job as an RA, and as a result, was unable to graduate as expected the following spring.

The report was written by the faculty senate Committee on the Status of Minorities, a group which was asked to see what, if anything, went wrong in the handling of the Henry case, and if something did go wrong, to then help set in motion some formal mechanism to ensure it would never happen again.

The Collegian believes suppressing the report will defeat its purpose, and will ultimately create the possibility that what happened to Yvette Henry could happen to any student on this campus, regardless of race.

The decision to release the report was not a haphazard one. The Collegian is well aware that two multi-million dollar lawsuits are currently pending against the University and other agencies involved with Henry's arrest.

Administrators have stated that the rationale behind not releasing the report is that it may be damaging to pending legal action against them and others.

The Collegian believes that this rationale is false for two reasons. First is that it is highly probable that a judge would find the report inadmissible in a trial because its conclusions were drawn by a third party and not a court of law; second, even if it were found to be admissible then legal counsel to Henry would have legal access to it via subpoena.

Administrators have also stated that they believe the report is a private document (exempting them from having to release it).

Administrators have also stated that they believe the report is a private document (exempting them from having to release it).

However, Mass. Gen. Law chapter four, section D, paragraph one states that among the documents exempt from public records law are "inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda or letters relating to policy positions being developed by the agency; but this subparagraph shall not apply to reasonably completed factual studies or reports on which the development of such policy positions has been or may be based."

Since the report has been completed and submitted by the original committee to the Rules Committee of the senate, and since the intent of the report was to help set in motion a policy to guard against what happened on Dec. 2, 1983, the night of Henry's arrest, from ever happening again, according to the law, the report is a public document.

The Collegian is also aware that this report is not, nor should it be, viewed as a finding of guilt or innocence of those directly involved on the night of Henry's arrest.

The Collegian does, however, believe that this report, and the conclusion derived from it, will best serve the interest and rights of each and every student at UMass, particularly those living in the residence halls.

The Collegian still urges faculty senators to demand that their Rules Committee make public the report as a sign that they, too, believe in the public's right to know.

Pursuing peace of mind

Diane Lane

One day a month, every month, I wake up feeling lackluster and nauseous. On these days I go about my usual business, which does not depart seriously from the norm, except perhaps, for the overwhelming desire on my part to go off somewhere and die a quiet, anonymous death. Logic would dictate, of course, that I see a doctor--however, the simple fact is that this is a sickness I willingly and knowingly bring on myself, with the casual swallowing of a little white pill, no bigger than a ball of lint.

In spite of the discomfort, I am a die-hard fan of the birth control pill. Having experimented unsuccessfully with every type of birth control known to woman; from the embarrassing slipperiness of the diaphragm to the "monthly abortion" method widely recognized as the IUD, I reluctantly realize that one day of sickness a month is a not unreasonable price to pay for a pregnancy-free life.

Not unreasonable, that is, in this era, which has given over to woman the moral freedom to have casual sex, while cleverly holding back a safe means of controlling birth. It is a sly tactic--probably devised in secret by white-coated fundamentalist doctors determined to make the act of sex, for women, a big deal.

Seven years ago I lived in an apartment with three other women. Together, through years of trial and error, we could write a dissertation on the practice of birth control. My own memories include the day I had an IUD inserted and limped home from the clinic bent over in pain; the bloody and crampy menses I was told were "normal" and its removal three months later by a doctor who told me he felt IUDs should be against the law.

Other times were less serious--I remember the shrieks of horror coming from our bathroom where one of my roommates, with my expert coaching, was trying out her new diaphragm. She reported, somewhat hysterically, I thought, the slipping and skidding and eventualy, its final destination, where it lay floating in the waters of the toilet.

Another roommate, missing when I came home from a weekend away, used to leave unmistakable signs of her love life lying around the floor of our bedroom in the form of neon colored condoms; unused but discarded as they ripped or broke in the heat of passion. This meticulous scrutiny must not have been sufficient, though-today Majorie and Joe are the parents of a beautiful daughter, her birth coming a little sooner than the wedding would indicate.

We were not unique in the ridiculous things that happened in pursuit of peace of mind. Often, we pledged a vow of chastity, only half jokingly. It is this exasperation, however, that is the telling point in many women's attitudes toward their health and sexual freedom. Where satisfactory birth control is elusive, many of us give up--only later to find ourselves in the painful place of abortion or unplanned motherhood. Where slow and unproductive research focuses mainly on new methods for women, the emotional gap in understanding between the sexes is further widened.

Writing this while wretched and miserable, I can only say, with no bitterness toward men in general, that the accepted ways of controlling birth are not half good enough. Until society comes fully to accept the presence of women in all our newly acquired nontraditional roles, and until the choice of pregnancy is truly a choice with no-strings attached, a woman's sexuality will never be as non-thinking as a man's. We will remain a backward society--one in which a woman's eventual place is in the home, through no conscious decision of her own.

Letters to the Editor

Editor's note: In the past two days the Collegian has received over 30 letters concerning a letter by John F. Till printed in Monday's newspaper. Space limitations prohibit printing them all. What follows is a series of excerpts from some of them.

Till, I can't believe that you could be so ignorant to assert that minorities must "earn" civility. Since when should people have to "earn" fair and considerate treatment? Civility is something everyone should be accorded.

Mark Clukey

To make a comparison between these organizations (People's Gay Alliance and Lesbian Union) and the Ku Klux Klan and American Nazi Party is ignorant. How can one compare an organization built on furthering human understanding to one bent on destroying anything that deviates from the white American "norm?"

M.J. Remondi
Aileen Duggan
Yvette Laurent
Joseph Duggan
Tracy Smith

If your definition of a minority held true, "The minority is assuming that they must be treated with civility by the majority because they are a minority," as a woman, I would not be pursuing a business degree here, I would be barefoot and pregnant.

Laura K. Holmes

Was this letter a joke? Heterosexual expression happily abounds. Just what was the point?

Robert Janssen
Lawrence Jackson

While Till might have a point that gay organizations could be separating gays from the community, he doesn't understand the self-protection and unity it offers them is not unlike a shield to protect against arrows slung from foolish lips and rocks from civil hands.

Jeff Strohl

It is sad that some people must contribute to the problems already facing the minority. Civility will only be achieved when it becomes a common goal.

Maureen K. Jack

It is these minorities of the world who have given me the courage and strength to stand on my beliefs and view myself as not a part of the "majority" but a minority within myself. It is the uniqueness (differences) of the individuals that comprise a community in its truest sense in my world.

Kim MacMillan

Have we ever considered that our zealousness to convert minorities to the "norm" is the very reason that they refuse to be assimilated into our society? How would you feel if someone was trying to take away what makes you an individual?

Herb Ramy

It is the same assumptions about a person's difference, assumptions conceived in fear and ignorance, that create the "problems" and oppression, not the difference in itself.

Becky Lockwood

If Hitler had merely been gay instead of genocidal, I think we would have far fewer lessons to draw from that dark chapter of our history. Lessons that I can only hope we finally learn.

Keith Winston

As a heterosexual, I have never been denied my freedom of expression on this campus, and I challenge Till to produce an example of his experiences of oppression.

M. Lynne Murphy

Sure, it's our nature as U.S. citizens to fear cultural, sexual, and physical differences in other people, but it doesn't mean we can justify or rationalize our fear by giving ultimatums, like "As soon as civility is shown by the homosexuals of this community, civility will be shown to them."

Rachel L. Israel

Should people be condemned for taking pride in their identities, and for creating their own resources when existing ones don't apply to them?

Michael Broder

Although this seems beyound Till's comprehension, we (lesbians and gay men) are assimilated into society in a great many ways. We are in every ethnic group, class, age, religious affiliation, political organization, and any other classification designated to any group of people—even in Till's group—with the exception, of course, of the group labeled as homophobes.

Tamara S. Boots

Upon reading the four letters to the Editor in Tuesday's Collegian, I felt that John F. Till was a bigoted, close-minded fiend. The authors of these epistles however, have never met me and leapt to their conclusions concerning my person without basis, at least the president of the PGA had the decency to meet with me before forming his own opinion. But their accusations are not the thrust of this letter.

These aforementioned writers obviously had the courage and faith in their convictions to express themselves but they managed to miss the issue completely. The point still stands that the homosexuals of our community have surpassed that fine line which borders between acceptable and unacceptable action. If this line is transgressed by any group of people--majority or minority--then that group will likely meet with inevility. The activities of the PGA during "Gay Awareness Day" last semester marks one such transgression. Enough people were offended by these activities to such a degree that they organized a "heterosexuals fight back" rally. Laurie Francis neglected to mention in her letter that this rally was indeed provoked, although I am sure that we would both agree that it was not justified.

The PGA and the Lesbian Union provide important services to our community, but they often offend us with actions when their intentions are to educate us and to make us aware of the homosexual plight. After we have been offended, it does not seem just that we should have the idea of civility towards a group which has offended us imposed upon our thinking. Obviously, civility is deserved by the homosexuals in our community just as it is deserved by any individual that one passes in the street - however the methods of the PGA must be altered in such a way as to educate and inform without offending. Once this has been accomplished, then people will show civility as well as understanding.

Worthy of the front page

On Monday, three exceedingly dynamic and relevant speakers were here on campus: Elie Weisel, Yuri Tuvim, and Maya Angelou. Surprisingly however only the first two managed to find their reviews on the front page. The third of the dynamic trio, a black woman was relegated to Black Affairs on page 7. Are we to assume from this that Maya Angelou is merely worthy of a "Black Affairs" feature, and that Weisel and Tuvim are somehow more universally relevant and newsworthy?

All three speakers talked about what they thought was pertinent for our society to be considering in these troubled times; Weisel on morals in society, Tuvim on the Soviet threat, and Angelou on love, self-love, life and literature. All three also had good crowds; Angelou filled Bowker Auditorium which is at least four times larger that Campus Center 168 where Tuvim spoke. Yet again Maya Angelou was stuffed halfway back in the Collegian. This seems to me to be a disservice to both Angelou and the community in general. It is perhaps most detrimental to the people who didn't get a chance to see and hear such a beautiful person as Maya Angelou, whose message of literature, life and love is so needed in a world full of illiteracy, death and hate.

The 'real' loser is...

Angela Forster's letter in yesterday's Collegian exhibited elitist, classist and homophobic attitudes all too common among many people of the Greek system. Let's face it, the Greek area is an area for white, upper-to-middle class, straight men and women. Forster has no right to lash out at someone who delivers pizza in order to make money, probably to pay for school. Sorry, Forster, not everyone can afford college without holding a part-time job. Another offensive comment by Forster is her quote "You find Playboy centerfolds offeasive on fraternity walls? Well it's a lot healthier thanhaving pictures of nude men on their walls." Your homophobia Forster, although somewhat subtle, is still offensive.

Forster, I would like to donate my favorite phrase to you: "Get a clue." The University and the Greek area could probably stand to have one less student like you. See Forster? I didn't use whitewash either, but I've really shown who the real loser is.

Hurting credibility

I have just read a letter in the Collegian written by Angela Forster and I am outraged. Forster had no thoughtful criticism to offer on Rusty Denton's February 21 column; in fact, what she wrote is not a letter to the editor at all, but a personal attack on Rusty Denton.

I was under the impression that the purpose of the opinion page is to allow members of the University community to share their views on issues which are exposed on the pages of the Daily Collegian. If this is indeed the purpose of the opinion page, then Wednesday's edition has failed miserably. When a newspaper allows itself to be used as a public forum for personal attacks then it is no longer valid as a publication in which news and issues may be presented, commented on and/or rebutted.

Granted, the Collegian is not expected to attain the Platonic ideal of a newspaper but I do not think that readers should be exposed to letters which make no attempt to address an issue in any way. Often an letter is printed in which the author manages to squeeze in a bit of personal confrontation which cannot be avoided when a person's name is attached to their ideas; but to allow a person to write a vicious diatribe against another person and have it printed, free of charge, for the entire University to read, as Forster did, is to me totally unacceptable and severely undercuts the credibility of the Collegian's editorial staff.

Students must get involved

This spring, the students of UMass will have the opportunity to create a strong, student-oriented influence on Amherst politics, when the election for Town Meeting is held in April.

This year more than ever it is imperative that we students have proportional representation in Town Meeting because of the important issues currently facing our community. It's crucial that the student population of Amherst have sufficient delegates to voice its concern this year on such issues as the nuclear freeze, PVTA bus service, and housing availability.

For years, we have not had the political input we need to have in order to participate effectively in issues that directly affect our lives. I urge every student to seriously consider running for Town Meeting to help ensure that the dominant force in this town is not silenced.

Because of the recent national election, substantially higher numbers of students should be registered than usual, making this year the perfect opportunity for students to be elected and create an effective political voice within Amherst.

This year, we can show the various local interests and political groups that this is our town, too.

A bland and tired Season

By DANIEL CALNAN
Collegian Correspondent

There's a pretty good idea for a movie here. An attention-deprived serial killer contacts a newspaper reporter and tells him the intimate details of his latest murder. The police want the reporter to continue talking to the killer, hoping that it will somehow lead them to him. The two keep in touch by telephone; the killer does his thing and the reporter gets his exclusive story. Unfortunately, The Mean Season takes this potentially intriguing idea and goes absolutely nowhere with it. This movie contains nothing that is new or fresh.

Taking place in and around Miami during the hurricane (mean) season, the film is merely a collection of cliches taken from the newspaper films of the 1950's ("reporters don't make the news - they only sell it.") We are again introduced to the all too familiar characters whom we already know from every other big city melodrama, (the hard nosed cop, the eager young reporter, the concerned girlfriend...)

Kurt Russell is convincing and on occasion even good as Malcom Anderson, the burnt-out reporter. Mariel Hemingway, who plays his school teacher girlfriend, does not fare quite as well. She looks extremely uncomfortable and appears to be having a difficult time looking scared and screaming while in the clutches of the killer.

Speaking of the bad guy, Richard Jordan portrays the socio-path who only wants a little attention. We've met this generic ghoul before in other films such as Halloween and Friday the 13th.

Director Philip Borsos rarely passes up the chance for a cheap scare. Four times I counted when the audience is supposed to think that it's the killer who's lurking in the shadows, only to discover that it's just the paperboy or someone. (BOO!) After the second time, a Psycho shower scene rip off, it gets to become quite insulting.

I'm not quite sure for whom this movie was made. It is predictable and silly enough for some Junior High literature class field trip to maybe get something out of it. It had little graphic violence and nudity (I'll give it that much), so why the R rating? It certainly wasn't scary.

It's all here folks; the storm hitting at the movie's climax, (yes, the phones do go dead), the indestructable killer, (thought he died back in the swamp, didn't you?) and the corny "here I come to save you" musical back drop. You really needn't see The Mean Season - you've seen it all before.

I got some interesting feedback on last week's small diatribe about the wonders of the capitalist system. They boil down to two points. The first is that there is not much competition in the record business, that is to say that it is monopolized by a few really large companies who are pretty narrow-minded about what they put on. The second is that you can't bring your own bottles of water into the Rusty Nail, without them being taken away, but really, who wants to drink Sunderland water.

At any rate this week is another exercise in diversity. A transporter beam seems to be what's necessary. The proliferal evenings, Thursday, Monday and Tuesday are easy. Thursday Night Toots and the Maytals featuring Winston Grennan are playing at the Red Balloon, which should be really good. In case you're not really paying attention that show is tonight. You know, Thursday.

Monday night the imimitable Skeleton Crew, featuring Fred Frith and Tom Cora return to the Iron Horse for two shows. The last time they played there it was a really good show at the height of comprehensible avant-garde. Cora can play the cello so that it sounds like a highly distorted electric guitar and than a cello again better than anyone I've ever heard.

Makoto Ozone will play at the Iron Horse this Sunday. (Great name! P.W.)

Tuesday night brings Guilty Children a comic improvisation team from Boston to the Iron Horse. They're reputed to be pretty funny.

But what of the weekend? On campus, DJ Afrika Bambaataa will be spinning discs in the SUB, Friday night from 9-1 am. Joining him will be UMass' finest, the B.m.c.P allstarsa. The last time that Bambaataa was here he was backing up the Soul Sonic Force on rhythm machine, saying things periodically like "People of Earth are you ready to Rock?" The transliterated version doesn't really do him justice. Also playing Friday night starting at 7:30 downstairs in the Hatch, downstairs from the SUB that is, is Don't Ask with yes, Voltron and the Funnel Dots. Apparently the video of the Black Flag show will be played as well, or parts of it at least.

Off-campus linds The Mongrel Puppy, The Sighs, The Bamboo Steamers, and Square One will be playing at the Rusty Nail (remember no water). Oh yes, Ace Frehley's new ban will be playing at the Agora in Hartford with Girl's School. If you're disgusted by the last proposal, I think it might be pretty fun, there is an interesting, kinda jazz, Kinda Oregon ensemble called C'est What playing at the Iron Horse. Remember everything in the last two paragraphs is taking place Friday, that's tommorrow night.

Saturday, sure you're not exhausted from Friday? The Del-Lords will be playing at the Blue Wall with Barrence Whitfield and the Savages One people, a fine raggae band who played at the Orchard Hill concert a couple of years ago, remember 'Crosstown Traffic' reggaetized? Opening for them will be DJ Mark Lindsay at the Zone in Springfield. At the Rusty Nail wil be the Jam Band featuring members of Boston, Foghat, Steely Dan, Foreigner, and Joe Perry Project.

On Sunday night Makoto Ozone will be playing at the Iron Horse. Ozone has been playing in Boston for a few years and recently has been playing with Gary Burton. Apparently he is supposed to be the next Oscar Peterson, so go see him while he is still playing small clubs. Folksingers Gorden Bok and Cindy Kallet will be playing at Amherst Junior High at 7:30. This is a presentation of the Valley Folklore Society so you know they won't see you wrong.

OK. Wednesday. The Fools, who played here at the Blue Wall recently will be playing at Pearl Street in Northampton. The UMass Blues Ensemble will be making its debut at the Drake.

Lunch with a vile journalist

THE PLOUGHMAN'S LUNCH
Directed by Richard Eyre
Starring Jonathon Pryce and Charlie Dore
At the Pleasant Street Theater

By JON STRYMISH
Collegian Staff

The Ploughman's Lunch is an English film about an insincere English reporter. It seems to have taken on many deep important themes full force. This movie takes its Englishness very seriously, being sublimely understated to the point of sacrificing all the emotion in an attempt at perfection.

Director Richard Eyre has succeeded in recreating a little slice of life but he leaves it so dry that we wonder if it was worth the try. The one redeeming quality of this British movie is that it gives you the feel and quality of an intellectual foreign movie without the subtitles.

Jonathan Pryce who plays James Penfield, a BBC Radio news writer, looks as if he would fit in fine at The Daily News but would be awfully intimidated in Hollywood. Penfield starts out a conservative and then becomes a socialist, only to return as a conservative hero all in the effort to prove his opportunism. He also spends much of his time trying to fit in with classy friends who make a fool of him almost for sport.

The object of his desire, Susan Barrington, is played by Charlie Dore, whose claim to fame is having sung "Pilot of the Airwaves". Susan is sort of dashing and debonaire and oh so chic, and wouldn't she be glad to tell you about it. Pryce seems to strive for her more than care about her, and this might be one of the keys to the important themes the director has in store for us.

Susan takes a fashionably cynical view of the world. Her mother is a famous liberal writer and Susan has become very conservative as an act of rebellion. She had wanted to be a feminist but saw two choices: lots of sisterly feelings, and guilt or absolute power, and her decision was obvious.

While trying to get on Susan's good side by cozying up to her mother, Penfield accidently ends up in an affair with a much older woman. His friends laugh behind his back which seems a fair punishment for his sins.

This plot summary almost makes the story seem interesting; this might only be through the process of condensation. In the movie, the action is almost lost against a sea of black and white and common images.

Though I would not recommend The Ploughman's Lunch to anyone on the virtue of its thrills, there are many reasons it might be watched for, such as an accurate portrayal of a different part of the world.

on Thursday, February 28, 1985, at 8 p.m.

★Henry report

1. We feel that the pre-arrest room search and the lengthy pre-arrest interrogation raise questions of civil rights violations.
2. We feel that Ms. Henry's minority status may have played a part in the conduct of the investigation and of the arrest.
3. We feel that the Dean of Students Office did not act properly with respect to Ms. Henry.
4. We feel that Ms. Henry's minority status may have played a part in the way that the Dean of Students Office behaved in this case.
5. We feel that there may be some impact on the recruitment of minority students in the future, but we do not at this time have a firm basis for making such a judgment.
6. Throughout the deliberations of the committee two themes seemed to characterize much of the activity surrounding the series of fires and the arrest of Ms. Henry. First, there appears to have been panic among University administrators. Second, University administrators claimed to be helpless, because the investigation was not in their hands. Both of these themes are most disturbing and seem to fly in the face of the very essence of a University.

The committee feels a need to call to the attention of senior administrators of this University the grave responsibility that rests in their hands. We are not referring to the protection of buildings, the maintenance of order, or the conduct of teaching, research, and service. Instead, we are referring the responsibility to preserve the University as a place where deliberate, rational thought must always take precedence over emotionalism.

This responsibility cannot be left entirely to middle-level administrators. The highest levels of University leadership must see to it that any and all actions taken in the name of the University are worthy of taking place at a university. At no time is there a greater need for the emergence of that leadership than during a time of crisis.

Universities as a rule hold a very special (perhaps inviolate) place in most societies with respect to interference from outside entities. It is not altogether clear that the events described here suggest a threat to that special status, but we must all be alert to the possible dangers of turning over complete control of any activity on this campus to an outside organization. The images of Kent State are still all too clear in our memories.

IV. Recommendations

The following recommendations are offered in the hopes that incidents such as the one reviewed in this report will be handled differently in the future.

1. A thorough study should be made of the procedures followed when off-campus agencies are involved in on-campus investigations. The implications of campus control by such outside agencies is not clearly understood by most of those involved in this case.

It seems to us that there needs to be more assurance that the University's interests and responsibilities are recognized and protected even in emergency situations.

2. The responsibilities of the Dean of Students Office related to the welfare of all students, including those suspected of disruptive and dangerous behavior, needs to be clarified.
3. There is a need for more crisis training of campus police and others to help them keep perspective and avoid being entrapped by their own assumptions.

★ The Rutgers game

"It's a big game for us," Gerlufsen noted. "We feel very confident after last week (two close losses to league-leaders Temple and West Virginia) that we can play with anybody."

"We know we can beat Rutgers because we have, but more so because we are playing good basketball. Last time wasn't a fluke like some people might think, and now we are better."

Off the bench, Gerlufsen has added another name to his second unit of Tome Emerson, Darryl Carter, Matt Ryan and Jackie Sheehan. It's freshman forward Wilbert Hicks.

Hicks, a 6-7 product of Hill House High in New Haven, Connecticut, played well against Temple's Granger Hall and according to Gerlufsen can make things happen off the pines.

"Wilbert has given me confidence in him. I wouldn't hesitate to use him again this season in certain situations. He has earned my respect."

MINUTEMEN MUTERINGS: A victory would also give the Minutemen their most victories since the 1977-78 team, it would also set a school record for conference victories. The Minutemen are 5-8 on the road, better than previous seasons and are 7-2 on Saturday afternoons.

Gerlufsen spent part of yesterday talking with New York Knick assistant Rick Pitino about recruiting. Pitino, a UMass graduate (1974) and former Boston University head man, could swing several good players UMass' way, including Gerald King, a 6-5 forward from Brooklyn, N.Y. who is Bernard's brother. Yes, that Bernard. George Washington forward Kenny Barer, a 6-5 freshman who can swing to guard, it rumored to be unhappy with Gerry Gimelstob and the Colonial's three-ring circus this season that has resulted in several good players (Troy Webster and Darry (no relation) Webster) not seeing time. He is interested in UMass, but would have to sit out two years because of the inter conference transfer rule.

UM's point guard prospect, Springfield Chris Bailey, will be visiting Colorado State soon. Let's hope for a blizzard.

Fourth place on the line for UMass

Victory tonight against Rutgers lands tourney bye, best A-10 record

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It's been rare lately that the last two games in the conference season have meant anything for the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team.

Not since 1977 have the Minutemen had anything to gain, other than pride, by winning the season-enders.

But, under second-year head coach Ron Gerlufsen, UMass' program is seemingly back from the depths and can this week, starting tonight at Rutgers, cap what has been a turnaround season.

With a victory at Rutgers (8 p.m. see box) the Minutemen will go to 13-13 overall and 9-8 in the league, good enough for a first-round berth in the Atlantic 10 tournament in early March.

The Scarlet Knights, 83-72 losers to UMass in January, are also 8-8 and need a win. George Washington, the other team at 8-9 and fighting with UMass, is at Duquesne.

The Dukes, at 6-10, must win both its games to avoid the first round game, which involves the bottom four teams in the league. They host UMass on Saturday afternoon.

"We're not thinking about just making the top six, we want fourth place," Gerlufsen said. "It's our goal now, it's one we can reach by ourselves. We don't need anyone to lose. We just have to win."

Should the Minutemen end up tied, head-to-head records will decide the tourney spot. They have at least a split Rutgers and already have split with George Washington, so a coin flip will decide.

But first the Knights. Tom Young's team didn't lose a letterman from last year's 15-3 team that beat UMass twice. 6-2 senior John Battle is the A-10's leading scorer with 22.1 points-per-game. Other key players include guard Brian Ellerbe (who missed the UMass game), Chris Remley and Eric Riggins.

"We beat them with good defense last time, they really missed Ellerbe at the point," Gerlufsen said. "I feel we can still pressure their backcourt and create some offense from doing that."

The Minutemen will start, as they have for the last 17 games, senior co-captains Horace Neysmith (16.0 points-per-game and 9.0 rebounds) and Donald Russell (15.5 ppg) along with freshman Lorenzo Sutton (7.6 ppg), point guard Carl Smith (9.1 pg and 4.4 assists) and senior Bobby Braun (9.2 ppg and 8.6 rebounds). As always, it will be a three guard/two forward setup with Smith, Russell and Sutton in the backcourt and Neysmith and Braun under the boards.

Stockbridge Basketball

Smiarowski leads Aggies to tournament win, 7-6 record

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Led by senior point guard Ron Smiarowski, the Stockbridge basketball team won five of its last six games to finish the season at 7-6.

The Jack Leaman-coached Aggies were 2-4 before the winter break, and after a 48-day layoff without practice, they pulled together to finish with a flourish.

Smiarowski, a 6-0 lead guard who played at Smith Academy for UMass varsity assistant Al Wolejko, averaged 26.5 points per game to set the Stockbridge season and career scoring records. He ended with 655 career points in two seasons.

The Aggies began the second semester beating Greenfield 55-54 on a shot at the buzzer by senior Stuart Smith. They then whipped Hampshire College 63-49 as Smiarowski had 27.

Holyoke Community College took an 82-72 decision from the Aggies before, in the Robert Crown Invitational Tournament at Hampshire, Stockbridge beat Southern Vermont school 59-46 and the hosts 65-54 before ending the season with a 60-51 victory over Williston Academy.

"I'm impressed with the way the players, many of them new, improved throughout the season," Leaman said. "They showed a lot of character towards the end and I'm pleased with the results."

In the Crown tourney, Stockbridge trailed Southern Vermont 24-6 at one point before crawling back to a managable 25-23 deficit at halftime. Smiarowski had 23 points in the win with freshman Mike Luciano adding a career-high 16. Paul Banks has 13 rebounds with freshman Pat Alberini hauling down 11 boards.

"We knew we had a good player in Smiarowski," the coach said. "But the other guys came around well. We were down to seven players at one time due to injury and other reasons, but we picked up some players and hung tough."

Alberini averaged 7.4 points, Luciano had 7.3 average, Banks added six and Smith 6.5. Alberini had an impressive ten rebounds a game, Banks eight and Smith seven. Smiarowski had an average of 8.7 assists per game as well.

Senior Bob Akroyd missed much of the season with a tendon injury, Mark Cullen, a 6-1 forward, and Paul Zarrilli, a 6-2 center, picked up much of the slack. 6-4 freshman Mike Davidsohn also showed promise.

Just a few thoughts...

Well, Red Auerbach has done it again. This time, he's acquired the services of former Knick guard Ray Williams. It is costing Red two second-round draft picks over the next two years. Ray does not quite fit into the Celtics mold, however. Past run-and-gun players, Charlie Scott, Sidney Wicks, and others, have not fared too well while wearing the Green...Williams is not what you would call bashful when it comes to taking a shot either. He shoots from three area codes away and charges it to the team.

Congratulations to fellow UMass student Julius Erving for moving up to third place on the all-time scoring list, passing Elvin Hayes. Dr. J now only has Wilt Chamberlain and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar to pass. He must first pass all his courses at the University without Tests--I mean Walls.

On the college scene, the big shootout was last night with St. John's hosting Georgetown at Madison Square Garden. There's been plenty of empty seats this year at the Garden thanks to the Knicks and Rangers playing with an ever so slight case of apathy...If you're sitting in a chair while reading this, you'd better glue it down, just in case Bobby Knight heads to town. In case anybody missed it, Knight picked up a chair while a Wisconsin player was on the free throw line and abruptly threw it towards the basket. Not what you would call the most sportsmanlike act...If he ever gets fired as a coach he could make it as either a furniture mover or a professional wrestler (more on that subject later).

The USFL's first weekend wasn't a very successful one. They drew poor ratings and lost some big stars to injury. They need some exciting games and good exposure from the media to bounce back...Someone else who needs to bounce back is the QB from the Generals. (I promised a friend of mine never to mention his name in this column again). But he had a very poor opening day last Sunday...What was even more interesting was his interview with the press. One reporter asked him if he thought he was too small to play in the pros. The QB looked as if he was going to take the guy's head off and very rudely said "No comment". It's a long way from Natick, buddy.

Spring training has opened up in Florida and Arizona as the baseball season quickly approaches. It was very sad to hear about Al Nipper and his blood disease, which should keep him out for about two months. Let's all hope for a speedy recovery for one of the more promising young pitchers...Another great youngster has signed with the Mets, and Dwight Gooden, barring the preverbial sophomore jinx should have another great year...Finally, Tuesday night's Grammys featured none other than the Hulkster with Loopy Cindi Lauper. Hulkamania is sweeping the country so start blaring "Eye of the Tiger" before it's too late.

No more need be said.

Hanlon, a Wheeler House resident from Billerica, was hit after she got off a southbound bus (in background) at the Fine Arts Center stop and crossed in front of it. She was still in Cooley-Dickinson Hospital yesterday, with two broken legs and serious facial lacerations. At top right: damage to the car, the driver of which was not injured and was not cited by police, who say the accident is still under investigation.

Senate still won't release Henry report

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

The faculty senate refused yesterday to release publicly the report on Yvette Henry, despite its publication in yesterday's Collegian.

Senate Secretary Robert Jones, said the senate had contacted members of the Committee on the Status of Minorities which had compiled the report by letter to determine if the committee wanted the report public. He added that the Rules Committee was meeting Monday with the committee.

"We respect the wishes of the committee. We don't want to be accused of suppression, but we don't want a committee to walk the plank for it," Jones said.

John Roberts, a zoology professor, addressed the senate and questioned why the report had not been made available to the senate. "The students have seen the report, why hasn't the senate?" he said.

David Booth, chairman of the Rules Committee, which had commissioned the report a year ago, said the completed report had been forwarded to Chancellor Duffey with a number of questions. Jones added that Duffey never responded to the questions.

Booth said that because of personnel changes during the fall semester, the report was never discussed. "The Rules Committee was not as dutiful as it might have been," he said.

Booth added that it "was not clear if the report was written to be published. We do not wish to distribute a report the committee did not want public."

Roberts said the senate "should lose no time in publishing the report."

Jones replied that the senate should first ask members of the Committee on the Status of Minorities what they want done with the report.

Salvatore Meringolo of the University Library requested suspension of the senate rules for discussion, "to get a sense of how the senate feels" about releasing the report.

"The Collegian presented a challenge in today's editorial. They believe the senate should show that it too, believes in the public's right to know," Meringolo said.

His motion to suspend the rules failed, although a previous motion to suspend the rules for a motion on approval for housing of the handicapped had passed.

Although the Undergraduate Student Senate unanimously passed a motion Wednesday to demand release of the report, SGA president Rick Patrick did not mention that motion in his address to the senate.

SAFA Washington-bound

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

Fifty-three University of Massachusetts students and administrators will head to Washington, D.C. Sunday for a four-day lobbying trip to urge Congress to reject President Ronald Reagan's financial aid cutback proposals.

The group also intends to lobby against a federal proposal that would phase out all public bus service over a four-year period. This would affect UMass students who ride the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority buses, who would have to fund the service through bus fares or an increased student activities fee.

Students Advocating Financial Aid (SAFA), a registered student organization, has scheduled appointments with Speaker of the House Thomas P. O'Neil, Congressman Silvio Conte (R-Pittsfield) and Senator John Kerry, (D-Mass.), and hopes to meet with Senator and former presidential candidate Gary Hart (D-Colorado). SAFA also plans to meet with Dallas Martin, executive director of the National Association of Financial Aid Administrators.

According to Arthur Jackson, director of financial aid, Reagan's proposed cutbacks for the 1986 fiscal budget would affect approximately 16,000 UMass students. The proposal would ask Congress to:

•deny federally funded guaranteed student loans to all college students with family incomes above $32,500;

•place a "mega-cap" of $4,000 on the combined level of aid awarded annually per student under the Guaranteed Student Loan, Pell Grant and Campus Based Programs;

•restrict eligibility of Pell grants to families with adjusted gross incomes of less than $25,000;

•redefine the independent student status classification by defining all students under the age of 22 as dependent, except for orphans and wards of the court. Students age 22 and above would have to show evidence of self-support as well as meet the current test for establishing independent status.

Jackson said that of all the students at UMass that receive some sort of aid, more than 4,000 would lose their federal loans, more than 8,000 would be cut back in aid by the $4,000 ceiling, and about 1,500 would lose their Pell grants.

The group will be divided into 13 teams of three or four student lobbyists, including one experienced team leader. Upon arrival in Washington, the group will be briefed by Martin and his associates about the latest developments concerning financial aid. Each team will lobby 12 congressmen and four senators (or members of their staffs) "to find out where they stand" on the issue of financial aid and to try to convince them to vote against the cuts, according to Gerald Grady, a political science professor and SAFA advisor.

Grady, whose legislative process class founded SAFA four years ago, said the major argument the group will be facing on Capitol Hill is that the financial aid cuts are necessary to eliminate the federal deficit.

Grady said SAFA intends to counter that argument by saying that college graduates earn more money than high school graduates and would therefore pay higher taxes.

Students tested for tuberculosis

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

Officials at University of Massachusetts Health Services have tested about 100 students this semester for tuberculosis, after their professor was diagnosed as having the disease, according to a Health Services physician.

Dr. Thomas McBride, director of medical care, said the professor was an Asian woman under 50, but would not identify her.

According to McBride, the testing, done free of charge, was available to calm people who were worried about contracting the disease.

"Tuberculosis is a serious disease, but is not contagious unless people have intimate exposure to it," McBride said yesterday. "Even if people are exposed, they will not necessarily contract it."

McBride said that according to medical records, the woman was diagnosed as having tuberculosis at the end of January and students in her classes were notified in early February.

"The only students who were tested were those who chose to be," McBride said. "All of the tests have come out negative."

Tuberculosis, commonly known as "t.b.," is an infectious disease that usually comes from poor nourishment and inadequate housing, McBride said. "It used to be a common cause of death in underdeveloped countries," he said.

BU requires measles vaccine

BOSTON (AP) — Hoping a measles epidemic at Boston University will end with a week-long spring break, school officials warned homebound students yesterday they must be inoculated or face disciplinary action when they return.

Since the outbreak began a week ago, 55 students have come down with the rash and flu-like symptoms that characterize the disease. About 3,000 more have received free vaccinations at three special clinics set up on campus.

John Keller, a spokesman for the university, said there were no new cases overnight and the epidemic seemed to be abating as students headed home for spring break, which officially begins today.

"Things are quieting down and we hope that we've seen the worst of it," he said.

The school has called off plays and art exhibits and has warned students to avoid crowded rooms and dining halls. On Wednesday night, the ice hockey team performed for an empty arena after fans were barred from the game.

While attacking Sandinistas, Administration sees dialogue

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration opened the door yesterday to a new dialogue with Nicaragua but dismissed as probably meaningless an offer by President Daniel Ortega to send home 100 Cuban military advisers and impose a moratorium on acquiring new arms systems.

"It is relevant to ask why they bother," Vice President George Bush told the Austin Counell on Foreign Relations in Texas. He said the 100 advisers are about 1 percent of the Cubans in Nicaragua and that the army cannot absorb new weapons now.

On the face of it, Bush said in a speech, the steps taken by Ortega "do not appear to represent significant moves."

But Secretary of State George P. Shultz, flying to Ecuador, said he was "perfectly willing" to meet with Ortega next weekend when they attend the inauguration of Uruguayan President Julio Sanguinetti in Montevideo. "I'll listen carefully to what he says," Shultz told reporters.

U.S.-Nicaragua relations were heading toward a boil before Ortega announced his "unilateral initiatives and decisions" in Managua on Wednesday night, producing a subdued although skeptical response from the administration.

Shultz said that in view of the "several thousand" Cuban military advisers in Nicaragua, the withdrawal of 100 would be only a "token" gesture.

"But if the token is something that will lead to rather massive reductions, that's something else again," he said.

As for the weapons system freeze, Shultz said there has been a "rather massive build up of hardware" in Nicaragua "and it may well be that they've gotten what they needed."

Judges order pill warning

BOSTON — In what an attorney called a landmark decision, the Massachusetts Supreme Court yesterday said a manufacturer of birth control pills cannot rely on doctors to warn women about the medication's potential dangers.

"In all other jurisdictions, that warning need only go to the doctor, who is considered a learned intermediary," said attorney John F. Keenan about the decision upholding what amounts to a $1.6 million jury award to his permanently disabled client in her case against the Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp.

"That makes us the first state in the union that requires a manufacturer to warn the consumer directly and that really would be a landmark," Keenan said.

Workers strike at Pan Am

NEW YORK — Mechanics and baggage handlers struck Pan American World Airways yesterday, sending thousands of stranded travelers to competing airlines as union officials warned of a long walkout.

Most of the carrier's 19,000 unionized employees, including pilots, were honoring picket lines set up nationwide by the Transport Workers Union, said Pamela Hanlon, a Pan Am spokeswoman.

The TWU struck after rejecting a 20 percent wage increase over three years plus bonuses, in return for increased productivity and reduced health and pension benefits.

La. governor faces charges

NEW ORLEANS — A federal grand jury indicted Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards and six other men including his brother and nephew yesterday, accusing them of a scheme of racketeering in connection with hospital business deals in which the governor made $2 million.

Edwards, a 57-year-old Democrat in his third term, is only the third governor indicted while in office in more than 50 years.

Fraternity sponsors karate marathon to 'save the children'

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Correspondent

Alpha Phi Omega, the national service fraternity, will sponsor a 24-hour marathon this weekend in the Student Union Ballroom to benefit the Save the Children fund.

The marathon, which will start at 3 p.m. Saturday and end the same time Sunday is a workout featuring demonstrations and instructions of various karate styles, Michael Wall, fraternity president, said.

"There'll be punching, kicking, et cetera. The floor will be matted so people will be able to throw each other. It ought to be a hell of a good time for all," he said. "We'll have people who break boards and things, and weapons on display."

This is the first time Alpha Phi Omega has sponsored a karate marathon. The money raised will be donated to Save the Children, which provides aid for underprivileged children in Third World countries.

According to Wall, Alpha Phi Omega plans to sponsor as many children as they can for two years at a time. "If we make $780, we can sponsor two kids for two years. We'd like to make $1,400 so we could sponsor four kids," he said. "But because this is our first year, and we may not have the exposure, we're not sure how much we'll make."

According to Wall, the participants find people to pledge a donation for each hour spent in the marathon. "On the day of the event, we'll get their sheets and tally up the totals," he said.

Wall credited Kimo Wall, an Alpha Phi Omega advisor, with the idea for the marathon. "We were talking one day and he mentioned an event like this in California about four years ago where 400 attended," Wall said. There will not be that many people participating on Saturday. According to Wall, 80 people have signed up so far.

Wall will be there to demonstrate and instruct in goju-ryu, an okinowin-style of karate he teaches on campus. The UMass Sho To Kan and Shot To Kai karate clubs will also participate.

Also scheduled to attend is Master Mumeet, the world breaking champion for the International Budo Karate Association. "No, that has nothing to do with break dancing," Wall said.

Participation in the marathon is open to everyone, regardless of karate training, Wall said. "Anyone can come. It doesn't matter if they've had no training or if they're a sixth degree blackbelt."

People who are interested in watching but not participating can donate a 25 cent entrance fee, Wall said.

Smut linked to sexual violence

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

Visual depiction of women as objects who enjoy pain and humiliation, who experience pleasure in rape, who are cut, bruised, mutilated, degraded — this is the definition of pornography, according to Kathy Alexander of the Everywoman's Center, who spoke at Amherst College last night.

"Pornography is an expression of male power, not male sexuality," Alexander said, adding that the message given to men through the seven billion dollar a year pornography industry is "look at her, go for it, take it, rape, destroy, have fun."

Alexander, coordinator of the center's Educator/Advocate Program Against Violence Against Women, said, "Women do not want to be raped, hurt, beaten by our lovers or husbands...we do not want to be considered things, sluts, whores, commodities."

She said that due to rumors of sexual assaults at Amherst College and recent reported incidents at UMass, women are afraid to take showers alone in their dorms or watch television late at night.

However, a staff member of the Amherst College dean of students office from Amherst who was present at the lecture said that campus security there had received no reports of rape.

Kathy Alexander

Alexander said that most rapes on campuses are not committed by men jumping out of bushes but as date or acquaintance rape. "Sixty-five percent of women who are raped know their assailant. Many of these rapes are never reported. Also, one out of five collegiate women in serious relationships is experiencing physical abuse," she said.

Alexander said the use of pornographic films for fundraising purposes by university groups and the sale of Playboy and Penthouse magazines in campus stores amounts to "collusion on the part of campus men in keeping the message alive that violence against women is okay."

She cited a New Hampshire study which showed that those states with the highest readership of Playboy and Penthouse also have the highest rate of rape.

Student leaders offer trustees a new resource fee proposal

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

An alternative plan to the Universal Resource Fee proposal was presented to the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees Wednesday by UMass student leaders.

Student opposition to the fee proposal has continued since a rally Monday in which about 300 protesters marched into the Whitmore Administration Building. A student task force plans to set up petition tables in the Campus Center next week.

The proposed fee, a consolidated $261 yearly charge to help repay loans taken out to construct and renovate campus buildings, will be voted on by the trustees April 3. The buildings that need renovation include dining commons, residence halls, and other buildings that graduate and other off-campus students do not use.

At the trustee meeting, Sanjiv Dugal, president of the Graduate Student Senate, submitted more than 1,000 signatures from students, some of whom also spoke out against the proposal.

SGA co-President Jim Keller, who initiated the alternative proposal, said, "We support the idea of a debt service fee to be paid by all students, which includes those debt services which have been paid by all students."

Keller said the task force will continue to keep working on the alternative plan.

"The students came to the trustee meeting and explained how graduate students would be affected under the fee," Keller said. He added that the in the next few weeks, "We hope to get a lot of letters to (the administration)."

Keller said the trustees "expressed sympathy to the problem." He said they felt that the original proposal "does carry a lot of inequities and that it needs more consideration," and that "we have a major problem."

The task force's latest figures indicate that the fee will cost on-campus students an additional $49 to $74 and off-campus students between $195 and $220, depending on whether they are on the basic health plan or the supplemental health plan.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said Monday that if the proposed fee passes, "I hope the Regents will remember this while considering future tuition increases."

Duffey said, "The dormitories have to be renovated, we have to take care of the Campus Center leaks and we have to provide for adequate yearly maintenance now so those problems don't worsen and cost more later."

Fire department recruits students

Members of the student force of the Amherst Fire Department stationed a fire engine outside the Campus Center concourse yesterday to spark recruitment at a table inside.

"It attracts people's attention," said Lindsay Strongen, captain of the student force. "Four years ago, a guy came to one of these tables, signed up, and now he's a full time fire fighter in Amherst.

"What attracted him at first was the engine out front," Strongen said.

At the table, the force distributed applications and information, displayed various fire fighting equipment, and showed slides and films of firefighters in action.

"I think people like to see flames and stuff," Strongren said. "It attracts their attention and makes them notice what's going on."

Strongren said he expects at least 100 applications before recruiting ends tomorrow, and about 10 or 12 of those who apply will be accepted.

The force remains on call when recruiting, and if there were a fire in Amherst, they would be required to fight it, Strongen said.

"There's a number of our guys at this table," he said. "If there were a fire, we would not have time to go to the station first."

Students in any major from UMass, Hampshire, or Amherst College are eligible to apply to the force, Strongen said, as long as they have at least a 2.5 grade point average. Experience is not required.

Women's success honored at UMass

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Next week, women throughout the world will be honored by the ninth annual International Women's Event to be held at the University of Massachusetts.

"To celebrate the accomplishments of women and to say this is who we are and this is what we do," is how the event is described by Elsa Elliot, co-coordinator of the event and member of the women's issues team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

From March 5 until International Women's Day on March 8, the UMass campus will host speakers, films, coffee houses and dances which "promote the diversity and strength of women all over the world," said Lisa Trocki, coordinator of the Women's Leadership Project.

According to Elliot, International Women's Day has been celebrated since 1911, when a garment factory in Manhattan exploded into flames and due to doors that opened inward and no fire escapes, hundreds of women workers were killed.

This tragedy inspired the uprising of 20,000 women who fought for better working conditions, and the holiday was declared in commemoration of women's role in a changing society.

This year's event departs from those of previous years because "it represents a more co-operative effort," said Elliot, noting that not only has the SCERA women's issues team been involved in the planning, but also the Third World women's program at the Everywoman's Center, the Third World Caucus, the Commuter Area Government, and the International Student Association.

"This year we also wanted to make sure of the participation of Third World women," said Elliot, commenting on the "greater third world emphasis" of this year's event.

"The forum for white women is greater than that for Third World women," she said, a gap she believes more multi-cultural events could help to narrow.

International Women's Event will kick-off on March 5

Brazilian scholar shares expertise

Brazilian author and scholar Paulo Freire will be a guest at the University of Massachusetts for the next few weeks to share his experiences as a writer by participating in seminars and lecturing in some classes.

Freire began teaching seminars in the School of Education last week and in the department of sociology and the Institute for Advanced Study in the Humanities.

As a writer of several books concerning education, Freire "hopes to be more useful" during his stay at UMass "by improving and understanding" his own work better.

After receiving a doctorate at the University of Recife in Brazil, he became a Professor of History and Philosophy of Education there, and developed literacy programs out of involvement and research with the peasants of the area.

He also served as a visiting Professor at Harvard's Center for Studies in Education and Development, then later became a consultant in the new office of Education of the World Council of Churches in Geneva, Switzerland.

Since 1980, Freire has been back in Brazil, where he serves as Professor of Education at the State University of Campinas in Sao Paulo.

The last case reported on campus was four years ago, when a young student contracted the disease, according to McBride.

McBride said symptoms of the disease include a flu like illness with a cough. "The symptoms usually disappear but are reactivated later, usually under stress like pregnancy or teenage growth years," he said.

McBride said the disease is treatable usually with three drugs at one time. "It can be cured," he said. "When antibiotics were used, it put it to sleep."

McBride said all employees are required to undergo a tuberculin test when they come to the University. The professor who has the disease had a chronic cough, lost weight and she believed she had pneumonia. "She was Asian from overseas and received an x-ray when she was first employed which showed no signs of the disease," McBride said.

"I don't think anyone in her department is in any danger," he said.

Both sides in CC dispute predict compromise on BOG

By LARRY BOUCHIE
and NANCY BUKAR
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts administrators and student representatives say they are confident that a compromise may soon be reached on an administration proposal to restructure management of the Campus Center.

In an interview this week, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said the original administrative proposal was not a "take it or leave it" plan, and administrators have been soliciting student input and discussing plans with them.

"What I hear is fairly encouraging," Duffey said, "People seem to believe there will be an adequate compromise."

Last December, Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse announced a plan to eliminate the present BOG and replace it with an Auxiliary Services Board. BOG members feared that students would lose control of Campus Center activities which they have been overseeing.

Since then, student government representatives have met with administrators to discuss a compromise and an alternative proposal drafted by the BOG, board treasurer Fran Hegeler said Tuesday.

This proposal provides BOG funding through an allocation from the Student Activities Fee, she said, and retains student representation in the administration of the Campus Center.

"The issue is greater than the BOG as a whole. It's a statement on student government," Hegeler said.

"Ours is a very broad proposal and we're working with this instead of the administrative plan," she said.

Discussion of that proposal centers on the function of the BOG, while the issue of student representation appears to have been mutually agreed upon, Hegeler said.

"Representation is one issue," Duffey said, "and the function of the BOG is another. The final plan may not make everyone happy, because the idea of a reasonable compromise is in the eye of the beholder."

Hegeler said that she hopes the BOG and administrators will be able to present a finalized plan to Duffey by March 15 and that Duffey will pass the plan on to the University Board of Trustees for final approval.

BOG staffers have also been manning a table outside the Hatch this week, soliciting signatures in support of the BOG and collecting nomination papers for next year's board.

Today is the last day to hand in nomination papers, which are due at noon.

Bob Cohen, a member of the BOG for the past year, said the table had been set up to inform the students that there is a governing body in the Campus Center to represent the student's rights.

"We want to increase student involvement to make a stronger board. There's still a threat (to the BOG) and the threat will always be there," he said.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Education needs less federal help

Education is not a matter of federal interest. In the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution, all powers not delegated to the United States are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people. Nowhere in the Constitution is the federal government specifically empowered to provide for the general education of the United States. We must then assume that the responsibility rests with the states, or with the people.

Even if the national government were authorized to provide for education, such a provision would not be in the best interest of the country. The federal government constitutes the nation's largest bureaucracy. Whenever a bureaucracy handles the taxpayer's money, the amount is always diminished by the number of bureaucrats handling it. And bureaucrats aside, the amount of money wasted or dishonestly appropriated in a federal program is staggering. Americans are eager to believe Defense Department nightmares such as the $200 bolt, the $50 washer, and the $700 toilet seat. Why should anyone be appalled to find that the same inefficiency and waste runs rampant in other departments, like Health, Education, and Welfare?

Brian Risler

Not only does our large federal bureaucracy diminish the amount of available resources, it must also exert some control over how the money will be spent. It would be ridiculous for Congress to appropriate money without including instructions for its disposal. As a result, the nation moans when Congress passes a law denying financial aid to male students who have not registered for the draft. Federal financing has also been known to favor physical sciences and other educational programs related to national defense. Education is another example of its economic domination. Since states assumed the right to establish the drinking age, Congress has tried to intervene. The solution? Any state whose drinking age is under 21 will no longer qualify for federal highway funding, a significant portion of state budgets. No economic pressure there.

Education was meant to be handled locally by a smaller bureaucracy which is more responsive to its immediate constituents. If people in a local area choose to spend their money on education, they should have some assurance that it will pass through the fewest hands to achieve its intended goal efficiently — an assurance best promised at the local level.

Why is this now an issue? Because the plan to cut the national deficit is affecting everyone, students in particular. The plan is to divest the national government of all the programs that were never constitutionally intended. Cutbacks are now a reality, just as real as our deficit. No one is asking, or even encouraging the states to pick up the burden of education. The federal government is demanding it. The national government is only undoing what should have never been done: centralizing education.

Can the states manage the responsibility? For Massachusetts, Michael Dukakis has proposed an $8.68 billion budget which anticipates a surplus of $137 million. Yet in the same budget, Dukakis cut back on educational spending for the first itme in years. Did anyone complain? The surplus is real; Massachusetts produced a surplus from last year as well. The governor's own figures show that Massachusetts is ready to do its part for education.

Brian Risler is a UMass student.

Where have all the people gone?

Terry A. Goldberg

As a 5'3", 110 pound woman, I never thought I'd see the day when I could be physically and verbally harassed by a large man (at least a foot taller than myself) at a crowded area bar — and nobody would come to my aid.

It was a Saturday night at a bar in town. I was talking with a friend of mine, Marie, when a loud, obnoxious "gentleman" began to harass Marie and myself, as well as others nearby. He was putting his arms around me, touching me, being a general nuisance. I firmly told him to go away and leave us alone but he persisted. Marie and I tried to ignore his nonsensical comments when he suddenly slammed his hip into me, causing me to spill a drink all over my friend and me. My frustration at this point drove me to leave that area of the bar. As I was leaving, another "gentleman" grabbed at me. Exasperated, I turned around and threw the remainder of my beer at him. He responded by throwing his beer in my direction, splashing everyone in the immediate area. Great.

At this point, one would think that the episode was over, right? Wrong. As Marie and I moved to another area of the bar to avoid another confrontation with the "gentleman," I glanced over and watched as he consumed more alcohol. I assumed he would remain there and find someone new to harass. I was wrong. After approximately 10 minutes, he approached me with a full 16 ounce glass of beer, held it a short distance from my head and threw it up into my face, right into my eyes.

At this point, the crowd was well aware of what was happening. Still, nobody did anything. He began verbally abusing me, calling me a slut. In despair, Marie threw her beer at him. He then took another beer that was handed to him and poured it down her back. He then grabbed Marie from behind in a bear hug. I was so angry and frightened at this point that I grabbed his arm and told him to let go of her. Surprisingly, he did. After telling me that he wanted to hit me, he walked away in all his glory. He got the best of two women.

I have never felt so angry in my life. As the episode occured, people cleared a space so that they wouldn't get in the way. I cannot conceive how the individuals present could not have been fully aware of the scene taking place before their eyes. Not even one "man" tried to put a stop to these unjustified actions. It strikes me as ironic how every individual at that bar, including the bartenders and bouncers, did not take the initiative to rectify a potentially dangerous situation. Fortunately, Marie and I only experienced anger and fear. The next victim he chooses might not escape only dripping in beer and frustration.

A poor excuse for harassing women, accompanied by an apathetic crowd is what caused my anger. So next time you witness an incident such as this one, please help out. I really could have used it Saturday night.

Terry A. Goldberg is a UMass student.

Letters to the Editor—

A loss is a loss, but a win...

The UMass men's gymnastics team wins first place in the New England Gymnastics Championships Sunday and what was the big story on the sports page Monday? The basketball team got beat by Temple on Saturday.

Oh well, at least the fans of the gymnastics team can take pleasure in knowing they were given a few paragraphs in the bottom of the page right below a sappy, "I'm great 'cause I know a little something about basketball" column by Peter Abraham in which he lets us all know how great he thinks one of the basketball players is.

Sorry Pete, but maybe I'm not that good of a basketball fan, but isn't a championship more important than a loss?

Also on the bottom of the page was the story of women's basketball team winning on Saturday. But, the big story was a loss by the men. Thanks to the Collegian's sports editor, we can all see why the Collegian has a reputation for being sexist. Also thanks to the sports page, we know a loss is better than a title and a win.

Commitment or apathy?

I strongly commend the Collegian initiative and courage in printing the complete special report on the Yvette Henry case. I hope it will awaken people to the seriousness of this matter. The UMass community, which prides itself on its progressive values, seems uncharacteristically silent and apathetic on what must be the most flagrant violation of an individual's rights witnessed on this campus for some years. Henry's mistaken arrrest on the basis of a 'psychological profile,' her subsequent atrocious treatment by UMass administrators and the police, together with the apparent lack of will to hold anyone accountable for this incident, makes me wonder whether this community's commitment to civil rights is anything other than merely "academic."

CINEMASCOOP

by Count Ramin Zahed

As today is Gine Da Vinci's birthday (Leonardo's grandmother), and also in the memory of Charles Nash, the vibrant voice of Donald Duck, who died last week, the column will be very short. Keep in mind the important factor that the number of worth-while films in the area is as small as my brain this week.

Opening this week at the Hampsnire Mall is The Sure Thing, another comedy about college kids who get to know each other (in the biblical sense), directed by Rob Reiner who gave us Spinal Tap. Heaven Help Us with Donald Sutherland finally opens at the Mt. Farms Cinemas. Repo Man is back at the Pleasant St. Theatre, and the Academy has a delicate film about an aging artist called Sunday in the Country.

Weekend Winner: Forget about films on Saturday. It is supposed to be sunny, so get out and cultivate your hormones. Sunday night is an ideal opportunity to catch up with your Hitchcock at the Amherst Cinema. James Stewart never had a better looking co-star than Grace Kelly (with an exception of Harvey the invisible rabbit) in Rear Window. You can also see Shirley MacClaine's screen debut in The Trouble with Harry, an extremely witty film about the problems of living with a cadaver. Look out for John Forsythe in his pre-Dynasty days, when he still had a little integrity.

Killer Question: Darcy Jacobs, Mike Jackman, and Jerry Stern correctly identified Madigan and Harris's last project as Places in the Heart. This week is a dead give-away: what was the name of Fred Flintstone's green friend from outer space. The prize, which is the hot Cyndi Lauper Scrapbook, will be awarded to the first person who transmits his answer to my mailbox (with name and time of day) at the Collegian.

Honorable Mention goes to Tony Betros who bravely admitted his dedication to the arts (as well as to athletic events) by attending various productions at the Fine Arts Center.

Heaven Help Us opens tonight at the Hampshire Mall plus a sneak preview of Landis's Into the Night.

Jagger rocks alone

SHE'S THE BOSS
Mick Jagger
Columbia Records

By JONATHAN PERRY
Collegian Correspondent

The only thing wrong with Mick Jagger's solo debut album She's the Boss is its title. It is Jagger who is the boss (sorry Bruce Springsteen fans).

Jagger proves with this album that even after 20 years as the quintessential rock and roll frontman for The Rolling Stones (the quintessential rock and roll band) he has not lost any of the raw energy and style that characterizes his career.

The singer, who, along with fellow glimmer twin rhythm guitarist Keith Richards, has written such rock classics as "Satisfaction", "Sympathy For The Devil" and "Gimme Shelter" has turned out a robust album chock full of spirited cuts and talented musicians.

Jagger has recruited the likes of guitar wizard Jeff Beck, who, featured on six of the album's nine cuts, delivers a searing guitar attack, and keyboard synthesizer master musician Herbie Hancock. Black Uhuru's bassist Robbie Shakespeare and drummer Sly Dunbar provide a solid rhythm section, and ex-Who guitarist Pete Townshend appears on two cuts, "Lonely At The Top" (the only Jagger-Richards song), and "Hard Woman", a soulful ballad complete with a string section led by Paul Buckmaster, who supplied the strings on the Stones "Moonlight Mile" from the classic 1971 Sticky Fingers album.

The music on She's the Boss is as varied as the musicians who play on it. The album is comprised of straight shots of rock and roll, imaginative funk, and a fast-paced reggae tune called "Running Out Of Luck." Through it all, Jagger is in top form, delivering some of the most enthusiastic, versatile vocals of his career. His corrosive, raunchy treatment of "Lucky in Love" and "She's the Boss" (a James Brown style funk rap featuring Jagger's inimitable ad libs) contrasts sharply with his pleading, frustrated vocals on "Hard Woman" and "Just Another Night" (which has received a lot of airplay and is one of the most engaging songs on the album).

"Turn The Girl Loose" is a tightly-wound ball of energy that Hancock and guitarist Nile Rodgers toss back and forth with the monkey man in the middle of it all.

For Stones fans who may regard this album as a foreboding of a band break-up, there is no need to worry. With the signing of a new record contract to Columbia Records last year, and a summer '85 American Tour planned, it is a safe bet the Stones will roll at least a couple of more years. And although it has taken Mick this long to release a solo effort, it has been well worth the wait.

The Shopping Bag: Portable Graphic Art* exhibition from the Smithsonian Institution can be viewed in Herter Gallery through March 15.

The UMass Wind Ensemble will perform in concert on Thursday, March 14 at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

A very boring Quest

VISIONQUEST
Directed by Harold Becker
Starring Matthew Modine and Linda Fiorentino
At the Calvin Theatre
By RENEE BACHER
Collegian Staff

February is usually the month when film studios release their sack of teenage-aimed material around the country. After Duff Turf, The Breakfast Club, Heaven Help Us, and Mischief, Vision Quest arrives to complete the list of mindless, predictable mid-winter pictures.

The plot conforms to the usual schoolboy-in-search-of-love-and-the-meaning-of-life category. Loudon Sway (Matthew Modine) is a pretty average high school jock who, for, some reason, thinks he is deeper than the rest of his geeky peers. Loudon is also a wrestler who sees wrestling as a route to personal glory rather than a team sport. In addition, he understands the poetry his English teacher reads in class.

Then, add the element of challenge: Loudon has gotten it in his head that he is going to beat Colombia High's undefeated wrestler, Shute. So, every day he sports a spiffy rubber suit to class and dines on 600 calories to lose weight to qualify to wrestle against Shute. In the words of one of Loudon's buddies, his dream of success is a 'vision quest'. Hence, the name of the movie.

While this hot pursuit of pie-in-the-sky is progressing, a beautiful girl from New Jersey named Carla (Linda Fiorentino) enters our hero's life. Through some (unlikely) series of events, Carla stays with Loudon and his wholesome family. During her stay, poor Loudon's hormones begin to take their toll on his life, and his virginity becomes a great area of concern. The highlight of the film is a steamy bar scene in which the couple share a dance. The notorious Madonna just happens to be the live entertainment.

The plot resolves in the usual expected manner, and all is well in the end. The film is put together by a slick MTV editing style which will probably make it more appealing to its audience. Basically, if you liked any edition of the Rocky saga, The Karate Kid, the processed version of Rocky, or Fast Times at Ridgemont High, don't miss this gem.

China and Africa linked by history

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

The relationship between the Africans and the Chinese people began through trade and commerce according to a Chinese historian who spoke last night at the University of Massachusetts.

Han Suyin, renowned author and historian said this historical linkage began, "many centuries ago," as recorded in Chinese scriptures.

She began the historical linkage by relating her personal experience. She said she confronted racial prejudice because she was an Eurasian.

Prejudice against the Chinese people began during the Chinese Revolution 144 years ago, she said. "Many punitive expeditions were led into China to punish Chinese "for being insolent enough to be Chinese."

"DuBois and his wife became emblems of the future where there is no color or race," Suyin commented. Suyin has been named as a trustee of the W.E.B. DuBois Foundation.

She compared the plight of the Africans to the Jewish Holocaust. "It's almost impossible to imagine the pain, suffering, and humiliation of 60 million slaves being taken from Africa. Half of them died on the voyage. There's a lot of talk about the Holocaust; what about the holocaust of the African people?" she asked.

Dr. Han Suyin, author and historian, speaks on the linkage of Africa and China last night in the Campus Center.

This history of violence inspired great feeling in the Chinese for Africa, she said. They built the Tanzinia and Zimbawe railway free of charge. China sent some of their best engineers and asked only for local labor.

"The railway was built to get a lifeline to the coast because South Africa was draining the coast of Africa, she said.

"Today the great ideas of DuBois are even more essential. It is not enough to say down with this flag, up with this one, we are independent. We have to do more," Suyin commented.

She emphasized that the tribute being paid to DuBois at the University is a "very vital, seminal, and fruitful beginning."

"This is what DuBois wanted. We shall see in a few years great problems arise. It will be up to the young to take up and go on. There is only one life to live. You must give what you can because that is the only way to live," she concluded.

Filipino oppressed by aid of the U.S.

BY BRADFORD VERTER
Collegian Staff

Ferdinand E. Marcos' dictatorship in the Philippines is repressing the people to benefit American interests, according to Delia Aguilar, who spoke at the Unitarian Church Wednesday night.

Aguilar spoke at a reading of poetry by her sister, Mila D. Aguilar, who has been imprisoned since August 6, 1984 for her dissentist writing. The event was sponsored by Amherst's Food for Thought Bookshop.

Barbara Smith, writer, essayist, editor and a founder of Kitchen Table: Women of Color Press, read from A Comrade is as Precious as a Rice Seedling by Mila Aguilar.

"It is appropriate to have an event of solidarity of the people of the Philippines this month; we must expand the definition of Black History Month," Smith said.

The Philippines is a "neo colony" of the United States, according to Aguilar, as American multi national corporations exploit the Filipino economy and support Free Trade Zones: sweatshops where laborers work for less than 50 cents an hour. The Philippines is an archipelago of over 7,000 islands lying about 500 miles off the southeast coast of Asia.

Marcos has Reagan's "determined support because of the US military bases stationed in the Philippines, according to a dissentist pamphlet published by the Coalition Against the Marcos Dictatorship/Philippine Solidarity Network (CAMD/PSN).

Clark Air Base and Subic Naval Base are "the two largest military installations outside the US," according to the CAMD/PSN pamphlet, which further asserts that the bases "play a pivotal role in US global strategy."

For this reason "the stakes are much higher in the Philippines than in Nicaragua," Aguilar said.

President Reagan has authorized a five year loan for $900 million to sustain the Marcos government, placing the Philippines third on the list of US international concerns, said Aguilar.

In a 1977 report the US State Department criticized the Philippines as one of six nations that violated human rights. The Department recommended continuing the aid the Philippines was receiving from the US because of the importance of the American military bases located there.

The US is protecting its concerns by sending military advisors to aid Marcos in stifling the highly organized oppression, particularly the New People's Army, Aguilar said.

"Since 1972, when martial law was imposed, 70,000 political prisoners have been taken. Torture is systematic, she said, discussing Marcos' policy of "salvaging" the secret execution of Filipino dissentists.

"The Philippines has the semblance of tranquility...but there are 53 million Filipinos who suffer the impact of American intervention," Aguilar said.

Angelou: love helps survival

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Editor's notes: Due to a space limitation on Tuesday's Black Affairs section, a story on the Maya Angelou speech was rather short and incomplete.

Emphasizing on all aspects of love: sensuous, Black, paternal and self-love, Maya Angelou tied their relevance as a means of survival Monday at the University of Massachusetts.

"Love and love alone can be credited with the survival of an entire species," she said. "Love is conditioned in the human spirit so profound that it encourages us to develop courage and then to thrust that courage to build bridges to trust those bridges to reach other human beings."

Angelou stressed people should constantly look at themselves and find in history and literature an image of themselves. Quoting Edna St. Vincent Milay, "I will die and that is all I will do for death," Angelou said. "Remember, we have been greatly loved, we have been paid for."

"Let us live so that we will not regret the years and in dying, we can say all my conscious efforts and energy have been dedicated to the most noble cause in the world: the liberation of the human mind and the human spirit beginning with my own," she said.

Speaking on the social development of Blacks in America, Angelou mentioned the "bizarre" experience Blacks have confronted, so bizarre, "they couldn't be included in that phenomenal Alex Haley's (novel) Roots." She said Black people were able to survive directly by the literature.

Speaking about the future of human kind, at a press conference after the performance Angelou said she was both "scared" and frightened about it. "It is a criminal justice that we have allowed greed, fear, intimidity and ignorance stand on the way of peace, growth and love."

On the civil rights movement, she said the crusade for Black equity in the 1980s "is in a dangerous low. Black power movement groups have fractured. They have been deflected from what they should be dealing with."

Goal Minds

You've set your mind on setting solid goals for business management success. Few industries can offer you the kind of broad business exposure, early profit center responsibility, and first-hand decision-making that food service can. And only TACO BELL can offer you goals for growth that are as ambitious as yours.

Backed by the resources of Fortune 50 PepsiCo, Inc., we've more than doubled the size of our national operations base over the past five years. Grown faster than the food service industry. Faster than the fast food market segment. Our next goal is to double in size again to more than 3,000 TACO BELL restaurants. That will demand people with a mind to be the very best.

If you're a success-oriented graduate who thrives on setting goals, then achieving them, TACO BELL could be your goal mine. Our extensive training program coupled with hands-on experience will move you quickly from the basics to multi-unit management responsibility. You'll enjoy the support of strong corporate resources, including full-scale advertising, marketing, real estate, field construction and human resource services. And you'll advance as far as your talents will take you, not just by chance, but by plan.

Of course, at TACO BELL, you won't find success on a silver platter, but if you've got a mind for leadership, you will find it in some very valuable goals. Find out more. Interviews are being scheduled for Tuesday, March 5. We will also have a Smoker on Monday, March 4.

made it 37-34. Rutgers went back up by seven, 43-36 as Chris Remley (18 points) hit before Horace Neysmith (ten points) scored an inside hoop that cut it to 43-40. He was fouled by Remley but missed the first of the five second half free throws in an attempt to cut the lead to two.

Brian Ellebree, who had 15 points, drilled a three pointer (there were 11 three-pointers in the game) that put Rutgers up 46-40. They up by as many as 15, 66-51.

The Knights took it from there as the Minutemen went cold from the line (11-of-22 in the second half) and couldn't contend with a tough zone defense.

Darryl Carter came off the bench to score 12 for UMass. Smith had 10 and Bobby Braun nine. Eric Riggins had 19 for Rutgers, which shot a fine 14-of-18 from the line.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: In the latest Atlantic 10 standings, Russell is sixth in overall scoring (15.5) with Neysmith ninth (14.5). Battle is first (22.1). Neysmith is second in overall and league rebounding (9.0 and 9.5) with Braun third in both categories (8.6 and 9.5). Smith is fourth in assists (4.4) with Neysmith and Tussell ninth and eleventh respectively.

"It would be nice to break another school record this season, we have a strong enough line up to do it. With two specialists on pommel horse, Mark Quevillon and Steve Ilaia, it should bring that event score a little higher," coach Roy Johnson said.

Competing in the all around will be senior co-captain Ken Dougherty, Joe DeMarco, Eric Greene, and Roberto Weil. Others in the line up will be co-captain Tony Sbarra, Phil Gorgone, and Jay Ronayne.

Other than the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Competition on March 8-9, it will be the last meet of their school career for seniors Pete Lucchini, Dave Sherman, Sbarra, and Dougherty.

"Two years ago we set a record against Springfield at 261.2, broke it against Syracuse last December with 263.3, and there's no reason why we shouldn't do it again tomorrow. We're ready for it," Sbarra said.

In other action, the wrestling team is at the NCAA qualifying meet at Maine, the men's track team is at Princeton for the ICAA championships, the women's track squad is at UConn for the Eastern championships and the women gymnasts host Rutgers at Boyden on Saturday at 1 p.m.

"We know we are the underdog in every game," Hebel said. "But I think the chances of us beating West Virginia are very good. I mean, how many times can they beat us by a few points?

MINUTEWOMEN MUTTERINGS. According to USA Today, the Minutewomen lead the country in field goal percentage 54.90. Hebel leads the Atlantic-10 in free throw percentage and comes off a week in which she was nominated as the Atlantic-10 Player of the Week. If Jerrie Bernier, who scored a season high 23 points in the regular season finale against Duquesne, can pick up where she left off, the Minutemen may well get past West Virginia.

Rutgers drops Minutemen, 86-79

Still get tourney bye as Duquesne loses to GW

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

PISCATAWAY, N.J.— Rutger's guard John Battle scored 22 points to lead the Scarlet Knights to an 86-79 victory over the University of Massachusetts in Atlantic 10 action last night.

It was the third straight loss for the Minutemen, 12-14 and 8-9 in the league, but with George Washington's 99-60 pounding of Duquesne last night, UMass will finish in the top six in the league and get a first round bye in the conference tournament.

Both Rutgers and George Washington are 9-8 in the conference, sharing fourth place. With a victory at Duquesne on Saturday combined with a GW loss at West Virginia and a Rutgers loss at Rhode Island, the Minutemen could still claim a share of fourth.

The Knights, who had four players in double figures last night, got revenge for a January loss in Springfield as they climbed to 14-12 overall.

The Minutemen led early as both Lorenzo Sutton (a team-high 19 points) and Donald Russell (15 points) connected on three pointers for an 8-4 UM lead.

Rutgers took the lead for good on an Ed Zucker free throw that snapped a 16-16 tie. They ran off nine points, going from a 16-12 deficit to a 21-16 lead, a lead they never relinquished.

"They shot the eyes out of the hoop," UM coach Ron Gerlufsen said. "Rutgers played very well. We still have a good shot at fifth and right now, that's our aim."

At the half, Rutgers led 37-30 behind 11 Battle points. The Minutemen closed the gap quickly as Smith hit two technical foul shots and Sutton canned a 17 footer that

UM women in tourney facing West Virginia

Look to maintain hot pace

For the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team, this weekend's Atlantic 10 Conference Championship has been a long time coming.

Despite its 13-14 record, the Minutewomen have won seven of their last 10 and have proven to conference opponents that the respect few have given previous UMass teams has been achieved.

"We've certainly accomplished more this year than last," UMass junior guard Barbara Hebel said. "We've realized that we can play with any team in the conference. Last year we never thought we could."

However, entering tonight's quarterfinal round game against third seeded West Virginia, the sixth seeded Minutewomen will need more than respect to defeat the 18-8 Mountaineers.

Recent 63-60 victors over UMass, West Virginia, led by Olivia Bradley and Georgeann Wells (first and second in conference rebounding), enters the tournament on a down note, according to UMass head coach Barbara Stevens, possibly playing their most inconsistent basketball of the season.

By contrast, the Minutewomen have appropriately chosen the final weeks of February to play their best basketball, and in doing so believe the advantage is theirs.

"I feel that we were very fortunate to have gotten the draw with West Virginia," Stevens said. "West Virginia is the team we wanted to play."

"I think it's fate, that we drew West Virginia because we really want to play them. They are not coming into the tournament on an up note whereas we are," Hebel said.

"They know we can beat them, and I feel that if we're ever going to beat them it will be now."

Keys for the Minutewomen, who play at 1 p.m. at St. Joseph's University Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse, will be the play of the UMass frontline. With Bradley and Wells averaging a combined 27 rebounds per game, many of which are offensive, much of the burden of containing the two will be placed on the shoulders of centers Sue Burtof and Karen Fitzgerald, along with forwards Tara Lewis and captain Jerrie Bernier. Burtof leads the team in rebounding at 8.2 a game. Bradley shredded the middle of the UMass defense in the last meeting between the two teams. If the Minutewomen expect to topple

Last big weekend of winter

Men's hoop battles Duquesne in finale; Gymnasts, swimmers, tracksters vie

By NANCY BUKAR
Collegian Staff

In this, the final full weekend of University of Massachusetts winter sports, several teams face big tests.

Top among these will be the men's basketball team. The Minutemen will be at Duquesne University on Saturday at 2 p.m. If the Dukes beat George Washington and the Minutemen lost to Rutgers last night, the game will decide which team gets a first round bye in the Atlantic 10 tournament (March 6-9 at Rutgers). The game can be heard on WHMP AM and WMUA-FM.

There's going to be a lot of swimming going on this weekend at Springfield College and, if all goes according to plan, the University of Massachusetts men's swim team should be doing the majority of it at the New England Championships.

The Minutemen have 16 swimmers and two divers qualifying this year with some of the best times in New England.

"It's going to be a dogfight- the team to beat is Southern Connecticut but we don't want to forget about Tufts and Springfield College either (two teams that UMass lost to in the fall). We could take first or we could take fifth. It all depends," coach Russ Yarworth said.

Yarworth expects definite first place wins in five of the sixteen events. In the 800-yard freestyle relay, Craig Fuller, Jim Flannery, tri-captain Paul McNeil and Drew Donovan will be tryng for a first. The 200-yard butterfly, always a strong event for the Minutemen, tri-captain Chris Clarke, Mike Minutoli, Steven King and Fuller should also pull ahead.

Donovan, Flannery, McNeil, Jeff Piaget and Paul Hartnett will compete in the 200-yard freestyle. Donovan has the best time in New England for the 200.

Eight swimmers qualified for the 500-yard freestyle: Donovan (first in New England), Fuller, Flannery, McNeil, Mark Waters and Mike Gebauer. The 1650-yard freestyle should also prove to be a power event for the Minutemen with Fullers, McNeil, Waters and Gebauer.

Pat Mullen and Keith Pisani will be diving for the Minutemen. "I hope that they do well. They have the potential to be in the top ten in New England," Yarworth said.

Saturday wraps up the end of the dual meet season for the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team, hosting to Springfield at 7:30 in Boyden Gym.

B.U. measles outbreak concerns UMass officials

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

In response to an outbreak of measles at Boston University, University of Massachusetts Health Services is asking students to make sure they have been adequately immunized against the disease.

All Massachusetts colleges and universities have been asked by the state Department of Public Health to immunize students susceptible to measles.

"My guess is that ten percent of the student population may not be adequately immunized," Dr. David Kraft, executive director at Health Services said.

Students who were not immunized after their 12th birthday or after 1966 should make an appointment for a vaccination shot, Kraft said, adding that people who have had measles can not contract it again.

Health Services does not have accurate data on students' measles vaccination because the question was not included on incoming student's' health questionnaires until this past December, Kraft said.

"But most likely if students have had mumps and rubella vaccinations, then they probably have had a measles vaccine too," Kraft said. Health Services has records of students' mumps and rubella histories, he said.

"My concern is not for a measles outbreak to happen but when students go on spring break, that's the main time for exposure," Kraft said. He said germs will spread quickly when students from all over the country get together during the vacation.

"Students should try to get immunized before spring vacation if they're not immunized already," Kraft said. "It takes 10 days to two weeks for the immunization system to adjust."

Health Services has not treated anyone for measles recently, "so there's no reason to be concerned about an epidemic," Kraft said. He said he hopes students will voluntarily check their medical history to make sure they are immunized.

Measles is a very contagious disease that begins with symptoms similar to a common cold. A fever and rash develops and lasts for a couple of weeks, Kraft said.

Students can make appointments at Health Services Wednesday through Friday when additional staff people will be on hand to administer the additional 500 vaccinations ordered. The immunization involves a shot in the arm and is covered by Health Services fees, Kraft said.

"If a student went through the Massachusetts school system, then most likely that person will have had the shot," Kraft said. He said, however, that other states and foreign countries do not have immunization requirements as rigorous as Massachusetts.

Professor revives a language

By KATIE GARDNER
Collegian Correspondent

Aside from the usual daily duties in his department, a University of Massachusetts Anthropology professor helps to keep a mid-western language from dying.

Zdenek Salzmann, who recently compiled the Dictionary of Contemporary Arapaho, is working with a Midwestern Indian tribe to help maintain and continue its native language.

Arapaho is the language of a tribe of Indians that settled in the Midwest. There is a southern branch of the tribe located in central Oklahoma and a northern branch in Wind River, Wyoming. Salzmann said, "During the past 40 or so years, the Arapaho have made less and less use of their own language."

Proficient use of the language is confined mostly to older members of the tribe. Younger people use English almost exclusively, and, says Salzmann, "to a very large degree are deficient even in passive knowledge of their native language." To help alleviate this problem, oral instruction has been introduced into the school curricula, and the dictionary has been published with the goal of helping high school teachers and their students.

Salzmann first became involved with the Arapaho language in the summer of 1949, when he conducted a study of the Arapaho language for his doctoral dissertation. Salzmann became involved with Arapaho again in 1979 when he met with two representatives of the Northern Arapaho teachers. As a result of the meeting Salzmann was asked to conduct two week long language workshops at the Wyoming Indian High School in Ethete, Wyoming.

UMass professor Zdenek Salzmann: Working to save Indian language

Since that time Salzmann has visited the Arapahos regularly. He travels to Wind River three or four times a year and acts as an advisor to help supervise the school curricula and organize language workshops.

Salzmann's most recent work is producing videotaped lessons of spoken Arapaho for kindergarten and elementary school pupils. He said he hopes that the students will bring the videotapes home and that they will "stimulate an interest with the parents" and continue Arapaho.

Potential co-op program lacks resources to take off

By DANIELA WATERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

More than 10,000 college students throughout the United States and Canada have discovered the advantages of co-operative living as an alternative to tiny dorm rooms and costly off-campus apartments.

At the University of Massachusetts, co-ops would be a logical answer to the housing crunch, but the lack of resources to start them is a problem, Joanne Levenson, director of the Off-Campus Housing Office said.

"The problem is getting them started. It takes money. The SATF (student activities trust fund) couldn't support a project like this and there are currently no housing and urban development grants available to finance it either, she said.

While there may be co-op living arrangements in the Pioneer Valley, none of them are connected with the University.

Co-op houses are owned and run cooperatively by the students who live in them. The cost of co-op living averages $250 per month, including utilities and food, compared to at least twice that for an off-campus two bedroom apartment in Amherst and $638 per semester for a room in the residence halls.

All decisions in a co-op house are made democratically. Money paid monthly by residents represents part-ownership not rent. Each memeber owns a share of the house. Since the co-ops are non-profit, any surplus at the end of the year because of thrifty food buying or lower than expected utility bills goes back to residents in the form of a refund, Sharon Pederson of the North American students of Cooperation said.

"I know a lot of schools have co-ops and they work out really well, Peter Laurent, a senior psychology major said. "I think students at UMass would benefit from co-op living.

Kim Bushy, an education major, currently lives in a house in North Amherst and said the idea of co-op living appeals to her.

"I think it would be really good experience, but it would require an awful lot of money of get a project like this started.

"Unless it was supported by the University, I don't think it could work," she said.

British coal miners end violent strike

LONDON (AP) - Faced with collapse of its 357-day-old strike, the miners' union called off the longest and most violent walkout in British history yesterday. It ordered coal miners to return to work tomorrow without an agreement of a promise that fired workers would be rehired.

The announcement was a victory for Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who came to power in 1979 intent on curbing the country's powerful labor unions.

There was no immediate comment from Mrs. Thatcher but Energy Secretary Peter Walker said he was "absolutely delighted that this tragic dispute has come to an end." He said it had damaged the industry and split the unions.

But the Marxist leader of the National Union of Mineworkers, Arthur Scargill, called the strike "a tremendous achievement" and warned that his union will continue to fight plans by the state-owned National Coal mines the key issue in the dispute.

Coal Board spokesman Michael Eaton said the industry did not welcome Scargill's announcement that "the battle continues."

Mass. rep. fights for harbor tunnel funds

WASHINGTON (AP) Massachusetts deserves to build a third Boston Harbor tunnel and to depress the Central Artery highway because it gave up other interstate highway projects for that purpose, says Rep. Chester Atkins, D-Mass.

"I have never seen a government project that was so misunderstood and that has been so misrepresented," Atkins said in an interview last week.

The interview came the same day Atkins met with house Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., and others to decide to put off the major legislative battle over the projects for another six months.

House leaders decided to delay action on all potentially controversial highway projects to clear the way for an unencumbered bill to be passed to release $7.2 billion in interstate highway funds nationally, including more than $260 million for Massachusetts.

But Atkins, a member of the Public Works and Transportation Committee that oversees highway legislation, says the two Boston projects never should have become such an issue.

Under the interstate system, the federal government collects gasoline tax revenues and returns them to states under an aid formula.

In the case of Massachusetts, Atkins said, some of the money was converted to mass transit projects and then under Gov. Francis Sargent, the state simply stopped spending some of the dollars.

Thousands of marchers turned out yesterday for the reenactment of the 1965 Selma to Montgomery civil rights march. Marchers crossed the Edmund W. Pettus bridge, where marchers clashed with police 20 years ago.

Blacks celebrate 20 years of suffrage

SELMA, Ala. (AP)—Blacks celebrated the 20th anniversary of the voting rights march from Selma to Montgomery with a new pilgrimage yesterday to "resurrect the spirit" of the civil rights struggle.

"We have unfinished business," said the Rev. Jesse Jackson as several hundred blacks assembled for a symbolic mass crossing of the Edmund Pettus Bridge to start the five-day journey. Police clashed with black marchers at the bridge across the Alabama River on "bloody Sunday" in 1965.

The march ends Thursday at Alabama's capitol and follows the route that helped change the nation's political landscape by opening polling booths across the South to blacks.

At Brown Chapel, a landmark of the 1965 voting rights protest, Jackson and march organizer the Rev. Joseph Lowery were given keys to the city by Selma's white mayor, Joe Smitherman.

"We have come a long, long, way," said Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. "But we have a long, long, way to go."

Jackson called Selma "hallowed ground" and said yesterday's demonstration was "to resurrect the spirit of our struggle."

After a worship service, marchers formed ranks outside Brown Chapel for the eight-block walk to the bridge.

Smitherman, who acknowledged that he opposed the marchers 20 years ago, said the goal now is "to cut out all this foolish race-baiting." At one point during the church service he shared a hymnal with Jackson as they sang "The Battle Hymn of the republic."

"We recognize, from the governor's office on down, that every American should have the right to vote. We need jobs and it's going to take blacks and whites working together to get those jobs," he said.

SCLC officials organizing the march said those arriving for its ceremonial opening leg included Coretta Scott King, widow of Martin Luther King Jr.; Urban League President John Jacobs; and Benjamin Hooks, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Also taking part was Atlanta City Councilman John Lewis, whose head was clubbed on March 7, 1965, when state troopers and mounted sheriff's deputies turned back some 600 marchers at the Edmund Petus Bridge across the Alabama River.

Fat people overeat to alter mood, not hunger

CAMBRIDGE (AP) Many fat people crave carbohydrates and gobble down between-meal snacks because these foods increase levels of brain chemicals that improve their moods, some researchers believe.

The theory, based on a series of recent studies, suggests that overweight people may eat too much because of an urge to change the way they feel, not because they're hungry.

The latest of the studies, published in the March issue of International Journal of Eating Disorders, was conducted at Massachusetts Institute of Technology by Drs. Judith and Richard Wurtman.

Carbohydrates can be either sugar or starch, and those who crave them often snack on foods like candy bars, potato chips, doughnuts and crackers. Mrs. Wurtman estimates that at least half of all obese people crave carbohydrates, and this is why they're fat.

"They clearly are eating the food because of a biological need to improve their feelings," she said. "It really comes out of a need to make more of this particular chemical" in the brain.

These researchers believe that the cravers grab a snack when they feel irritable or have trouble concentrating. The carbohydrate is absorbed into the blood. Through a complicated chain reaction, it increases the brain's production of serotonin, a message-carrying chemical known as a neurotransmitter. This, in turn, somehow influences mood and makes them feel calmer and better able to concentrate.

University students work together to protect public safety

Student firefighters volunteer on campus

By DEBORAH BRUNO
Collegian Correspondent

The scenario includes one or two Amherst Fire Department fire engines, an ambulance and some firefighters in front of the tower library who don't quite look old enough to fit the description.

While dressed in the garb and gear as the professionals, a student force along with other volunteers learn how to become firefighters. Part of the training involves practicing how to reset the elevators in the library by first using a fireman's key to make the elevators come down to the first floor. This is done, according to Amherst fire chief Victor Zumbruski, in case of a real fire and elevators have to be reset after the fire is extinguished.

The firefighters are divided into three forces- a student force trained on Wednesday nights, full time firefighters who train everyday, and a call force on Tuesday nights.

The student force is made up of 10 volunteer members including two females and some UMass students.

Bryant Tarr is a Lieutenant on the student force and a UMass junior. He has been on the force for three years and says that the student force is different from the call force in that "the call force gets paid when they are called out or when drilled. It's their second job, and they are on call like us. They also carry beepers," which sound when the firefighters are needed.

To be prepared for an emergency, the student force must train and drill. "We drill quite a bit, once a week for three hours, and also once a month on Saturdays," Tarr said. Drills are mandatory and examples include live car fires, and a smoke-house drill in which "a house is filled with smoke and we are sent in to learn how to get oriented, how to search, and how to rescue," Tarr said.

The drills represent "all aspects of firefighting and medical work" Zumbruski said, including rescue work, ambulance training, and CPR (cardio pulmonary resuscitation).

"The whole town of Amherst is used as a drill site," Zumbruski said and at any given drill firefighters and an ambulance crew may be called to the University. Zumbruski said that they try to stay off campus as much as possible and use the campus facilities during intersession and summer.

Medical technicians treat peers at UMass

BY CHRISTOPHER SKLARZ
Collegian Correspondent

Last spring, at one of the outdoor concerts, four students treated about 60 of their University of Massachusetts colleagues for small injuries sustained at the show.

These students are emergency medical technicians who work as an extension of the Environmental Health and Safety department.

"The UMass Fire and First Aid Unit is a student-run group that performs fire prevention and basic first aid services for the community," group advisor Keith Hoyle said.

The group covers events at the Fine Arts Center, Bowker Auditorium, some UPC concerts, area and spring concerts, and on-campus football and basketball games providing first aid to any injured spectators.

"We're there to help make sure no one gets hurt and everyone has a good time," group treasurer Jeff Durkee said.

The unit also assists the Amherst Fire Department in UMass fire drills. If a fire alarm is broken in a dormitory members go in for a 24-hour fire watch.

"I think most of us do it to keep active as EMTs. Also it's a good chance to see a show or concert you might normally not see," Durkee said.

Many symptoms associated with PMS controlled by diet, says local nutritionist

By MARIANE MEUSE
Collegian Correspondent

Diet plays an important part in controlling the symptoms of pre-menstrual syndrome (PMS) and women should adjust their eating habits to cope with the problem, according to local nutritionist Vita Andras, and a UMass graduate in Health Studies, Sharon Zawelski.

Speaking last week in a workshop on PMS, Andras and Zawelski outlined a number of diet changes women could make to alleviate the problem.

According to Andras, over 150 symptoms are associated with PMS, including anxiety, fatigue, depression, water retention and hyperglycemia.

She also said the syndrome affects an estimated five million women in the United States and symptoms begin near the time of ovulation, ceasing on the first day of menstruation.

Andras said that her own experience of PMS confirmed the theory that diet is of vital importance in combating the problem.

In particular, she believes "that most of the refined and processed foods we eat are not particularly healthful," because they tend to interfere with the hormone balance and thus contribute to the PMS problem.

Andras recommended substituting honey or molasses for refined sugar and she cautioned against eating any fatty meat.

"If you're eating meat," she said, "do your best to get meat that is lean."

Caffeine was also cited as a cause of PMS and Andras suggested "you can drink decaffinated coffees, herbal teas and juices as substitutes."

However, she commented to be wary of "97 percent caffiene free coffee," because regular coffee has six percent caffeine and thus only half of it has really been removed.

Zalewski was cautious about the use of drugs and suggested "If you are going to take PMS medically, take it slowly and ask a lot of questions."

Andras commented that the effectiveness of many drugs prescribed for PMS is questionable because of inadequate testing.

Women in the ares interested in forming a local support group for PMS sufferers, were advised to call the Everywoman's Center at 545-0883.

U.S. position in Nicaragua addressed in a UMass forum

"What Should Be The U.S. Role In Nicaragua?" will be the topic of an open forum tonight between the Western Mass. Latin American Solidarity Committee and the UMass Republican Club.

History major Steve Viarengo, 23, said he organized the forum earlier this semester because there was "a need to resolve contradictory information about the U.S. role in Nicaragua.

"It's a complicated issue and it's hard to know exactly what is going on," he said. "The emphasis is on community participation and education and we are encouraging a community response."

The forum will begin with presentations by UMass Republican Club and WMLASC panels of four representatives, the panels will address and question each other, and then questioning will come from audience members at open microphones.

The forum is sponsored by the Collegian, SCERA, and the Student Governnient Association and will be at 7:30 p.m. tonight in the Student Union Ballroom.

Navy Gold:
Forged in a Tradition of Excellence

Because the Officers wearing it are the best in the world at what they do . . . they have to be

It takes a special breed of aviator to meet the challenges of Naval Aviation. Strong, dedicated professionals who can control the world's most sophisticated aircraft. There's no room over the oceans for aviators that are second-best.

Beneath the surface pulses a unique environment few will ever challenge. Only an uncompromised standard of excellence earns a submariner his dolphins. The Navy's Nuclear Propulsion Officers wear them.

Going down the path to war

Marc Kenen

Editor's note: At 7:30 tonight in the Student Union Ballroom, a public forum on Nicaragua will take place featuring the UMass Republican Club and the Western Massachusetts Latin America Solidarity Committee

Our purpose in participating in tonight's forum is to give the student body an opportunity to hear a different point of view than that being expressed by the Reagan Administration and a chance to challenge both points of view. At the heart of American democracy is the opportunity and, more importantly, the responsibility of every individual to participate in the decision-making process. In order to do so, one must have the necessary information available in order to make an informed and responsible decision. Without participation by the population, democracy fails.

In our society it has become increasingly more difficult to exercise this right. We have come to the point where half of our population eligible to vote in presidential elections chooses not to do so. Now we have leaders voted into office by only 30% of eligible voters taking us down the path of war with a neighboring country. We, as Americans, have a responsibility to ourselves, to the Nicaraguan people, and to the rest of the world to think carefully about our path of action, to know the facts and to make intelligent, rational decisions. President Reagan seems to think that if he tells a lie enough times, it becomes true. He scoffs at Congress, our elected representative body, and ignores international law. It is time we rise, as a nation, and say no.

We do not approach this forum with the goal of being better "debaters" or "experts". Our hope is that you will come and participate. Listen to the presentations and challenge both sides with questions that will help make responsible decisions. This country still belongs to us. Not to the corporations, not to the military, and certainly not to Ronald Reagan.

If you, as an individual, feel that you know the facts and have made decisions concerning this issue please come and share them with others. Communities all across the country are coming together to discuss this crucial issue. History hangs in the balance. We must understand the consequences of our actions and the motivations behind them. The war being waged in Nicaragua takes more lives and destroys more of the economy everyday. It is being waged with your tax dollars. The blood of Nicaraguans is being spilled. It is not just something on the evening news. It is very real. There will be people at the forum who traveled there and experienced, first hand, the agony and suffering we are causing. They want desperately to share this with you.

Must we wait until American blood is shed in the mountains of Nicaragua? Let us stop this madness now. No matter how much we bury ourself in our books we cannot escape this responsibility. Let the policy be the people's. If the people lead the leaders will follow.

Marc Kenen is a member of the Western Massachusetts Latin America Solidarity Committee.

U.S. involvement justified

Peter Dow

Tonight the entire student body has the opportunity to hear two opposing views concerning the U.S. role in Nicaragua, from which you can hopefully draw the correct conclusions.

The UMass Republican Club is one of the participants, the other being the Western Massachusetts Latin American Solidarity Committee. The UMass Republican panelists will be assuming the view that the United States has a moral commitment to assist the freedom fighters in Nicaragua; not only for the benefit of the Nicaraguan people, but also for the security of the surrounding pro-American governments in Costa Rica, Honduras, and El Salvador. Our position is drawn from historical analysis of similar revolutions is Cuba, and its effects upon the Caribbean area. In addition, the internal and foreign policies of the Sandinistas should be seriously questioned by the American people for future American security rests upon the recognition of the communist threat in this hemisphere.

The U.S. was not always so hostile to the Sandinistas; indeed, the U.S. (under Jimmy Carter) provided crucial support for the Sandinistas in their struggle against Somoza. From July 19, 1979, when the Sandinistas were victorious, until January 1981, the U.S. government provided $142.6 million to the Sandinistas, all the while assuming that the Sandinistas were adhering to their promises of instituting a democracy. But the Sandinistas continued their unprecedented military buildup even during this period of U.S. assistance. And, by 1981, many of the original Sandinistas joined forces with some ex-National Guardsmen and became the freedom fighters now supported by the U.S.

The disastrous effects of the Sandinista policies have been felt by nearly all the Nicaraguan people. First, religious freedom has been attacked by the Sandinistas since 1979. One example involves the persecution of the Jewish community. The PLO provided the training and supplies, and the Sandinistas adopted their ideology and tactics. The Sandinistas then proceeded to harass and arrest the Jews, confiscating businesses and private property, and ultimately torching their Managua synagogue. In the end, the Sandinistas forced every Jewish family into exile; even today, such totalitarian policies of the FSLN are still strong enough to repress any attempts at developing a Jewish community in Nicaragua.

Additionally, what about the brutal treatment of the Nicaraguan Indian peoples? American leftists do, indeed, find this "unfortunate," but then dismiss this case of FSLN oppression in the name of furthering "the revolution." In fact, some 43,000 of the 165,000 Miskito, Sumo, and Rama people along the eastern coast are now either in Sandinista concentration camps or in Honduras or Costa Rica as refugees. In addition, about 5,000 have joined the NDF (the Nicaraguan Democratic Force) in the fight against the FSLN. Most Indian villages have been destroyed by the Sandinistas, using massive military battalions and heavy air power that sweep through the Indian territory, destroying everything in their path.

These are only a few examples of Sandinista brutality that justify a strong U.S. influence in Nicaragua. For more detailed arguments, attend tonight's open forum on Nicaragua and learn why the U.S. must support our allies in Central America.

Time to give a little back

William J. Spain

I think we all probably agree that there are a lot of things needing to be done in this country and on this planet. Overseas, thousands of kids die of starvation every day, deserts are advancing by leaps and bounds and millions spend their lives under totalitarian governments. Here at home, industrial poisons seep into our air and water, the homeless freeze to death in the streets and the infrastructure of highways, railroads, and canals slowly crumbles away. Depressed yet? You should be.

Hold on a minute, there seems to be something that would go a long way towards solving many of these problems. No, I am not referring to nuclear war. What I have in mind is almost more drastic than that. The time has come for the United States of America to institute a system of compulsory national service for all young men and women.

That's right - bring back the draft. No screwing around with lotteries or deferments this time, though. Everyone, whether they are black or white, rich or poor, gay or straight would have to do their two years. However, it would not necessarily have to be done in the military. Conscripts would have a choice of where to serve. Those who do not wish to be in the armed forces would be put to work in a massive civilian program along the lines of the Peace Corps or VISTA.

The potential benefits of a properly managed national service organization are tremendous. A major influx of draftees would help reverse what is becoming an increasingly disturbing trend in the army, navy, air foce, and marines. At present, the volunteer service is mostly made up of career-oriented professional soldiers. Unfortunately, many of them can be described by another name. That would be, of course, mercenaries. Conscription would insure that our national defense is manned by people whose first loyalties are to their nation and themselves, not to the Pentagon. You can't buy protection like that with a million "Be all you can be" ads.

Meanwhile, the civilian branch would be hard at work creating things worth protecting. I do not think that we would have much trouble keeping them busy. There are plenty of places that need help. A few examples are: forestry and land reclamation, mental health centers, daycare centers, pollution control and famine relief. The list could go on and on. There is no reason to restrict it to the U.S., either. Lots of countries would be thrilled at the prospect of groups of unarmed and highly motivated young Americans coming to help out. Most of us are good with people, familiar with technology, and basically neighborly. All we need is the machinery to get it going.

Such a program would do a hell of a lot for everyone involved. I can think of nothing that would have a more positive effect on our collective consciousness. It would be a great way to bring this country together. Racial and ethnic tensions would be sure to ease as the citizenry gets to know each other better and realizes that we are all human beings first.

There are sacrifices involved. Apart from the expense to all taxpayers, people will be asked to give several years of their lives. That really isn't so horrible when you think about it. After all, the last 20 years have brought a great many new freedoms to the young people of America. These days, we are pretty much free to make love, take drugs and chase the big bucks to our hearts content. Is it asking too much for us to start giving a little back?

Letters to the Editor

Why is a victim an alleged one?

My question is this: Can a person be allegedly robbed, murdered or assaulted? Then why is it possible for a woman to be allegedly raped?

The word alleged is usually used to describe a person or persons who are suspected of participating in a crime. Yet on Feb. 26 Collegian readers were led to believe a crime may or may not have taken place.

"Alleged" is used to refer to a criminal suspect to protect his rights of being considered innocent until proven guilty. When applied to a victim he/she becomes guilty until proven innocent.

Unfortunately, this rationale is all too often used when rape is the crime. I have not seen "alleged" used when you print other crime reports. I suggest you use it for all crimes or none at all.

I believe the Collegian mislead its readers. This could prove to be dangerous to women who live on campus, especially those like myself who live in that area (Butterfield). Most importantly you implied that the victim could have lied through her teeth. This is especially insulting and detrimental to her and to all victims of such a crime.

THE PARTY'S OVER COME GRADUATION. OR IS IT?

Right now, many college seniors are understandably... well, nervous.

The prospect of donning a pin stripe suit, putting one's nose to the grindstone or doing battle in the corporate world is enough to send many seniors off to graduate school. But the future doesn't have to be that bleak. In fact, if you knew what kind of job was waiting for you at TGI Friday's*, you'd be chomping at the bit to graduate.

Imagine a job managing a hot restaurant that grosses $3.4 million annually, with 150 employees and 180 menu items.

A job with a company that has over 100 restaurants in over 31 states... with new ones opening in 1985.

A job with a twelve week training program and a five day work week.

A job that pays you well and is filled with perks.

A job where you meet new people every day, and that you'll hate to leave at night.

A job where pin stripe suits aren't allowed.

If that's the kind of job you're looking for, TGI Friday's is looking for you.

We'll soon be on your campus. Contact your placement office for interview dates and times.

An Ace rocker

Frehley's Comet Concert
Friday, March 1
at the Agora Ballroom

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

I'm sure that headline will catch the eye of any KISS Army members out there. But for those of you who aren't fans of the glitter rock madmen from Manhattan, take heed. One of the best guitarists ever to grace a stage is trying to make a comeback.

"Space" Ace Frehley, the lead guitarist of KISS in their heyday, made his first live appearance in four years Friday night at the Agora. A packed house, most of which was pretty mellow during the hour-long opening set by Girlschool, rushed the stage to catch a glimpse of the new "Frehley's Comet." The band is a definite "Son of KISS," with a pounding backbeat and searing solos that threatened to rip your head off.

Frehley's guitar skills were unimpaired by the auto accident that forced him to quit KISS in 1980. The lead guitar solos on "Rip It Out," from his solo album, and "Cold Gin" (remember that one?) were fast and high-pitched. Frehley made hand gestures to the engineers about five times to raise the volume on his axe, and the effort was worth it.

The crowd was quieter during "Stranger in a Strange Land," which was one of the Ace's post-KISS tunes, but "Back in the New York Groove," Frehley's solo hit, got the crowd dancing in what little space they had to move.

The "Comet" played mostly originals, with the exception of Ace's songs and a great version of "Deuce." Frehley's famous smoking guitar was only one of the imaginative gimmicks he used, although they were admittedly smaller-scaled than in the days of fire-breathing and exploding drum sets.

By the way, KISS' only New England appearance this spring will be March 28 at the Springfield Civic Center, and it will be general admission. W.A.S.P. will back them up, and it promises to be a spectacle on the same idea as their famous earlier tours.

Frehley's charisma never wavered, even though he was obviously buzzed. The crowd loved him, and he responded in kind with some scorching leads, better than usual vocals and an all-around great show.

You Are Invited by UNION COLLEGE
To Discuss Our GRADUATE MANAGEMENT PROGRAMS
Monday, March 4, 1985
Campus Center Concourse

A representative of Union College's graduate institute of Administration and Management (Schenectady, N.Y.) will be on campus to discuss its graduate management programs in PRIVATE SECTOR MANAGEMENT, ACCOUNTING and HEALTH SYSTEMS ADMINISTRATION. You will have a chance, in an informal setting, to learn about our unique education opportunities.

Our programs are designed for students from all academic majors including ones with NO PRIOR academic education in the business or accounting field.

We only offer graduate programs, so students do not have to compete with undergraduates for faculty time.

We teach in small classes (average of less than 20 students and a maximum of 40) allowing for maximum faculty/student contact.

We have a number of internships in the Accounting and Health Systems Administration programs which allows students a good mix of academic education and practical experience.

The PRIVATE SECTOR MANAGEMENT program provides strength in the areas of computer information systems, operations management and international management preparing students for positions in a variety of industries, including high-tech companies. The ACCOUNTING program prepares students to enter the field of public accounting and qualifies them to take the C.P.A. examination. The HEALTH SYSTEMS ADMINISTRATION program prepares students for various management positions in health related fields and is one of the few programs in New York State accredited by the Accrediting Commission for Health Services Administration.

For more information please come to discuss your questions with a Union College representative.

Minutewomen eliminated from tourney

Drop 70-60 overtime decision to West Virginia, finish at 13-15

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team finished out its season with a tough 70-60 overtime loss to West Virginia in the first round of the Atlantic 10 tournament on Friday in Philadelphia.

The women finished the season at 13-15, improving from last season's 10-17 mark as second year coach Barbara Stevens continues to better the team.

The Mountaineers also eliminated the women last season in the tourney, 73-65. Penn State also advanced in the first round, pounding Rhode Island 102-50.

Coach Stevens and the team were on the road yesterday and no information was available. A complete report on the game and a look back at the season will apear in the Collegian tomorrow and Wednesday.

★ Donovan leads swimmers to third in NE

Donovan demonstrated his prowess in the pool on Saturday with a first in the 100-yard freestyle time of 46.03. The 500-yard freestyle saw Donovan's 4:34.76, a meet record, followed by Fuller in second with a 4:36.96.

McNeil and Flannery took ninth and tenth respectively.

King finished third in the 100-yard butterfly with a 51.76 and the 100-yard backstroke saw Surette in fifth with a 1:01.64 and the 400-yard freestyle relay team of Flannery, McDonough, Hoover and Eric Schmidt finished eighth. Pisani finished eighth in the three-meter diving competition.

★ Gymnastics

Eric Ciccone took an 8.95 and first place on vaulting with a pike tsukahara.

On the parrallel bars DeMarco and Weil tied for first with an 8.7.

To end the meet with his last collegiate performance, co-captain Tony Sbarra easily took first on high bar with a 9.25, and Phil Gorgone second with a 9.0.

Weil took first in the all around with a 52.55, ahead of Ciccone with a 51.6, and DeMarco with a 51.4.

The four extra points achieved on pommel horse compensated for the abundance of falls during the meet -- not sticking dismounts and tumbling passes.

"We didn't really have a very good day," coach Roy Johnson said. "If we had stuck more dismounts we could've broke a record, because a half point is deducted for each fall."

The men, now 7-4 are preparing for the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics Competition next weekend at Springfield. The women, who finished at 6-10, are waiting to find out who qualifies for the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Competition on March 16, at New Hampshire.

Minutemen roll, 68-59

Finish tied for fourth, face Rutgers in tourney with win over Dukes

By STEVE COOPERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

PITTSBURGH - The University of Massachusetts snapped a three-game losing streak as senior co-captain Horace Neysmith scored 25 points and hauled down 13 rebounds to lead the Minutemen to a 68-59 victory at Duquesne on Saturday.

UMass caught both Rutgers and George Washington for fourth place in the Atlantic 10 as the Scarlet Knights were upset by Rhode Island 71-69 and West Virginia beat the Colonials 73-63. All three teams finished at 9-9.

A coin flip decided the tournament seedings and the Minutemen were paired with Rutgers in a quarterfinal game on Thursday at 7:30 p.m. George Washington faces St. Joseph's at 12:30 p.m.

St. Joe's downed Temple on Saturday, giving West Virginia sole possession of first place at 16-2.

The win gave UMass its most victories since in the 1977-78 season and for the first time UMass will not have to play in the preliminary round of the conference tournament. The tourney, at Rutgers, gets underway on Wednesday.

UMass, which was picked for last in pre-season coaches polls, trailed at only 2-0 and 4-0 on Saturday as balanced scoring and strong defense keyed the victory.

Senior co-captain Donald Russell added 16 points, freshman Lorenzo Sutton continued on his tear with 15 with senior forward Bobby Braun getting four and six rebounds. Guard Collin Dobbs had 18 for the Dukes, but high-scoring Rick Suder was held to just 10 by the Minutemen.

But it was Neysmith who controlled the game, hitting seven of 13 shots from the floor and 11-of-16 from the line in one of his best efforts.

UMass, 13-14 overall, took the lead for good at 5-4 on a Sutton jumper from the wing after a Jackie Sheehan feed.

They led at halftime, 30-25 as reserve center Tom Emerson dropped in an 18-footer from the corner with a second remaining in the period. Neysmith had 13 points in the half.

In the second half, Duquesne climbed back to within two, 51-49 with four minutes left, but a foul shot by Neysmith and a Russell layup but the margin back to five and UMass cruised in from there.

"I'm real happy with this. We played well enough to win tonight and we just have to sharpen a few things up for the tournament," UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen said. "We increased the defensive intensity and we did a nice job in the first half (during which they held the Dukes without a field goal for a stretch of 13:38)."

"This team is one of the most together I've been on in four years," Russell said. "We had a little trouble getting established tonight, but we got it together and pulled away. It was a good effort."

But the senior guard also cautioned, "Rutgers will be tough, it's in their gym and we have to come prepared."

Senior co-captain Horace Neysmith had 25 points and 13 rebounds in Saturday's 68-39 win at Duquesne.

For the game, UMass was 24-of-57 from the floor (42 percent) and 19-of-29 from the line for 65 percent. They committed an unusually high 18 turnovers, but outrebounded the Dukes 44-25.

Swimmers pull third in NE's, Donovan stars

Yarworth Coach of the Year

By NANCY A. BUKAR
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD-The University of Massachusetts men's swim team proved themselves as a force to be contended with this weekend as they took third place at the New England Championships at Springfield College.

Southern Connecticut took first with a 483.5, upsetting Williams College six-year reign. Williams had a 436.5, followed by UMass' 423.5. Tufts and Springfield, two schools that UMass lost to in the fall, placed fourth and fifth respectively.

UMass has not placed in the top three in New England since the 1930s and were eighth last year.

"We really did well," coach Russ Yarworth said. "We won six New England championships (times) and set five New England records. All the guys did a fine job- it was a team effort".

Drew Donovan was outstanding in all his events winning the 100-yard, 200-yard and 500-yard freestyle and breaking the league, meet and pool records in the 200 with a 1:38.77. In addition, Donovan helped the 800-yard freestyle relay team of Jim Flannery, tri-captain Paul McNeil and Craig Fuller to a first place win, with a 6:52.96.

"I wasn't sure how well I'd do but I was really pleased by my time in the 200. I wanted to do better times in the 200 and 500," he said.

Fuller also contributed immensely to the cause, winning the 200-yard butterfly with a time of 1:50.07, and setting the league, pool and meet records in that event.

"I did about what I expected to do but I missed the NCAA qualifying time by 1.4 seconds," he said. Fuller will make a second attempt to qualify this weekend at a time trial at Brown University.

Yarworth was honored as this year's Charles E. Silvia Coach of the Year, chosen by other New England Intercollegiate Swimming Association coaches. "I couldn't be happier, "he said.

The meet started well for the Minutemen on Thursday night when Fuller blew away the competition in the 1,650-yard freestyle with a 15:55.76. McNeil finished a surprising third with a 16.29.77.

In the 400-yard individual medley, Paul McDonough finished an admirable 10th with a time of 4:20.91 and Steven King took 16th.

In Friday night's events, Fuller had his record-shattering time in the 200-yard butterfly, followed by King in fourth. Mark Surette poured it on in the 200-yard backstroke, taking sixth with a 2:01.64. McDonough placed eighth with a 2:02.02.

In the 200-yard breaststroke, Mike Hoover took sixth with a 2:15.59, followed closely by Fred Marius in ninth. Divers Pat Mullen and Keith Pisani took 12th and 16th respectively in the one-meter diving competition.

Hoover, with a 2:04.67, finished 12th in the 200-yard medley relay with a 3:36.05.

Gymnasts cruise at home as men pound Springfield and women destroy Rutgers

Weil leads men to 7-4 record, Pancoast paces women over Knights

By KATHLEEN HANNAN
Collegian Correspondent

Seven months of hard work paid off for the University of Massachusetts gymnastic teams, ending the season with the women defeating Rutgers 160.35-144.9, and the men surpassing Springfield 260.8-249.3.

Senior co-captain Jennifer Pancoast stole the show for the women, capturing first place in all four events. It began on vaulting where she earned herself an 8.9 for a tuck tsukahara, a trick which is rarely demonstrated in collegiate women's gymnastics because of its difficulty.

Pancoast again placed first for a fluent routine on the uneven parallel bars with an 8.25.

UMass dominated on the balance beam. Difficult maneuvers such as back tucks, and front and back handsprings were shown to capture a total of 38.45 points. Pancoast and Tricia Camus tied for first with an 8.5.

On floor exercise, UMass tumbled one of their best meets all season. Senior co-captain Abbey Farris performed her first meet since last June. Due to a serious knee injury last season she was forced to sit out from competition but came back strong for her farewell, earning an 8.0.

"With a theater major and dance concentration, its easy to go out on the floor and say with a routine 'Hey, I'm hot!' and let everyone know it," she said.

Ending the meet with an 8.65 Pancoast clinched first place with an enthusiastic routine to the music of "Please Don't Let Me Be Misunderstood." No one misunderstood Pancoast, as she took the all-around with a 34, Chris Cloutier was second with a 32.25, and Tricia Camus third with a 31.4.

The men ended their season in superior fashion, beating Springfield for the second time in a week, taking the first at the New Englands first, second, and third in the all-around.

Roberto Weil placed first on the floor exercise with a 9.1, inching past Joe DeMarco with an 8.9.

The men excelled on the pommell horse, collecting a conglomerative 42.15 points of the event, which on the average is four points higher than they usually score. Co-captain Ken Dougherty stole first with a 9.45, his highest score ever for the event. Dougherty performed his last collegiate routine, but will be returning next semester as assistant coach.

On the still rings, DeMarco took second place with a 9.15.

Tip O'Neill peps UM students in House chamber

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON - U.S. House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. told a group of University of Massachusetts students yesterday that he needs their help in the fight against President Ronald Reagan's proposed financial aid cuts.

In a meeting on the floor of the House of Representatives, O'Neill said he foresees financial aid cuts "along the lines."

"But they're not going to be cut in their fullest," he said.

"The more people that speak out (against the cuts), the softer the blows are going to be."

Students Advocating Financial Aid, a group of 53 UMass students who lobby Congress each year, met yesterday with O'Neill and other congressmen to thank them for past support and to urge that they maintain federal student aid at present levels.

"I have to tell you the truth that there will be cuts along the lines. But we're going out there to salvage as much as we can," he said.

O'Neill, a Boston College graduate, said he has seen the education system grow into a system of utmost importance.

"The truth of the matter is that education is the greatest asset we have," O'Neill said.

O'Neill said there is a belief by many that "too many people are being educated. I think that's ridiculous." Alluding to arguments presented yesterday by many student lobbyists that financial aid is "welfare for the rich, but they don't like to mention that and the newspapers don't either."

Stressing the importance of minimizing financial aid cuts, O'Neill asked students to voice their concerns to local representatives. O'Neill said he arranged a meeting with SAFA on the House floor to congratulate them for their lobbying efforts. He said personal contact is vital to pursuade members of Congress.

"It's sad but it's true," O'Neill said. "The squeaky wheel gets the grease even in the government."

O'Neill, who meets with SAFA whenever they go to Washington, called the group the most effective student financial aid lobby in the country. He said students can be of service again this year, when, because of the federal deficit, financial aid becomes the target of budget reformers.

When a student told O'Neill about a legislative assistant's comments that college students, who voted overwhelmingly for Reagan, should not complain about the cutbacks, O'Neill pointed out that across the nation people voted for Democratic congressmen.

"Should we deny people the right to an education simply because they cannot afford it?" O'Neill asked. "I say no."

WASHINGTON-Divided into 13 groups, 53 Students Advocating Financial Aid (SAFA) from the University of Massachusetts yesterday visited U.S. congressional offices seeking support in the fight against President Ronald Reagan's proposed financial aid cuthacks.

The students arrived by bus here Sunday for a four day lobbying effort. Yesterday, the group met with Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Pittsfield, in a House of Representatives hearing room that SAFA is using as a headquarters.

"You picked a good time to be in Washington," Conte told the students. "You can feel the tension in the air."

Referring to the lobbying efforts, Conte said, "I think we can do it if we all pitch in together and take the lumps together."

He said the soundest argument against the proposed cuts would be to propose neither an increase nor a decrease in current student aid funding.

"We welcome a freeze across the board but that freeze is perhaps going to include defense, but the President doesn't want that at all," Conte said.

Fac senate to view report

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Public release of the report on Yvette Henry came a step closer yesterday as the Committee on the Status of Minorities at the University of Massachusetts met with faculty senate Secretary, Robert Jones, and unanimously agreed the report be presented shortly to the senate.

Castellano Turner, chairman of the committee, said his group was asked by the faculty senate Rules Committee last week if they intended the report be made public. He said because the committee decision to release the report was unanimous, "it should move the rules committee right along, and we should see this report on the senate agenda shortly."

Turner said Jones suggested the recommendations contained within the report should be presented to the senate as a motion for further action, to guard against further "panic among University administrators."

The recommendations within the report include: a thorough investigation of the role played by off campus agencies involved in on-campus investigations, a clarification of the responsibilities of the Dean of Students Office related to the welfare of all students, and a need for more crisis training of campus police.

Students debate Nicaraguan problem

By IAN POLUMBAUM

Two student groups clashed over United States policy toward Nicaragua in a panel discussion at the University of Massachusetts last night.

The UMass Republican Club urged continued U.S. support for rebels, known as Contras, fighting the Sandinista government, while members of the Western Mass. Latin American Solidarity Committee (WMLASC) said the Reagan administration is sponsoring "an illegal and immoral war" against Nicaragua.

Republican Club member, Rodman Snelling, told a crowd of about 500 in the Student Union Ballroom that, "the regime represents revolution perverted and betrayed...(and is) an ever-growing menace to its neighbors.

"While claiming peaceful intentions...Nicaragua is actively engaged in attempts to overthrow" Costa Rica and El Salvador, Snelling said in support of the U.S.-backed contras who have been fighting the Sandinistas since 1981. He cited what he called "enormous" Soviet arms shipments to Nicaragua.

WMLASC's Marc Kenen responded, "Nicaragua is a country the size of Iowa...it poses no threat to its neighbors. Their weapons are of a defensive nature" to fight off the contras, he said.

The four WMLASC members participating in the forum asserted that the contras have no popular support. Kathleen Lacey, said she spent four weeks in Esteli, a city in northwestern Nicaragua, and learned that the guerrillas "burn crops, destroy buildings, and kidnap and kill the civilian population."

Directory nixed for this spring

The Student Telephone Directory will not be published at the University of Massachusetts this semester and University officials yesterday declined to say why.

Dean of Students, William F. Field, confirmed an announcement in the Collegian which said, "Unforeseen complications with the (directory's) vendor" will prevent publication, but refused to elaborate.

"That advertisement was prepared in consultation with the University's lawyer (Sidney Meyers) and it says it has to say," Field said.

He refused to comment on who the vendor is, what the complications are and what kind of legal problems developed in dealing with the vendor.

However, the Collegian has learned that Luther Jones, an Amherst entrepreneur, had the contract to publish the directory but missed a deadline.

Field said there are no plans yet to separately publish the Dean's List, which is usually included in the student phone book.

The directory is published each semester as a public service of the Dean of Students Office at no charge to students, Field said.

Reagan urges Congress to approve MX

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan pressed Congress yesterday to move ahead with the MX missile program, arguing it is vital to America's security and the success of U.S. Soviet nuclear arms talks next week in Geneva.

"Without the Peacekeeper, our chances of reaching an equitable agreement with the Soviet Union to reduce significantly the size of our nuclear arsenals are substatially lowered," said Reagan.

"Peacekeeper" is the nickname he gave the long-range nuclear missile.

In a report on the missile, Reagan urged Congress to release $1.5 billion in funds frozen last fall for 21 new missiles. Those missiles were approved by Congress two years ago, and they are scheduled for deployment early next year.

Reagan's report warned that if Congress delays or eliminates the program on the eve of the Geneva talks, "the impact could be far reaching, extending not only to the failure of the strategic negotiations, but it may affect the broader East-West relationship as well."

In a speech to the National Association of Countries, Reagan called the Geneva talks "the most important set of arms discussions this nation will likely conduct in this decade." And he said the House and Senate votes on the MX "will directly, perhaps dramatically, affect the outcome at Geneva."

"Just as a strong bipartisan congressional vote to move ahead with Peacekeeper would send a signal that America comes to Geneva united and resolute," Reagan said, "so a negative vote in either house would undercut our negotiators and send a message to Moscow that America is an irresolute and divided nation whose divisions can be exploited at Geneva. That must not happen."

The president's report will be followed by the introduction of a resolution in Congress that sets a timetable for a series of House and Senate votes on the issue shortly after the talks begin in Geneva. The votes are expected about March 20, White House officials say.

Two White House officials argued the president's case before the American Legion on Monday. Edward L. Rowny, arms control adviser and former strategic missiles negotiator, said the MX is "absolutely essential" to convince the Soviets to bargain in Geneva.

Lebanon blast destroys mosque, kills 15

MAARAKE, Lebanon (AP)—A bomb explosion yesterday shattered the upper floor of a mosque in this stronghold of Shiite Moslom resistance to Israeli occupation, and the United Nations said 12 people were killed and 25 wounded in the blast. Lebanese police said there were 15 dead and 30 wounded.

The explosive charge was on the roof over the offices of the Shiite Amal militia, south Lebanese security forces said. The blast collapsed the two-story stone mosque's upper floor and among the dead were two guerrilla leaders and an infant, apparently crushed by falling concrete.

U.N. spokesman Timure Goksel said there were 12 dead and 25 wounded after French U.N. forces and rescue workers completed a search of the rubble.

The Lebanese police independently issued a higher casualty toll.

The explosion came a day after Israeli forces ended a 24-hour siege of Maarake in one of the raids Israeli troops have conducted in the past two weeks to curb guerrilla attacks on Israeli forces withdrawing from southern Lebanon.

Lebanon's state radio accused Israel of setting off the explosion and residents of Maarake, a center of Shiite Moslom opposition to the 33-month Israeli occupation, claimed Israel was to blame.

But the Israeli military spokesman's office in Tel Aviv said it "strongly denies" any involvement in the town, about seven miles east of the port city of Tyre.

Steel plant bombed, Iran says

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP)—Iraqi war planes bombed a gas station and a steel plant in southern Iran yesterday killing 11 people, then attacked Iran's partially constructed nuclear plant at Bushehr on the Persian Gulf, the official Iranian news agency reported .

The agency, IRNA, said two Iraqi jets fired a total of six rockets on Ahwaz, capital of the southern Iranian oil province of Khuzistan early Monday afternoon, killing at least 11 people and wounding 30. The gas station was destroyed and three units of the steel plant were damaged, it added.

In Baghdad, the Iraqi military spokesman reported only that Iraqi warplanes carried out 103 bombing raids on Iranian "positions, troop gatherings and equipment" in the central and southern sector of the front.

IRNA said the attack on the plant at Bushehr occurred after the first bombings, when an Iraqi jet fired a single Exocet missile, causing "some damage" to the nuclear plant but no casualties.

Chileans camp in city streets after 'quake'

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP)—Thousands of people camped in debris-strewn streets yesterday driven from their homes by aftershocks of a major earthquake that killed at least 124 people and injured 2,000 in central Chile. Authorities imposed a curfew to stop looting.

The quake crumbled the front section of a church in San Bernardo, just outside the capital, killing 10 people who were attending Sunday evening Mass. It knocked down walls, cut communications and swayed skyscrapers in Santiago and other cities in an 800-mile stretch.

Officials said they expected the death toll to rise as communications were restored and reports came in from outlying cities and towns.

Authorities said the hardest-hit areas outside Santiago were Valparaise and Vina del Mar, coastal cities in this narrow country that stretches 2,600 miles along South America's western shore. The three cities have a combined population of about 6 million.

Deaths also were reported in the cities of Rancagua and San Antonio.

The quake struck at 7:47 p.m. Sunday and the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo., said it measured 7.4 on the Richter scale. Within six hours, Santiago residents had felt about 48 aftershocks, some strong enough to rock tall buildings. Milder tremors continued yesterday.

The quake was felt in Argentina, across the Andes Mountains, particularly in the foothill cities of Mendoza, San Juan and Tucuman, but no casualities or major damages were reported. Some residents of high-rise buildings in Buenos Aires, 600 miles east of the Chilean border, reported slight movement.

Argentine federal police said the quake caused landslides that blocked the Andes highway to Santiago at the frontier town of Las Cuevas, about 120 miles west of Mendoza.

The Chilean government imposed a midnight to 5 a.m. curfew in much of the earthquake zone to prevent looting, which was reported overnight in some heavily damaged commercial districts.

Francisco Cuadra, chief spokesman for the military government, said yesterday that the death toll had risen to 124, counting only newly found victims in Santiago and Valparaise. Officials said at least 2,000 people were hurt.

Government reports said there was heavy damage at Melipilla, a town southwest of Santiago, but the situation in dozens of small rural communities remained unclear because of the communications failures.

Editor's Note—In celebration of International Women's Event the Collegian this week will pose a series of questions seeking the views of international women at the University of Massachusetts.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN

What's the women's movement like in your country?

By Deborah Ross

Name: Anne Kainikka
Major: Linguistics
Country: Finland

There is a women's movement in Finland but it doesn't have as much publicity as in America. Finnish women are more liberated than American women. In Finland women work, it's not unusual to be a career-woman, but here it's still a big deal.

Name: Marilyn Bou
Major: Economics
Country: Puerto Rico

For women of color, it's hard to define what the women's movement is. When you're busy fighting racism you must align yourself with the man of color oppressing you in order to overcome a larger oppression.

Name: Anette Ringwold
Major: Comparative Literature and Political Science
Country: Germany

American women are more conscious about feminism than German women. There are more feminists here. In Germany, we don't even have women's studies programs.

Name: Flavia Smith
Major: Psychology
Country: Brazil

In Brazil, there are some feminists but they are not as fanatic as in America. People joke a lot about Latin-American macho, but it's not that serious. It's beginning to change—but very slowly.

Argentines visit UMass to give system a look

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Four Argentine rectors visited the University of Massachusetts last week to learn how United States higher education could enhance their own curriculum.

Associate to the Chancellor, Cleveland Donald, said the administrators were on campus from Wednesday night until Saturday morning, meeting with UMass officials, Five College representatives, Communication Studies staff, Stockbridge School of Agriculture staff, and Latin American scholars and students now in the U.S.

The rectors came to UMass as part of a 30-day trip to the U.S. sponsored by the Insitute of International Education, a branch of the United States Information Agency. The rectors will also visit other colleges, universities, and education institutions, he said.

"The program allows outstanding leaders and educators from abroad to meet and discuss educational concerns with their U.S. counterparts," Donald said. "This provides a unique opportunity for them to find them find out how American universities are doing."

Donald said the rectors came specifically to UMass because of Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey's initiative visit to Argentina in December and also because of feedback from Francisci Jose Delich, rector of the National University of Buenos Aires, who visited UMass last month.

Last week, Duffey confirmed that he and history professor Robert A. Potash will be traveling to Washington in two weeks to meet Argentine President Raul Alfonsin.

Man threatens hotel desk clerk

An unidentified man flashed what appeared to be a small caliber revolver at a Campus Center Hotel clerk and told him "Get me a girl," University of Massachusetts police said.

The clerk reported the incident Friday morning, several hours after the man threatened him.

Anti-Semitic, anti-Iranian, and other racist statements were written on walls on the third floor of the Physical Sciences Library. A library staff worker reported the vandalism Friday afternoon, police said.

Police broke up a fourth-floor lounge party in MacKimmie House in Southwest that was attended by about 300 people Saturday night. A children's swimming pool filled with lemonade and vodka was found at the party, police said. Dormitory furniture was piled up on a stairwell, blocking the fire escape.

Regent committee discusses tuition

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

A subcommittee of the State Board of Regents of Higher Education announced yesterday the possibility of a small tuition increase for the University of Massachusetts and other state schools next year but indicated that factors also pointed against it.

James Keller, a student representative, said the Administration and Finance Committee has concluded that a state budget surplus, possible cuts in financial aid and more tuition waivers could help prevent a fee increase.

"Indicators point towards a low increase, if at all," said Keller, UMass Student Government Association co-president.

But another student at the meeting, Beth Harrington, co-chairwoman of the Public Policy Committee in the Undergraduate Student Senate, said the regents "do not have the correct student perspective on how an increase would effect them."

"They (regents) asked us if students would accept a reasonable increase but last year's seven percent or ten percent is not reasonable," Harrington said. "I don't think the regents want an increase but they might be pressured" into recommending one.

"We'd like to be against a tuition increase but we have to wait for all the information and data to develop," Regent John Fox said.

But Fox also said he and other regent members agreed that an increase would be devastating if President Ronald Reagan's proposed financial aid cutbacks are ratified.

Harrington said the regents do not realize that "the situation in Washington looks bad."

"This is not the year for an increase," she said.

Harrington explained that the federal 1986 fiscal budget, involving the cutbacks, will not be completed until fall but that the regents will decide on a possible increase by April.

This will put students "in deep trouble if the cuts pass and the increase happens," she said.

Keller said the committee would make a formal recommendation at its next meeting and will present it to the entire board of regents in April.

"The people of Nicaragua fear the contras. They do not support them," Lacey said.

"The Reagan Administration fabricates stories and reaches for straws to justify an illegal and immoral war," Kenen said, adding that there is "no evidence" the Sandinistas are aiding leftist guerrillas in El Salvador.

But Loren Spivak, one of four Republican panelists, said many contra leaders are former Sandinistas who, "having discovered the true nature of the regime, now fight for freedom."

Republican Club member, Peter Dow, said the U.S. government does not have concrete evidence of Nicaraguan arms smuggling because "we have only 55 advisers in El Salvador."

Both panels were applauded frequently by members of the audience, who also lined up 20 deep to ask questions and offer opinions. In response to a question about the prospects of direct U.S. military intervention in Nicaragua, Republican Club President, Stephen Erickson, said, "If we can give aid to the freedom fighters now, we will not have to find ourselves in a combat situation."

"We do not mean to portray Nicaragua as a utopia," Kenen said. "All (the Nicaraguans) ask of us is to let them make their own mistakes."

★ SAFA

The groups met with more than 40 legislative aides who were able to schedule meetings for them. SAFA said for the most part, the legislators they spoke with did not support Reagan's proposed cutbacks in aid.

But today, the agenda includes meetings with representatives and senators whose voting records show less support for financial aid.

SAFA today will also meet with Massachusetts Senators, Edward M. Kennedy and John Kerry, and attend a subcommittee hearing featuring testimony by U.S. Education Secretary William Bennett. Bennett, who supports the cuts, has said that students will have to give up luxuries such as spring break trips to Florida and stereos if they want to afford college.

One Florida city runs break on an 'invitation only' basis

BOSTON (AP) — Students at Boston University and six Ivy League schools are being urged "by invitation only" to spend their spring break on the beaches of Jacksonville, Fla., instead of mixing with the masses farther south.

The promotion is the brainchild of the Convention and Tourist Bureau of Jacksonville, which wants to lure the preppy crowd from other resorts and ski slopes where undergraduates flock during Easter week, said Executive Vice President Terry Fitzpatrick.

But several Boston-area students said this week they weren't tempted by the prospect of cheap air fares, cut-rate car rentals, and "big name" entertainment.

"I probably could not think of a place I would less like to spend my spring vacation," said Mike Hirschern of New York City, a junior at Harvard University. "The whole idea of a meat market, which is basically what they are promoting, is not quite my cup of tea."

"If you wanted to go to some place on the beach and sit in the sun, I wouldn't go to Florida," said Karen Wilkes, a Boston University student from Athens, Ga. "If it costs the same, why not go to Bermuda?"

The schools targeted by the promotion are mostly members of the Ivy League — Harvard, Dartmouth, Yale, Columbia, Brown, and Cornell — where officials were receptive to the idea of a Jacksonville promotion campaign, Fitzpatrick said.

In January, representatives from tourist bureau visited the exclusive Northeast schools, hand-delivering hundreds of pounds of brochures, posters, and flyers that specify students are welcome "by invitation only."

Boston University, where the number of students sick in a measles epidemic rose to 62 last week, was included in the promotional swing at the request of officials there, he said, even though their spring break began Friday, several weeks before many other schools.

As part of the promotion, Piedmont Airlines and Hertz car rental have agreed to give discounts to bonafide college students, Fitzpatrick said. Several beach-front hotels are also offering "spring break rate" he said.

And if the prospect of beaches less jammed than those in Fort Lauderdale and Daytona Beach is not enough, Jacksonville officials have also lined up a variety of acitivies for the Ivy League set, he said.

Letters to the Editor

Principles lacking?

I would like to place in question the Collegian's editorial policies in reference to an advertisement for "Edge Gel" in last week's Movie Magazine insert.

I do not think I have ever seen such a blatant piece of sexist advertising! The ad depicted a man shaving naked women from his face (hidden in the cream). I am disgusted that the Collegian would allow such a piece of trash between its pages. Does the Collegian staff realize that by supporting such sexist ads they are helping to institutionalize women's role as a sex object?

The Collegian is supposed to be grounded on principles other than sexism. If the Collegian insists on acting contrary to its official policies then we should directly challenge the newspaper's position as a campus institution.

A benefit for all

A lot has recently been written and printed about the pros and cons of fraternity life. Last week, Rusty Denton wrote a defamatory letter, accusing members of the Greek area of a multitude of sins. The facts of his letter were essentially correct, but the things mentioned are true everywhere. Unlike the dormitories, however, the Greek area is taking active steps to solve some of these problems. The institution of higher-than-campus academic standards is a step aimed at improving the quality of person in the Greek area. In addition, a legitimate attempt at Dry Rush proves we are aware of the ever-rising problem with alcohol.

We in the Greek area do not pretend to be perfect--we chose the fraternity route because we like the idea of being able to choose the people we live with. In addition, the ability to live amongst a number of different majors, makes for a more well-rounded student. Not unimportantly, the food options and social environment are uncomparable at this University. Those of us who joined the Greek area did so in an attempt to get the most out of college. Those people who come to our rush this Wednesday will see that we obviously are.

A strong, organized Greek area is a benefit to all at UMass, and we encourage the infusion of new people, so that all aspects of the UMass community are represented. Yes, Denton, we are not perfect, but we are making honest steps forward--which cannot be said of the other available housing options.

Stop slur campaign

In light of the upcoming SGA presidential elections, I suggest that the childish name-calling and slander among certain candidates be put to an end. It is a detriment to the election and an insult to the intelligence of the students here at UMass. I know that the majority of the voters feel the same way as I do and would appreciate being presented with the plain facts about each campaign. Hopefully this will cease and the most qualified candidate(s) will win.

This is 'real world'

Andrew Paven's column in the Collegian Feb. 26 is rife with inaccuracies and clouded thinking. The Reagan administration does not claim that the contras are all ex-Sandinistas, nor does the Sandinista government claim them to be all ex-members of Somoza's National Guard. This is a gross over-simplification and is recognized as such by both sides. Paven's accusation is wrong. And who in the Reagan administration has ever labeled South Africa and South Korea "democracies?" George Shultz recently outlined a more activist U.S. strategy for assisting not only the contras in Nicaragua, but also "advocates of peaceful democratic change in South Africa, Chile, the Republic of Korea and the Philippines." The assertion that the Sandinistas were forced to turn to the Soviet Union for economic and military assistance is sheer fantasy. Paven writes, "For the peasants, the overthrow by the Sandinistas was better than continued rule by Somoza." I hate to disrupt Paven's idealistic conception of geopolitics, but this is the real world, and as long as the United States continues to exist, its needs, and not those of Nicaraguan peasants, must and will serve as the preeminent determinant of U.S. foreign policy in Central America.

By the students, for the?

Rita Murphy

In four years I have seen various Student Government Association presidents. Some have been good, some not so good. I have seen some stand up for student rights because they honestly believed it was the right thing to do, thus serving the best interests of all students and not just themselves.

I have seen Larry Kocut demand that coed bathrooms stay that way because students wanted it to be. I have seen Jim Murphy speak up every time he thought student rights were being violated.

I have also seen Charlene Allen lie to students saying she would resign, only to have "second thoughts" after having red tape eliminated, paving the way for financial aid, while other students not in a position of influence, did not receive the same preferential treatment.

I have seen Tom Ahern silent and vocal, sometimes speaking for students, sometimes speaking for himself and his best interests.

But never have I seen a SGA president so non-committal in a student's rights case than Rick Patrick was at Thursday's faculty senate meeting.

Two weeks after the rules committee of the senate refused to release publicly the special report on the Yvette Henry case, and the same day that the Collegian published it, Patrick reaffirmed what many people already believe to be true, that the presidency lacks backbone and lacks a true committment to students' rights.

As is the case during every faculty senate meeting, Patrick was given the opportunity to address the group. He spoke roughly three minutes and never once mentioned Yvette Henry or the report which concludes that a student's civil rights were violated.

As students we should expect the person elected to represent us, to be the voice of all students, to speak loud and clear on issues effecting students. Patrick kept silent on the issue, not even bothering to inform the faculty that the night before the Undergraduate Student Senate passed a motion demanding that the faculty senate release the document.

During the faculty senate meeting, John Ruddock, who brought the motion before the undergraduate senate the night before, presented Patrick with a typed copy of it, but still the president did not stand up and speak.

If we can't count on our SGA president to speak up for students, then why bother having the position in the first place? We should expect campus leaders to stand up and not be afraid of offending the faculty, or God forbid, the administration. Rick Patrick was elected to represent students, not to cater to the wishes of the administration and avoid making waves.

The president should not be a raving lunatic, screaming and shouting at the drop of a hat, but he or she should be firm, strong, and even stubborn when it comes to student rights. The SGA president is elected by the students and should be for the students.

Grody to the max

Heidi Grant

On Sunday night, my friend Terry and I headed over to Worcester Dining Commons to have dinner. Our choices for the meal were stuffed shells or roast pork. We both chose the shells which, for some reason, were especially watery that night. Although I didn't have any vegetables, Terry made the mistake of getting some spinach.

As Terry mixed some butter into her spinach to add some flavor to it, she noticed a distinctive brown patch that looked like discolored leaves. Upon closer examination, she noticed that these discolored leaves had six legs, two eyes and two feelers. Her first instinct was to scream, but instead she just looked at me in a state of shock. With a cry of "Stop me from screaming, I don't believe what's in my food," I asked what was wrong. When she showed me, we both immediately lost our appetite. In the meantime, the people sitting at the other end of the table noticed something was wrong and, after we told them, pushed their trays aside in a disgusted manner.

Terry brought the spinach, complete with insect, to the manager's office bypassing the counter in order to get to someone who had some clout. After telling the woman the problem and showing her the evidence, the manager assured her that she would tell the servers about it. Although we don't know what she said to the servers if anything at all, we do know that the spinach was still being served ten minutes later when we went up to check.

Neither one of us has any real complaints about the dining commons food. In fact, we admire the way they manage to feed so many people decent food. But, we are outraged by the way this situation was handled. Finding an insect of this size (about half an inch) would seem to us to warrant some immediate action. That spinach should have been disposed of immediately, no further questions asked. Serving this spinach is a violation of health laws and some people could have become seriously ill from it. We have no way of knowing how many insects were in this spinach or what kind of germs the one that we found was carrying. If Terry hadn't stirred her spinach around while she was buttering it, she would never have seen that insect. Just thinking about this turns our stomachs.

This is no laughing matter. If this situation ever arises again, and we seriously hope it doesn't, we expect that Fooc' Services will handle it in a more appropriate manner.

Nuclear weapons in P.R. violates treaty

By YADIRA A BETANCES
Collegian Staff

The United States has violated the treaty of Tlatelolco with its nuclear contingency plan to deploy nuclear arms in Puerto Rico.

The treaty, signed after the Cuban Missile Crisis in 1962, prohibited the U.S. Government from deploying weapons in the Caribbean Island, seized by the U.S. in 1898 after the Spanish-American war.

Despite this treaty, the New York Times reported on Feb. 13 that Administration officials acknowledged "nuclear weapon storage facilities and a specially trained team of military experts were in place in Puerto Rico to receive the weapons." New Zealand has also refused such weapons.

Rafeal Hernandez Colon, governor of the Commonwealth said he was neither consulted nor informed about the U.S.'s plans, according to the Times.

Raul Cotto-Serrano, a graduate student in the Political Science department at UMass., said this is not the first time the issue of nuclear weapons has arisen.

In the 1960s, a letter protesting the Ramey Field Strategy Air Command Base by prominent citizens was sent to then Gov. Munoz-Marin. The governor's response was: "that was the price Puerto Rico have to pay because of the benefit the island is receiving due to the relationship with the U.S.," Cotto-Serrano said.

He admitted "I have no reason to believe the administration (of Rafeal Hernandez Colon) would assume a similar position."

According to El Mundo, a Puerto Rican newspaper, Hernandez Colon said, "the position of my administration with no doubt is that the treaty (of Tlatelolco) that prohibits the use of nuclear arms in Puerto Rico has to be fulfilled."

While strong opposition grows over this issue, ex-governor, Carlos Romero Barcelo said there should be no nuclear arms on the islands as long as there is no imminent threat by the Cubans.

The issue of security of the country is used to justify the deployment of nuclear weapons in the Caribbean island, but Cotto-Serrano said, "Puerto Rico has no problem with security. We have a problem of insecurity with the presence of US," because Puerto Rico becomes a target of the Soviet nuclear arsenal.

Because Puerto Rico is not a sovereign nation, but a colony of the US, the small island is not in a position to refuse demands from Americans. Thus they accept the weapons, and militarization of the island, he said.

The Puerto Rican government "appeases the mind of the people to withdraw the weapons from the island. I don't expect the politics to change." A great deal of pressure is needed to stop the action but there is not enough awareness to do it, he said.

A movie and lecture on the military presence in Puerto Rico will be held on Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in room 904 of the Campus Center.

20 years after

Another irony is that not enough young blacks today know of the civil rights struggles, which produced many of the opportunities they take for granted.

He said there is also an irony in the fact that they survived the hardships and confrontations, and are still struggling with many of the same issues.

Lee Filderman, a legal studies junior at UMass said there are a lot of misconceptions and anger about the South which are no longer valid.

Filderman, said he attended the public school system in his native Memphis, Tennessee with a 40 percent black and 60 percent white student population and there was "very little racial tension. It was a good feeling," he said.

In the past 20 years, the South has been forced to deal with its racial problems, as opposed to the North. In comparing Memphis with Boston, he said Boston has "worse racial problems than Memphis."

"Nothing has disappeared, there are still problems, but segregation is not there anymore. Blacks are earning and getting respect, which in the past they never did," Filderman said.

Filderman said the changes in the South were superficial when the civil rights laws were first passed and the eyes of the media and of the country were on the South. "I guess they were compelled to (change)."

But, in the last five to 10 years, "strong leadership from the South have come about which whites and blacks both respect and appreciated."

Although today's young blacks do not have the passion and fervor present in people their age 20 years ago, "there is capacity for it," and it surfaces when the need arises as in the Mississippi and Virginia campaigns for the Rev. Jesse Jackson's democratic presidential candidacy bid, Thelwell said.

"The people were out with fervor, enthusiasm and excitement. It was like the movement," he added.

Giovanni helps celebrate International Women's Day

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

The woman long known as "the Princess of Black Poetry" and named Woman of the Year by Ebony magazine in 1983, will be making her first appearance at the University of Massachusetts tonight in honor of International Women's Event.

Nikki Giovanni, also writer, recording artist, journalist and lecturer, will speak tonight in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. on "International Women's Day: Past Present and Future."

Her books include Black Feeling Black Talk, Black Judgement and Those Who Ride the Night Winds; she writes a syndicated column called "One Woman's Voice," and she has been awarded an honorary doctorate from Smith College.

Gail Collins of The Journal Herald described Giovanni as "like the poetry she writes - warm, sensitive and gentle but yet fiery, piercing and most of all right on target."

Internationally renowned poet, Nikki Giovanni, will speak tonight in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m.

The following, I Wrote a Good Omelet, is an example of Giovanni's extraordinary poetry:

I wrote a good omelet...and ate a hot poem...
after loving you

Buttoned my car...and drove my coat home...in the rain...

after loving you
I goed on red...and stopped on green...floating somewhere in between being here and being there... after loving you

I rolled my bed...turned down my hair...slightly confused but...I don't care...

Laid out my teeth...and gargled my gown...then I stood ...and laid me down...

to sleep...
after loving you

Third World groups face drastic budget cuts

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

The future of Third World registered student organizations at the University of Massachusetts is being threatened by the pending 25 percent budget cut proposed by the Student Government Association Budget Committee.

According to John Ruddock, external coordinator of the SGA Third World Legislative Caucus, "in light of the past budgetary reduction to such organizations such as Black Mass Communications Project, DRUM Magazine, Afrika-Am, AHORA and others it can be asserted that with this budgetary crisis little attempt, if any, will be made to reverse the course of the SGA, in the reduction of revenues of Third World RSOs."

In 1982, Third World organizations received a total of $204,239 out of $1,461,340 allocated SGA budget. In 1983, they received $213,715.48 from a $1,111,628.48 budget.

In 1984, they got $235,288.07 from a $763,513.14 budget and in 1985 Third World organizations were given a toal $226,935.77 out of $746,838.28.

Depending upon what kind of reductions are made for 1986 there, "may or may not be alternatives," for Third World organizations on campus, Ruddock said.

Third World groups solely founded by the SGA, may be eliminated due to insufficient funds he said. Organizations that depend on outside financial sources may be further dependent on those sources to survive, he said.

Past incidents have included the freezing of Third World groups' budgets with no apparent reason. Last semester, a proposed plan to have all fine and performing arts groups including the New World Theater, funded by the Art Council was rescinded, but Gilbert Stair, a member of the budgets committee said, "the bottom line is that we will keep funding the arts groups but they will get less and less money."

Third World Organizations are given the same consideration as non-Third World organizations when it comes to formulating a budget, said Joe Sparks, chairman of the budgets committee.

Marilyn G. Bou, a sophomore economics major feels the budget cuts are unfortunate for everyone involved in the budgetary process.

She foresees, "people's true colors surfacing throughout the budget hearing." She added, it "is my assumption based on history that Third World organizations might be looked upon as easy targets by the budgets committee. I sincerely hope this assumption does not become a reality.

Sherwood Thompson, director of the Office of Third World Affairs, was unavailable for comment.

Ruddock suggested students join the Third World Caucus and other existing Third World groups. "Students must become directly involved in the SGA's administrative organization. By becoming involved they can protect these RSOs from a possible assault on their resources.

"It is important that people become involved in the solution and do everything they can while the resources are still available," he said.

Korea poses threat to area

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

South Korea is becoming an anti-Soviet military base for the United States with imminent threats that could escalate to World War III, according to a South Korean doctoral candidate at the Universtiy of Massachusetts.

Min-Jo Kwon, a student in the Latin American Studies program, said that because of South Korea's location between three superpowers; the Soviet Union on the north, Japan on the east and north, it presents a devastating threat to the Korean Peninsula.

However, the possession of 600 nuclear weapons by South Korea is unknown to the rest of the world due to political oppression and mis-information in the West.

The United States has F-16 jets and F-4 Phantom fighter-bombers in the country, which is slightly larger than Indiana, according to a US Army fact sheet.

The same sheet states that stationed along with US troops, who remained in the country are Lance surface-to-surface missiles, specifically designed to carry nuclear warheads such as the neutron bomb.

"Until 1980, the Korean people didn't understand why the US still had their troops in the country and why they gave us military aid," he said.

Once the entire population became aware of the US supported regimes since 1949, anti-American lobbying began to surge. But they have been crushed by censorship and mass murder, an example of which is Kwangju popular uprising in 1980.

Chong Amy Yu, co-coordinator of the Third World Women's Program at the Everywoman's Center at UMass said the political activities of South Koreans in the US are also suppressed. She said their actions can negatively affect their families in South Korea or hamper their residency status in the US.

Kwom said the US rationale for deploying nuclear weapons in the country is expansionist propaganda. "The Defense Department knows that North Korea is weaker than the south. If the US pulls out, there is no danger of attack," he said.

"The problem does not lie with North Korea, but in South Korea and its US military presence there," Kwon added.

Yu said if political control had been merely a Korean problem, "it could have been taken care of in 1953. I believe in the American people; its (political repression to protect American interest) is being done in their names, I don't think they want to take it."

"They (the US) should redefine 'protecting freedom;' people are being persecuted under the name of freedom. That is a clear and consistent pattern this government uses to exploit Third World people," Yu said.

Kwom believes Chung Doo Hwan's government no longer represents the people due to the high level of oppression and that it should be overthrown. But he notes, "it's a difficult task. There are no weapons, no jungle, no support from the (rest of the) world, but only students, workers, and peasants fighting for 30 years."

He said South Korea's primary goal should be to elect a government concerned about satisfying people's needs. He believes that if the democratic movement is successful, a communist government would not be installed, but "an equalitarian, democratic, socialist political system closer to that of Germany and other European countries."

"I have a strong belief that the South Korean issue will explode within a couple of years because the Democratic movement has reached a point where they can start a real fight," Yu said.

"Revolutions happen out of neccessities, she continued, "people will take the task of defining what is it that they need and what kind of government is that they need and want."

The Korean Civil War, begun by a North Korean attack, was greatly expanded and prolonged first by US then Chinese entry. The war ended in a stalemate, continuing the division and solidifying a capitalist economy in the South, the Republic of Korea and a socialist economy in the North, the democratic people's Republic of Korea.

In April 1960, student protests toppled the unpopular US backed government of Syngman Rhee. Park Ghung Hee, took power through a military coup, to be succeeded by Chun Doo Hwan in 1980.

Little, much has changed after 1965

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Although the overt manifestations of racism have disappeared from the South, the power of the vote granted to black people has not been effectively employed to gain political strength as activists hoped 20 years ago.

A pilgrimage to resurrect the spirit of the civil rights struggle began in Selma, Ala. Sunday where only 20 years ago on "Bloody Sunday," police clashed with black marchers at the Edmund Pettus Bridge across the Alabama River.

The march ends Thursday at Alabama's capitol and follows the route that helped change the nation's political landscape by opening polling booths across the South to blacks.

Michael Thelwell, professor of Afro-American Studies at the University of Massachusetts and a long-time civil rights activist, acknowledges the South has changed in many ways since 1965, but "there have been no structural changes in economics in the South."

Because a large percentage of the black population were denied an education and the neccessary skills to succeed in contemporary society, the vote "hasn't been translated into real political strategy for the black community," Thelwell said.

The total numbers of black registered voters in 11 Southern states have increased from 1,463,000 in 1960 to 4,302,000 in 1982. The total number of white registered voters have climbed from 12,276,000 in 1960 to 22,868,000 in 1982.

"We mainly thought then of breaking the backbone of the South and expected the changes to be more profound," he said. Reflecting on the realities of the South where there was total segregation and real oppression to blacks, the movement was successful in terms of the targets encountered.

Reflecting on the movement, Thelwell added he feels both satisfaction and irony. Among the ironies he said, are the unpredictable occurances like Senator Eastland's overtures to the black community, his denial of ever hating black people and seeking the black vote.

Yu is confident South Korea will be victorious in their fight for human rights and nuclear disarmament, but she asserts their victory is dependent upon Americans, as well as citizens of the world.

Korea was one country until it was divided by the US and the Soviet Union after the Korean War in 1948. Korea had been a colony of Japan from 1910 to 1945. Continued on page 8

Toots Hibbert, bringing reggae to the Red Balloon last week.

Toots opens new club

By JON STRYMISH
Collegian Staff

"Lord it makes me feel all right," shouted Toots Hibbert, of Toots and the Maytals. The man who invented reggae was happy. Six men who looked as if they had nothing in common filed onto the stage to open a new club, the Red Balloon, in Easthampton. Starting into "Sittin on the Dock of the Bay," they demonstrated that they were the men who had taken the beat of rock and roll and turned it 90 degrees backwards. These men created a whole new exportable product for their country Jamaica, and created music to keep millions of stoned Americans happy.

Eugene Gorey, the guitarist, looked out of place in a reggae band. Sporting short hair, a preppy sweater, and polyester dress pants, he moved up and down like a 50s beat jazz musician. But there was no trace of being of the mark in his guitar playing. It flowed in there so smoothly, it was as if he was the first man who didn't play "Louie Louie" the way it was written. He said he didn't fit in because he is a country boy while the rest of the band is from Kingston. Gorey saw Toots for the first time when he was 14, and he was his hero. I think he brought a Motown poppy influence into the band that smoothed and mellowed them finely.

Winston Grennan, the drummer, Winston Wright, an organist, along with Toots himself are 25 year veterans of the band. While Toots still looks young (he could probably pass for being in his twenties if he tried and he dresses in hip clothes), the other two look as if they have aged gracefully and happily, not hiding anything. Grennan has stayed on top and his drumming is spectacular.

Horeton Hibbert, the young bass player (and son of the band leader), was so flashy that he could make The Jacksons jealous. During his solo he played the bass with his teeth, and I think he sped up many of the songs' beats. He was not the first member of the band to play in the image of Jimi Hendrix. Gorey had managed to slip the solo from "Foxy Lady" into an earlier song.

Most of the night's musical references were American, from covers of "Louie Louie" to John Denver's "Country Roads." I would even have sworn that part of Grennan's drum solo was from Paul Simon's "Fifty Ways to Leave Your Lover."

Mitch Margold was the other keyboard player. He looked like a third generation Greenwich Village heroin addict who has made good. That's not an insult, just a matter of style.

The opener, Square One, a new wave band from Northampton was a poor choice for the bill. They were, however, good. But they would have been better if they didn't sound like Duran Duran, and even better than that if they didn't look like Duran Duran.

Two hot bands on campus

By ELIZABETH C. LANGLOIS
Collegian Correspondant

For those of you who missed the recent Del Lords and Barrence Whitfield and the Savages show at the Bluewall, you missed a lot. The Bluewall itself hasn't improved its policy of separating the non-drinkers from the of-age people, and the in between set music was anonymous and annoying Top 40. The price to get in was a little steep. But the two bands who hit the stage more than offset any disadvantages of the surroundings.

The Del Lords came on at about 11:15, and provided the audience with a solid, sweaty set that lasted about an hour. The Del Lords have members who've been around the block. Leader Scott "Top Ten" Kempner cut his chops with the Dictators, a crazy, goofy band which broke up at about the time (1978) that the punk movement was starting to take off. The band's other guitarist, Eric Ambel, did a stint with Joan Jett and the Blackhearts and the bass player Manny Caiati was a geophysicist. Their set included many songs off their latest album, "Frontier Days", as well some great tunes that didn't appear on it. These guys are practiced veterans, and it showed. They were extremely tight, but not so polished that there wasn't still some rough edges. This made their attack that much more exciting.

It was refreshing to hear music about real-life situations such as poverty, relationships, etc., instead of the usual ease-my-lust diatribes, or hate-the-system thrash. In this case, the music said it all, if you catch my drift. Kempner himself is married and in his thirties and his writing reflects the concerns of his age group rather than teenage angst epics. The band had the classic two guitar, bass, and drums setup. Eric Ambel and Scott Kempner traded guitar licks, and both of them sang their hearts out. All four of the Del Lords sing. Frank Funaro did vocal chores on "I play the Drums," and Manny Caiati closed the show with a spirited vocal excursion on the Who's classic,"Legal Matter."

The Del Lords are another great "American" band, and their sound reflects diverse influences from Johnny Cash (they did a great version of "Folsom Prison Blues") to Bruce Springsteen. In "Mercenary," Kempner slowed the band down and took up a storytelling stance similar to Springsteen's. The band closed the main set with probably the best song from their album,"Get Tough," and this elicited the most excited response from the already bopping audience. Finally they encored with two covers, the classic Flaming Groovies tune, "Jumping in the Night," and the aforementioned "Legal Matter." The Del Lords delivered, in spades.

Opening the show were Boston's own Barrence Whitfield and the Savages (featuring two ex-members of the Lyres). They've already appeared several times in the area, and a lot of the crowd were familiar with their material already. I, however, was not. I can say that their record doesn't do the band justice, or capture their exciting live sound. They are a great opening band, and really fueled the fever of the crowd, who were up dancing from almost the beginning.

The Savages are a good-time party band whose sound is hard to catergorize. To me, their music is what used to be known as rhythm 'n' blues, but that has come to mean something entirely different these days. Perhaps a cross between blues and rockabilly would be more appropriate. Whatever the word is, Barrence and the boys tore through a batch of great numbers, a few of them from their album, notable in my mind were "Walk Out," "Georgia Slop," and "King Kong."

★Gerlufsen

He's quick to shed the credit as is his custom, but he did what no one, myself and many others, expected before this season started, he's turned UMass into a legitimate contender...and that, all hoop fans will admit, makes following your school a lot more fun.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: Gerlufsen was at North Carolina's Fork Union Military Academy recruiting after leaving Duquesne on Saturday. Present players Carl Smith, Lorenzo Sutton and Tom Emerson all played there for coach Fletcher Arritt. The player Gerlufsen may be courting is 6-2½ Rodney Johnson, a high Division 1 off guard prospect.

UMass is 8-1 in Saturday afternoon games...complete tournament pairings, a look at the games and UM's prospects at winning will be in tomorrow's Collegian...UMass is 9-4 since Sutton became a starter....Only Smith and Braun have started all 27 games.

Darryl Carter enjoyed his high game of the season with 12 points at Rutgers. He, along with Emerson, freshman Wilbert (not Wilberti as typesetters like to refer to him) Hicks, Jackie Sheehan, and Matt Ryan have blended into strong bench support.

Ron Gerlufsen: He's turned it around

Peter Abraham

On Wednesday, the Atlantic 10 Conference will announce its men's basketball coach of the year award.

In the ten-team conference there are several individuals that are deserving of the honor, but none more than University of Masachusetts coach Ron Gerlufsen.

In a pre season poll conducted by the A-10 coaches, the Minutemen were selected to come in dead last. They finished the season in fourth. Far exceeding even his own predictions, Gerlufsen turned UMass into a winner.

This was a season that was supposed to be one of rebuilding. Center Edwin Green had graduated and the high scorer for the past two seasons, junior John Hempel, had transferred to St. John's.

He was left with a point guard, an off guard and a batch of power forwards, but no center. Freshmen, former reserves, and three starters had to be blended into a unit that could win basketball games.

UMass faltered in the early going, losing three straight at one time, but eventually they flirted with the .500 mark, passed it and with two-point losses to league leaders Temple and West Virginia, fell below it.

But UMass swept St. Bonaventure, beat Rutgers, beat St. Joseph's and George Washington. On the road, UMass actually won six games, more than the three previous seasons combined.

Freshman Lorenzo Sutton has blossomed into a fine small forward, former sixth man Bobby Braun is third in league rebounding, Horace Neysmith, Donald Russell and Carl Smith, the returning starters, did what they were expected to do, and more.

The Minutemen finished at 13-14 overall, the most wins since the 1977-78 team. For the first time they will not play a preliminary game at the league tournament, the nine league wins represent a school record.

This was done, remember, without the benefit of a home gym. The Springfield Civic Center was often empty for UMass games, the motivation came from the coach, not the fans.

Gerlufsen, a young coach at 37, entered the UMass job right after fiery Tom McLaughlin's reign. Chaos ruled at UMass, there hasn't been a season of double digit victories since 1978.

That has all been put in the past. Temple coach John Chaney said he hoped he didn't have to face UMass in the tourney. "He's (Gerlufsen) turned that bunch into a team that does what it has to in order to win," he said. "And that's tough to do, get different things out of players that maybe want to do something else."

Cases can be made for West Virginia's Gale Catlett, Chaney and others, but when your starting unit's biggest man is 6-6, your high scorer transfers and you're playing before crowds of less than 1,000, something is being done right and Ron Gerlufsen has accomplished that.

Hebel nets 22 in loss

Wells leads West Virginia over Minutewomen

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It turned out to be an early departure for the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team from the Atlantic 10 tournament, as they bowed to a tough West Virginia squad, 70-60, at St. Joseph's University in Philadelphia.

The catalyst for the Mountaineers was none other than 6-7 junior Georgeann Wells. The center from Columbus, Ohio totally dominated the game from both ends of the court. Wells, the only female collegiate to register a dunk during a game, ended up with 26 points on nine for 19 shooting from the field and eight for 11 from the free throw line.

Wells was just as tough on defense, hauling down 10 rebounds and swatting away 11 UMass shots. Wells also played every minute of the game.

The Minutewomen were led by 5-9 junior guard Barbara Hebel, who pumped in 22 points in a losing effort. The Nanuet, New York native was red hot from the floor, going 10 for 16, along with a perfect two for two from the charity stripe. Hebel was also the assist leader for UMass with five.

Both clubs were tied, 28-28, at halftime, as UMass capitalized on poor West Virginia shooting. The Lady Mountaineers were only 12 of 34 (35 percent) while the Minutewomen hit 50 percent at 13-26. But the second half was a different story.

West Virginia didn't do much better from the field in the second half, hitting only 39 percent of their shots, but expanded their lead on the free throw line, where they were 12-20. UMass, however, could only manage a four-for-four game from the line. UMass ended up with 20 fouls while West Virginia only had eight.

Also playing well for the Mountaineers were Dee Davis and Janet Hoffman. Davis, a 5-8 junior guard, pumped 16 points on eight for 16 shooting. Hoffman, a 5-10 senior forward, registered 12 points and four rebounds.

UMass, however, has a solid future. The entire roster remains intact and there were good signs in this game. Sue Burtoft played well for the Minutewomen, scoring 12 points. The 6-1 freshman also pulled down eight rebounds.

The Minutewomen, who were seeded sixth in the tournament, ended up at 13-15 on the year, with a 2-7 conference record.

Kevin McHale: The day after

Celtic forward reflects on his record-breaking effort

BROOKLINE, Mass.(AP) Record breaking Kevin McHale went from a cheering crowd to a crying baby to a two-hour practice. Welcome back to reality.

"Getting personal glories is nice, but who remembers that stuff?" the surprise setter of the Boston Celtic's single game scoring record said Monday. "I don't feel like it's any big deal."

"It was a fun thing to have happen. It's something I'll long remember, but that day is over now."

Boston's sixth man, starting only because of an injury to forward Cedric Maxwell, piled up 56 points in Sunday's 138-129 National Basketball Association victory over the Detroit Pistons.

Larry Bird, who repeatedly fed the ball to McHale inside in the fourth quarter to improve his chances for the record, had the old regular-season mark of 53.

"Like any record that's broken, things start happening for you," McHale said. "That shows when you play hard, good things will happen."

McHale had trouble sleeping Sunday night but not because thoughts of his amazing performance wouldn't leave his head. The cries of Michael McHale, who was at his father's big game eight days after being born, wouldn't leave his ears.

"I must have got him excited because he kept his old man up all night," said the 27-year-old father. "I got three hours of sleep."

McHale said that when he woke up Monday morning he didn't immediately think of his accomplishment the day before and wonder if he really had done it.

"I had a tough night. I got up and thought about how tired I was," he said.

And he had a morning practice to contend with. He walked through plays with his teammates in preparation for Tuesday night's game with the New York Knicks, then was the only starter who ran through a vigorous series of four-on-four games that ended the workout.

"I got 56. That means some day I'll get 8. It all evens out in the long run."

Booker runs fourth in East, Lee to NCAA's

University of Massachusetts freshman Bridgette Booker took fourth place in the 55 meter dash at the Eastern Championships at Yale University this past weekend.

Booker turned a 7.2 fully automated time (about 6.9 hand times) in the event and was the only UMass runner to place. West Virginia's Tammy Handerson won the race with a blazing 6.84. Villanova won the meet with a total of 83 points. Delaware State was second and Penn State third.

In other UMass news, wrestler Chris Lee was given a wild-card invitation to the NCAA championships despite losing in the New England championships.

Lee was defeated by New Hampshire's Dave Beaulieu 12-6 in the 126-pound competition. The Minutemen, who have been dropped as a varsity sport by the athletic administration effective after this season, came in fifth as a team with 31 points. Boston University took the competition with 78 points. UM's Dana Richard also made the finals, losing to BC's John Hanlon, 6-1.

Intramural hoop playoffs begin tonight

The Intramural basketball playoffs for men, women, and co-rec start tonight at Boyden Gym. Teams wanting schedule information should call 545-2693 today or come by the office at 215 Boyden.

The Intramural office will also be taking entries for the annual co-rec swimming meet scheduled for this coming Sunday at the Boyden Pool. Anyone interested in competing in one of the events should contact the Intramural office.

Poet urges women to be self-confident

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Nikki Giovanni, long known as the princess of black poetry, told her audience last night at the University of Massachusetts that the time is long overdue for women, black and white, to "come into their own."

Speaking in the Student Union Ballrooom as the first guest in this year's International Women's Event, she said, "You who are women should live your own lives, you should expand your brains and you should do what your heart tells you to do."

Giovanni stressed that women must take responsibility for themselves. She said that the thought of "a grown woman trying to find a grown man to take care of her is odious."

Giovanni said that women needed to gain confidence, speak-up, think, be commuted and have informed opinions. A woman who "is 21 and engaged," she said, "is crazy."

She described the situation of black women as "the lowest on the totem pole," and suggested a key way to remedy this is through education.

She said, "I'm sure women at the University of Massachusetts claim that their teachers are racist," and that this was "probably true," but she said you have "to go up against racism and fight it."

"Your priority is to stay in school," she told the audience, adding, "If anything is going to change, it's going to be through education."

"You are not going to change the world using the 1960's methods," she said, commenting that people "marched in the 60s to bring attention to the problem, but in the 80s everyone knows what the problem is."

And she stressed there is no question there is still a problem. She said in particular the Reagan budget indicates that "every aspect of the black community is in trouble."

Giovanni suggested that what is needed in the 1980's to address the needs of black women is an economic revolution. You can vote all you want to," she said, "but you won't have much of a voice."

Speaking on the situation in South Africa, Giovanni strongly spoke out against both divestment and boycotting, asking, "How can our priority be a country 5,000 miles away?"

Nikki Giovanni, "princess of black poetry"

"What we are asking for in South Africa," she said, "is what we have been asking for for ourselves." She said the latter should be the priority of the black community in the U.S.

Giovanni admitted she had no "easy answers or cliched solutions" to any of the problems she cited, but emphasized that the first situation for all women to deal with is their own.

"You are the major situation," she told the women in the audience and advised them to "rebuild yourselves" as individuals copable of running their own lives.

Nikki Giovanni, who was named Woman of the Year by Ebony magazine in 1983, and is a journalist, lecturer and recording artist as well as a poet, left the women in her audience with the message that what they needed to do was to gain confidence in their own ability.

SAFA: Bennett out of touch on financial aid

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON — Education Secretary William J. Bennett is out of touch with college students and living in the past, University of Massachusetts students lobbying for financial aid here said yesterday.

After attending Bennett's second hearing before the House Education and Labor Committee, members of Students Advocating Financial Aid criticized his position on President Reagan's proposal for cutting student aid, an issue that has had the UMass group knocking on Capitol Hill doors since Monday morning.

Three weeks ago, Bennett said students affected by the proposed cuts would have to "divest themselves" from expensive cars, stereos and Florida vacations.

At yesterday's hearing, Bennett said, "The thrust of the proposals is toward the needy students."

"(Education Secretary William Bennett) lacks a sense of what students are going through."
—Kevin Sweeney, SAFA

"The kinds of proposals we may have will benefit families of lower income. They (the proposals) can decide if a lower-income family can send a child to school or not," Bennett said.

Bennett cited instances of abuse of financial aid, such as 13,000 students receiving aid whose families have annual incomes of $100,000 or more. "The emphasis should be on quality control and mangement of educational resources," he said.

A committee member, Rep. Chester G. Atkins, D-5th Mass. District, said students and parents should not be blamed for misuse of aid. The problem, he said, lies with the Education Department's criteria for determining need.

"I would suggest that the divestiture you're talking about is a divestiture of hope, a divestiture of equality, and a divestiture of the future of this country," Atkins said.

Bennett said, "We hear so much about the shortage of funding, but the problem is not that we have too little money but that we have terrible management and serious squandering of resources."

Kevin Sweeney, a SAFA member, said, "Bennett assumes that students haven't been working for their education. He lacks a sense of what students are going through. He's living in the '60s, when for $6,000 you could buy a house."

In addition to the hearing, SAFA continued interviewing members of Congress. At noon, SAFA President Cynthia Howland and member James Shaw handed Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill 5,800 signatures collected at UMass the week before they left.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., met briefly with the group to tell them that the Human Resources Committee is going to strongly resist the proposals.

SAFA members said they feel that during the past two days, they have accomplished their goals. They said congressmen are generally sympathetic to their concerns.

"Everybody's coming together, the farmers and the NAACP who are lobbying this week also. "They are saying they support SAFA, and even if they lose their farms, they still want their children to have access to education," SAFA member David Nelson said.

"This has never happened before, special interests uniting for a common goal rather than fighting amongst themselves."

Michael Papirio reacts to a pungent cheese-like odor that filtered through the Campus Center concourse and elevator shafts around 4 p.m. yesterday. The Department of Environmental Health and Safety was called in to investigate and building officials questioned people on the concourse for a possible stink bomb, but the source of the odor could not be found.

"All of a sudden it just happened. It smelled like cheese," said Heidi Holland of the International Women's Event booth on the concourse. "The place cleared out."

"I got on the elevator on the 11th floor and I thought someone had thrown up in the elevator," Carole Reis of the Student Employment Office said. "It was an awful smell."

SGA presidential hopefuls square off

By RITA MURPHY

Student rights and fiscal accountability were the two key issues highlighting a debate between the three declared candidacies for Student Government Association president held in the Campus Center last night.

Kim Hackett and Michael Cerrato, Patrick Keohan and Teresa Sbardella, and Stacy Roth and Dan Burgess debated for over 90 minutes on issues ranging from ways to solve current financial problems in the SGA to issues of oppression on campus.

Hackett/Cerrato said their main focus, if elected, would be to make the SGA more accountable to students in how it allocates funds.

"The biggest student right is to know what is being done with your money. Somebody's got to start watching where your money is going," Cerrato told an audience of about 30 in a Campus Center meeting room.

Roth/Burgess said that while how the Student Activities Trust Fund is spent is an important issue for students, the biggest issue is the protection of student rights, especially in light of recent administrative moves to curtail student input in policy decisions.

"You cannot just sit there and accept unfair policies when they are handed to you. Students have seen very serious threats and an unresponsive administration. You've heard the expression put your money where your mouth is. Well, we have to put our mouths where our money is," Roth said.

Keohan/Sbardella said their main goal is to get students to the polls to vote for the candidates that will best serve the needs of all students.

"We want students to know we're running for them and not for ourselves," Sbardella said.

Each candidate was asked a series of questions by four panelists: Dave Pasquantonio, co-president of the Orchard Hill Area Government; Felicita Cordova of Nummo News; Steve Cooperstein, news director of WMUA; and John Yonce of the Collegian.

Senate group votes to cut military funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican-controlled Senate Budget Committee, in a sharp rebuff to President Reagan, voted tentatively yesterday in favor of a $79 billion reduction in his military buildup over the next three years.

On a bipartisan vote of 18-4, the committee proposed freezing defense spending authority at current levels after adjusting for inflation for the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1. That would be followed by after-inflation increases of 3 percent for each of the two subsequent years.

It was the first formal indication of the widespread dissatisfaction in Congress over the president's proposed fiscal 1986 budget, which includes a $30 billion increase in defense spending and nearly $40 billion in cuts in domestic programs.

The vote came a few hours after Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., said the administration must be prepared to negotiate with House and Senate leaders to get a "consensus" budget that will reduce federal deficits. White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan "stands squarely behind his budget."

The vote on defense spending marked the beginning of the Budget Committee's efforts to draft an alternative to the president's spending blueprint.

With the committee facing a series of controversial proposals to cut domestic spending, Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, said "The defense number is pretty key to getting a consensus on the rest of the budget."

Nicaraguan rebel pushes for U.S. aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chief Nicaraguan rebel commander declared yesterday that his forces are willing to accept heavy casualties in seizing and holding territory inside Nicaragua, if that is needed to win renewed U.S. aid from Congress.

"It would be costly for us, but to get the funds, we'll pay that price," said Enrique Bermudez, military commander of the U.S.-backed Nicaraguan Democratic Force, the Honduran-based rebel army known by its Spanish initials FDN.

At a crowded news conference, Bermudez also called allegations that his troops are continuing to commit serious human rights abuses "propaganda" by Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government.

However, the Americas Watch Committee, which issued a report yesterday containing such allegations, responded that none of its information had come from the Sandinista government.

The 97-page report by the New York-based private human rights group said all sides in the Nicaraguan conflict have violated laws of war, but added that the government has reduced its abuses in the past year while those of "contra" rebels have continued unchecked.

Americas Watch also said the Reagan administration "aided and abetted" the rebel abuses by financing and defending them. It added that by producing a rebel manuel with advice on "neutralizing" Nicaraguan officials, the CIA "directly solicited the contras to engage in violations of the laws of war."

Contraceptive pill risks contested by experts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans greatly overestimate the risks and understate the effectiveness of birth control methods, particularly the contraceptive pill, and this misinformation leaves many vulnerable to unintended pregnancies, a professional society said yesterday.

The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists said a poll it commissioned indicates many unwanted preganancies that threaten women's lives and result in more than a million abortions annually stem from ignorance and misinformation.

The survey found that people are particularly misinformed about the birth control pill, which the group said is the most effective and safest contraceptive for many women.

To help counter this, the society, whose membership includes 90 percent of the country's obstetricians and gynecologists, said it would soon launch a public information program to inform women of the benefits, risks and effectivenss of different forms of contraception.

Boston police face drug tests

BOSTON — Police officers who appear red-eyed, a bit woozy or simply a little "out of it" will be administered surprise urine tests to detect illicit drug use, under a policy announced yesterday by the Boston Police Department.

"We're not going to march into the station house and shout, 'Freeze. Line up. Everyone take a urine test.' It won't be random," said spokesman Robert O'Toole. "But if someone is acting strange or out of it, we've been around so we know what to look for, they will be asked for a urine sample."

Widow seeks $3.2m for loss

BOSTON — The widow of a lobsterman lost at sea when the National Weather Service failed to predict a fierce winter storm appealed to a federal judge for damages yesterday, the fourth birthday of the daughter her husband didn't live to see.

Honour Brown Ferris and relatives of two other fishermen who died Nov. 22, 1980, in seas that crested to 70 feet are seeking $3.2 million from the federal government for the lost wages and pain and suffering of their kin.

The damage trial is the second phase of a two-part lawsuit brought by the fishermen's families against the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the weather service's parent agency.

Jacksonville invites preps

BOSTON — To hear the Jacksonville, Fla., pitch, it's an exclusive group being invited to share a special beach at spring break.

Students at Boston University and six Ivy League schools are being urged "by invitation only" to spend their spring break on the Jacksonville beaches, intead of mixing with the masses farther south.

The promotion is the brainchild of the convention and Tourist Bureau of Jacksonville, which wants to lure the preppy crowd from other resorts and ski slopes where undergraduates flock during Easter week, said Executive Vice President Terry Fitzpatrick.

Editor's Note—In celebration of International Women's Event the Collegian this week will pose a series of questions seeking the views of international women at the University of Massachusetts.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN

By Deborah Ross

Are there differences between women here and in your country?

Name: Maki Tagaya
Major: Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration Country: Japan

American women are independent much earlier than Japanese women. They can detach themselves from their parents at a much earlier age. Ninety-nine percent of Japanese women are dependent on their parents through school.

Name: Sirry Sigurbjarnadottir
Major: Education
Country: Iceland

Icelandic women have higher self-esteem. They trust themselves more than American women because they have been financially independent for longer and thus are not as dependent on men.

Name: Anne Elster
Major: Computer Engineering and Math
Country: Norway

People in America will call a married woman "Mrs. Mike Smith." In Norway that would be an insult. Most women keep their own names when they get married and expect people to call them by that.

Name: Sandy Lee
Major: Public Health
Country: Taiwan

Taiwan women are more conservative and less liberated than American women. American women are much more active and interested in what is going on around them. In Taiwan, most women don't go out to work.

Bill changes urged

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate passed two motions last night urging changes in the stipend distribution system for teaching associates and in the billing policy for graduate students.

Ramesh Malla, a graduate student from the civil engineering department, said many teaching associates are paid over a 12-month period for work done during nine months (two semesters).

Malla's motion, which the senate approved after slight amendments, urges that the choice be given the teaching associate whether to have his or her salary paid over a period of nine or 12 months.

The senate also passed a motion urging the adoption of an installment plan for graduate student bills, which currently have to be paid all at once.

The senate first urged that this policy be implemented two years ago and a task force was created by the University to investigate the feasibility of an installment system, but the continued lack of such a plan spurred the senate to pursue the matter again.

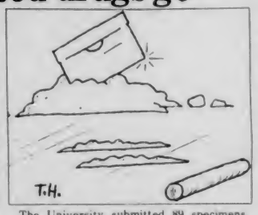
The senate's motion also urges a payment system for graduate students with jobs such as research and teaching assistantships which would allow these students to pay their semester bills through deductions from their paychecks.

Also last night, the senate passed a motion urging the UMass registrar to amend the current format of graduate student transcripts. The motion calls on the registrar to modify the transcripts to include credit points for each course whether the student was registered in the course for grade or for audit, a title for each course currently listed as a "special topic course," and a semester and cumulative grade point average, which are not included in the current transcripts.

Samples tested at UMass

Where the busted drugs go

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff



Most of the illicit drugs confiscated by law enforcement officials in western Massachusetts are sent to a laboratory at the University of Massachusetts for analysis and disposal.

A spokesman for the state Department of Public Health, which has laboratory facilities in the Public Health Building behind the Morrill Science Center, said drug samples are analyzed "as a favor to law enforcement agencies."

The spokesman, who supervises the DPH Food and Drug Laboratories at UMass, asked that his name not be used for security reasons. The lab director said he supervises a staff of seven technicians and about five inspectors.

The drug samples, submitted from throughout the 413 telephone area and as far east as Fitchburg, are scientifically tested to determine their authenticity, then sent back to the law enforcement agencies. Ultimately, they are returned to UMass for disposal, the lab director said.

The substances are destroyed by incineration, according to the director.

"It's not to our advantage to find a positive or negative result, the director said. "The only pressure we feel is to do an accurate job of analysis."

He said 15,031 samples were submitted to the UMass facility in 1983-84.

The DPH gave the Collegian a copy of its 1983-84 report, which indicated how much the labs analyze, and where the substances come from. Amherst and the University of Massachusetts were separate categories.

The University submitted 89 specimens, and the town submitted 88 samples.

The DPH labs destroyed 21,158 samples. The western Massachusetts municipalities with the most samples submitted, according to the report, are Springfield, with 6,285 drug specimens, Chicopee, with 745 specimens, Holyoke, 696, and Fitchburg, with 538 samples submitted.

The most commonly confiscated substances in western Massachusetts are marijuana, heroin and cocaine, respectively. Alcohol samples, confiscated from minors and drunk drivers, are also tested in the Amherst labs.

The director said the labs have never broken into "at least, in the 14 years that I've been working here."

Amphetamines and barbiturates are the least popular drugs in western Massachusetts, using how much is confiscated as an indicator. The DPH tested 9 barbiturate samples and two amphetamine specimens, compared with 1,182 samples of cocaine.

Students may pay for SSAM

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

The State Student Association of Massachusetts tonight will try to put a referendum on the Student Government Association's ballot asking University of Massachusetts students to pay for their representation in that group.

SSAM, a student advocacy group comprised of statewide student governments, will ask UMass students to pay a $1 per semester fee, according to Martha Porter, treasurer of the UMass chapter of SSAM.

If the student senate rejects the proposal, SSAM will bring up a motion tonight asking for $5,000 in student activities funds for the rest of this semeter, according to the agenda for tonight's meeting, and will still ask to be considered an arm of the SGA.

Porter said SSAM is running referenda on campuses across the state in an effort to stabilize its funding base. Only six student governments currently fund SSAM at a dollar per student, per semester, with other SGAs giving smaller donations.

Also tonight, the senate may vote on a motion to censure David Valade, a senator who allegedly vandalized posters on the fourth floor of the Student Union last week.

Valade could not be reached for comment last night.

Joan Quinlin, the governor's adviser on women's issues in Massachusetts, will speak to the senate on "various issues of concern to both the men and women of the University community."

Student passes out holding breath

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

A male student lost consciousness Monday night after he and two other students tried to pass out by holding their breath, University of Massachusetts police said.

The 18-year-old student may have brain damage because of lack of oxygen, police said. He was taken to University Health Services but did not regain consciousness until he was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital. Police said the Lewis House resident also received abrasions around his left eye after he passed out and hit his head on the ground.

Police said the three students were eating pizza and drinking root beer on the fourth floor of Thatcher House when they decided to try and pass out by holding their breath. One student gave the other a "bear hug" from behind which made him pass out, police said. The student is in stable condition, hospital officials said.

In other police reports:

- A female student received bruises from a male student who put her in an arm-lock Monday night. Police said a group of six people were drinking on the fifth floor of Dickinson House when the assault and battery occured. The injured woman knew the man and did not decide yet whether to press charges against him, police said.
- A Campus Center employee was treated at Health Services Monday night for head injuries after he fell down a flight of stairs in the Campus Center. Police said the man was cleaning when he lost his balance and fell.
- A money bag with $98 in it was reported stolen from the Bursar's Office in Whitmore Administration Building Monday morning. Police said the bag and the money is state Property. The theft is still under investigation.

Sanctuary advocates come to Amherst

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Correspondent

Don Mosley, leader of the growing sanctuary movement, will speak at 4 p.m. today at the First Congregational Church in Amherst about how churches across the nation are helping Central American refugees find safety within the United States.

The sanctuary movement, which began three years ago, involves 200 churches and more than 70,000 people whose main objective is to provide refugees from El Salvador and Guatemala with protection and support. The concept of sanctuary dates back to the Middle Ages, when churches sheltered people from the law.

Some churches today provide refugees with shelter, food and security. Eleanor Williams, director of the Sanctuary Education Committee in Cambridge, describes sanctuary as "symbolic protection."

Under the Refugee Act of 1980, a refugee must have a "well-founded fear of persecution" to be granted political asylum. The Reagan Administration is not granting asylum to most Central American refugees, claiming they come to this country for purely economic reasons.

But Francis Crowe, director of the American Friends Service Committee's Northampton office, said, "These people are clearly political refugees, not economic refugees as the government claims."

The refugees who flee these countries are "teachers, workers; many of them are women whose husbands have been killed by the death squads for refusing to join the army," Williams said.

The churches are running the risk of receiving fines of up to $2,000 and five years in jail.

"Many of us feel that we're not breaking the law because the law clearly states that the politically oppressed may be given sanctuary. In the past, we've helped people from Afghanistan and Poland," Crowe said.

The sanctuary movement is not limited to churches. The Female athletics encouraged

WOMEN ON CAMPUS

By BETH PASTINO
Collegian Correspondent

Patt Dodds

In spite of the achievements of American athletes such as Mary Lou Retton and Mary (Decker) Slaney, cultural constraints on women keep sports a predominantly male domain, according to Patt Dodds, associate professor of physical education at the University of Massachusetts.

Dodds stressed the need for young girls to become athletically active if society is ever to bridge the gap between the sexes in sports, and said social standards have discouraged girls and young women from excelling in sports.

"Parents and teachers of young children expect boys to be active and to participate in sports," Dodds said. "Until the last few years, however girls were expected to be passive and uninvolved in athletics."

In an effort to ensure equal treatment of young children, Title IX, requiring co-ed gym classes and equal opportunity for both sexes in public schools, was passed in 1972.

However, these co-ed gym classes, intended to advance equality for women, often create a condition Dodds calls "motor elitism"—a phenomena where those who excel in sports become social leaders and occupy much of a teacher's attention.

"Boys tend to develop greater motor skills and thus benefit from motor elitism," Dodds said. "If this situation becomes common in most schools, then the result of Tile IX would be nullified."

At the University of Massachusetts recently, the Women's Equity Program co-sponsored a grant with the physical education department to deal with issues of sexism and racism in Massachusetts public school gym classes. The program was designed to raise awareness of such issues as exclusive language used in class, and teachers were taught to recognize their own habits and encouraged to try different strategies to correct these problems.

"The answer is in the way we raise children," Dodds said. "If we can get good teachers at the elementary level who are sensitive, and then continue it all the way through school, we won't have the problems that are apparent at this campus."

One of the problems Dodds refers to is the fact that female enrollment in gym classes at UMass is far lower than male enrollment. Although consciousness of equity is promoted in the physical education department, Dodds said many women don't strive to do the best they are physically capable of.

"We are trying to teach our students to be teachers who expect simultaneous things from men and women, except when it is inappropriate to do so," Dodds said.

city of Cambridge is discussing the idea of making the whole city a sanctuary, Williams said. The chapel at Brown University, the church at the University of Wisconsin at Madison and possibly Tufts University's church are sanctuaries, she said.

"It would be a wonderful thing if UMass did it," Crowe said.

"If we could stop the violence, the refugees would stop coming. That's what the sanctuary movement is all about," Williams said.

Letters to the Editor

A few stones

In response to Rita Murphy's column on the recent history of the SGA presidency, I would like to offer the follow observations:

- One three minute speech does not provide the basis for a record on student rights.
- Her conclusions of "The presidency lacks backbone and lacks a true commitment to students' rights" were not justified by the evidence presented, and ignore other relevant events of the last 12 months.
- Her one-sentence summation of previous SGA presidents betrays an unsophisticated analysis of their terms of office.
- Those who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones.

'Don't blame me'

Concerning Rita Murphy's column condemning co-president Rick Patrick, who was endorsed by the Collegian last year, I have but one thing to say: Don't blame me...I voted for Rudolph/Dooley.

UMass apathy embarrassing

I am both embarrassed and ashamed at the apathy of UMass students. Last week, seven other UMass students and I attended the Ninth annual lobby for Soviet Jewry in Washington, D.C. We traveled down with 35 students from Clark University. UMass has approximately 20,000 undergraduates; Clark only has 1,800. One fourth of the participants were not even Jewish. They were merely concerned citizens.

The plight of the Soviet Jews is not only a religious concern. After a day-long briefing, we spoke to our senators and congressmen and asked them to help the Soviet Jews in different ways.

I am embarrassed for the University of Massachusetts because the lobby was openly publicized in the Collegian and posters were up all over campus; yet only eight people participated. For a school which is so involved in student rights and politics, it is surprising and appalling that only eight cared enough to lobby in Washington. I only hope that more students become involved next year.

One nuisance too many

A little thing like the non-publication of the Student Telephone Directory seems to be a minor issue on the surface, but it follows a recent trend on the part of the administration to make decisions affecting students without giving an explanation.

The telephone directory is published every semester by the Dean of Students Office. It serves as a valuable asset to students in finding other students' telephone numbers, department numbers, bus schedules and the up-to-date Dean's list.

Dean of Students William F. Field declined to explain to a Collegian reporter why the directory will not be coming out except to say an advertisement in Monday's Collegian gives the reason.

All the advertisement says is that "Unforseen complications with the (directory's) vendor" will prevent publication.

One operator at student information said yesterday that not publishing the phone book will present "a nuisance" and will create some problems for students as well as operators.

Why is it that the administration can continually create "nuisances" for students without feeling a need to explain itself?

Current administrators feel they have a right to hide their actions from students. They hid the consolidation of the trust funds in the Campus Center until Dec. 26, 1984. They are still hiding the facts surrounding the Yvette Henry case. When will they stop trying to hide information? And when will students begin to get answers to their questions?

Letters to the Editor

What's 'acceptable'?

After reading in last Thursday's Collegian that 30 people have already responded to John Till's letter, I had to think twice about adding to the debate. Till's reply to his critics, though, broadens the issue. He writes, "The point still stands that the homosexuals of our community have surpassed that fine line which borders between acceptable and unacceptable action. If this line is transgressed by any group of people-majority or minority-then that group will likely meet with incivility."

Civility means nothing if it only applies to people who act in a manner considered "acceptable." Historically, every group which attempts to throw off the shackles of oppression becomes "offensive" to those who would rather ignore the problem. Twenty years ago, Southern governors justified the unleashing of attack dogs against civil rights marchers because (they said) the blacks' peaceful protests were provoking violence. Obviously, blacks were found "offensive" not for what they did, but for who they were. The same is true for gay people today. If gays and lesbians really wanted to avoid offending anyone, they would have to cease to exist.

Because gay people are fighting for their rights, Till's demand that "the methods of the PGA must be altered in such a way as to educate and inform without offending" is unrealistic. Apparently, he does not understand the purpose of demonstrations. Demonstrations disturb the slumber of an apathetic community. When successful, they confront us with a choice we can no longer shirk: to do what is good but difficult, or evil but convenient. Understandably, many people would like to avoid such choices, so they lash out at those who insist on them. But to make gays and lesbians responsible for the bad consciences of heterosexuals is to put the blame on the shoulders of the victims.

If some straight members of our community are so easily outraged by expressions of gay pride that they cannot listen to what gay people have to say, then it is up to concerned heterosexuals like John Till to enlighten them.

Uninvited guests

Here at Brown this semester, we have many residents who have not paid rent or board. They have access to any room at any time and come unannounced. Luckily for us, they are not very strong, so our televisions and stereos are safe. Who are these marauders? Furrius Nibblus–Mice. There have been about 150 mice caught this past month, that's one for every three paying residents, and based on sightings, there are probably three times as many running rampant throughout the building. We find it strongly objectionable that we must pay housing fees while they get off scot free. The University is supposed to provide a safe environment for all dormitory residents. However we have been subjected to a proven health hazard. Mice are highly unsanitary and emotionally unnerving to everyone.

We demand that the University take immediate steps to resolve this problem or reimburse us our housing fees. How long would Chancellor Joseph Duffey or Whitmore have to put with such "Close Encounters of the Rodent Kind?"

Video is degrading

Yesterday in the Campus Center, Union Video aired the "Whip-it" video by Devo. This is one of the most, if not the most, degrading of videos to women. In the video, members of Devo whip a Hispanic woman over and over. Other people in the video cheer them on.

Philip Kennedy is in charge of programming for Union Video. He is responsible for this misogynist video being aired at out expense. I think he owes the women and men of UMass an apology. It would also be wise of him to use better judgement when selecting programs.

Corporations get off easy

Andrew M. Paven

In this season of the annual federal budget battle, President Reagan and his administration have sallied forth to assail those whom Reagan calls "born again budget balancers." But two subjects have been conspicuosly absent from the bureaucrats' bombast: defense spending and tax reform.

The administration's stated grounds for cutting or eliminating social programs are: mismanagement resulting in overspending (e.g., student loans, welfare); unnecessary spending (e.g., the Small Business Association, the Job Corps); and their objection to having one segment of the population fund programs that benefit another segment (e.g., farm subsidies, urban mass transit).

But if defense spending, 26 percent of the budget this year, and tax reform, which will shift some of the burden of payment to corporations from individuals, are not included for debate the administration's pious posturing rings hollow and hypocritical.

Mismanagement resulting in overspending? Unnecessary spending? Start with the Pentagon. Here are just a few of the expenditures the public was told of last year: a $7,400 10-cup coffee maker for the C-5 transport plane. A $7,417 alignment pin from General Dynamics (retail cost 3 cents). A $2,043 hex-nut from McDonnell-Douglas (retail cost 13 cents). Pratt & Whitney charged the public $1,118 for a 22 cent plastic cover for stool legs. Hughes Aircraft charged $2,543 for a $3.64 circuit breaker.

Out of the $185 billion the Pentagon spent last year how much was wasted through mismanagement? How much in overpayment to corporations, like the extra $84 million to Ford Aerospace and Communications for the Sergeant York anti-aircraft gun?

Under Secretary Weinberger's proposals defense spending will increase to $321 billion in 1987–a 60 percent increase in real dollars from the $71.4 billion spent in 1967, at the height of the Vietnam War. All of it necessary?

Tax reform on the other hand won't even be debated, because of the political calendar until after this year's budget cuts are made. But during the budget debate one point should be remembered: much revenue has been lost through Reagan's 1981 supply-side based tax-cut, especially the "Accelerated Cost Recovery System."

A study done by the Citizens for Tax Justice (CfTJ) reveals corporations that received tax breaks through 1981-1984 did not re-invest their capital. Companies it seems continued to invest in plant and equipment according to demand, not supply. "Taxes–or lack thereof–don't seem to have much to do with it," writes Robert S. McIntyre, director of federal tax policy at CfTG.

Actually, it seems the more companies save, the less they re-invested. "Companies with at least one no-tax year between 1981 and 1983 reduced investment by 15.7 percent. Firms that paid a total of no taxes or actually received net tax rebates over the three years cut investment by 19.3 percent...companies that did not pay taxes in any of the three years–slashed investment by 29.6 percent.

"In sharp contrast, the 50 companies with the highest tax rates over the three years–the firms that by supply-side thinking had the least incentive to invest–increased their capital investment by a total of 4.3 percent, despite paying 33.1 percent of their profits in taxes," writes McIntyre.

The government also loses $140 billion each year in tax breaks, which Gregory Fossedal of the editorial page of the Wall Street Journal calls, "Corporate Welfare."

These are "perhaps the largest, fastest growing, yet least discussed public relief program of the federal government," he writes. He estimates the annual cost of "corporate welfare" in defense spending alone, "conservatively," at $50 billion.

But the president said to the Wall Street Journal recently, "I haven't even made an attempt to study (the Treasury Dept.'s tax reform plan) in detail."

The Reagan administration is well-versed in rhetoric, but it remains to be seen whether they will "stay the course" when it comes to really cutting the federal deficit.

Social planning abridges our freedom

I take exception to William J. Spain's "Time to give a little back" column that appeared in Monday's Collegian. Social planners like Spain seek to abridge your freedom by making national service mandatory.

The choices he presents are Peace Corps-type service or the armed forces. Some choice. You can either dig ditches in Chile or learn to shoot Third World socialists.

I believe that service to America in these jobs is a noble thing. However, service to one's country should come out of moral compulsion, not compulsion of law.

The SGA elections: the issues and candidates

Student rights, SGA outreach concern Roth/Burgess team

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

"Student rights" are the primary concern of Stacy Roth and Dan Burgess, co-candidates for the Student Government Association presidency.

"Basically, that's the core of what we're doing," Roth said. "Students deserve much more representation."

Roth, 20, was the co-chairwoman of the Public Policy Committee last semester, but resigned last week to pursue her candidacy. She has been a student senator for four semesters, and served for one semester on the Coordinating Committee. Previously, Roth served for two years on the Brown House Council, and was co-president of the Sylvan Residential Area for one semester.

Burgess, 21, is a resident assistant in Butterfield House, and a sophomore Inquiry Program student. He has been a senator for two years, and spent one year on the Coordinating Committee. He was an assistant to former SGA co-President Thomas Ahearn, and a member of the Anti-Racism Team at the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

Burgess also served for one year on the Finance Committee, and was recently elected to the Amherst Town Meeting. He will be the student trustee if he and Roth win the election.

Roth said other important features of their platform include opposing the alcohol policy, getting more student input into Food Services and Health Services and controlling what Burgess called "administrative abuses of the Student Activities Trust Fund." Burgess said control of programming should belong solely to students.

Roth is a junior political science major. Burgess is married, but has no children.

Roth said a "pet peeve" she has is "the lack of outreach by the student senate. People don't know how much the student government is doing, and we want them to."

Burgess said, "We have one of the most powerful student governments around in many ways. Politically, economically, and otherwise, we do a lot, and need to strengthen that."

Roth concluded, "The student government does a lot of work on a lot of issues, which is why I've been a part of it so long, and will continue to be."

Dan Burgess & Stacy Roth

Hi, we're Stacy Roth and Dan Burgess and we're asking you to join our campaign for student rights. The SGA presidents should ensure that student government focuses on and responds to all student concerns and not on internal fighting. We can do this by providing open forums for you, where your needs and concerns can be voiced. The SGA must be aware of your concerns, not just of those who are in the student government. We want to make your concerns, our agenda. Here are a few of the issues which we feel are important and our plans to address these issues.

The most pressing issue is the proposed massive financial aid cuts verus ever-rising education costs. We have already collected 1,300 signatures that have been sent to Washington with SAFA (Students Advocating Financial Aid). We will lobby the state government to match the possible cuts in federal aid. By networking with students across the state, we can build a stronger State Student Association. On the University level, we will oppose the inequitable Universal Resource Fee, as well as the proposed increases in our housing and athletic fees. We need to show that students are strongly unified in their reaction to these issues.

These situations would have an even stronger impact on Third World and lower income students. We will force the University to conduct a special study on the possible aid cuts and how they affect the composition of our enrollment and then take appropriate action.

Another main concern we have is the University's growing disregard for student opinion. The Board of Governors, our student voice in the Campus Center, is threatened with elimination. We pay for this building and should have a say in how it operates. The administration's response to the rise of the drinking age is another example of infringements on student freedoms. We will draw the lines for student rights and try to generate student interests. We can win battles with Whitmore.

This campus should be sensitive to the needs of everyone. Yet there are still many unsafe areas on campus, childcare facilities are inadequate and women and Third World representation is practically absent in the University structure. The University has shown that it won't respond to these issues. Students must pressure them to do it. The graffitti in the library and the bathroom stalls reflects the extent of racism, sexism, and homophobia among students. We will support and join efforts to increase awareness and education to make UMass a better place for all of us.

Students must be aware of token efforts designed by the administration only to pacify us. We must work for change. When the future of student rights is in jeopardy, talk is a very cheap commodity. We need action.

More student involvement goal of Keohan/Sbardella

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

Promoting involvement in student government is the main issue for Patrick T. Keohan and Teresa C. Sbardella, candidates for Student Government Association co-presidents.

"A lot of students who care don't know how to get their voices heard," Sbardella said. "The people involved (in student government) do what they want...but they never go back and see if it's what (their constituents) wanted. They just assume."

If elected, Sbardell and Keohan would each perform the duties of campus president and student member of the board of trustees. Usually the job is split when co-candidacies are run.

"We think the job is too big for one person...it will only work to our advantage to work together and share the duties," Keohan said.

Sbardella said if both candidates are involved in all presidential affairs, when one has to cover for the other at a meeting, "we'll both be up to date on what's going on."

Sbardella, an 18-year-old first year English major, said her experience as high school class president and her work on congressional campaigns gives her the background to be SGA president.

Keohan, a 21-year-old junior political science and economics major, said he has previous student government experience as a senator from Washington Tower. He said he and his running mate's lack of present involvement in the SGA will allow them to evade power struggles.

He would like to involve the residential area governments Keohan said.

"I want the senate to be the main focus of all student activities," he said. "The area governments would provide the functional services to the residents, as read by the residential committee."

Sbardella said that getting all students, not just senators, involved in government would be a priority of their office.

"We'd post certain office hours, any time of the day, "she said. "Anything people want to talk to us about we'll listen to."

"We'll try to maintain an open forum to see what the people want, channeling issues through the Collegian and other newspapers."

Keohan said the government itself, not student apathy is the reason for lack of student involvement in government.

"It is the responsibility of the student officers to make sure (apathy) doesn't happen," he said.

Patrick Keohan & Teresa C. Sbardella

The most important issue of this election is the search for student input. The UMass campus has a high concentration of students, most of whom are disenchanted with the student governmental process. In the past the student body had been openly accused of being apathetic. This apathy, we feel, is just a reflection of the SGA's inadequacy when it comes to representing the student body. We believe the reason for this is a fundamental disagreement of the students reguarding SGA's actions and policies. Labeling the student body apathetic is just an excuse to get around the fact that student government does not function properly.

We interpret this as an attempt to conceal the real weakness of the senate, the main weakness being that the senate functions from a position of powerlessness, unable to implement or enforce the views of the students. The administration looks upon the senate as a suggestion box of student input, where it can pick and choose which ideas it wants to consider. We can no longer accept, and the University of Massachusetts campus of the mid-80s can no longer operate, under the same restrictions that have been carried over from the 70s. The "zoo-mass" paranoia has been utilized too often by the administration to modify student activity.

In a time when student rights are taking a beating, with the adminstration closing in on student activities, it is a good time to consider who will best defend these rights, against bureaucratic encroachment. Now is the time for the student body to actively promote student rights instead of just maintaining a forum of supervised expression. For too long, the student government on this campus has been on the defensive, trying to hold on to whatever privileges the student has. At best it is operated as a watchdog, guarding against the administration in case it tries to attack and restrict these privileges.

We have to bring an end to the separation of area governments from the main body of student politics (SGA). We have to incorporate the area governments into the SGA to create a centralization of student power. This will create a voice strong enough to be recognized by the administration. This will dispose of the historical compromises that student government on this campus is accustomed to. As it stands now, the SGA just serves as an outlet for the most outspoken. Certain leaders who are well-versed on governmental procedures have a monopoly on the senate floor, while the remaining senators simply vote.

It is the responsibility of the students at UMass Amherst to create a united voice in order to get the opinions of every student heard. It is the SGA's duty to guarantee the students that their views will be considered.

Financial responsibility the issue for Hackett/Cerrato

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

Increased communication and financial responsibility are the central issues to Kimberly Hackett and Michael Cerrato, candidates for Student Government Association co-presidents.

"I want to improve communication between the Whitmore (Administration Building) and the Student Activities Office and student government," Cerrato said. "We need a lot more high-level communication."

Cerrato, a 22-year-old junior history major, said improved communication would create financial responsibility for student groups.

"The most important student right there is is knowing how your money is being spent," Cerrato said. "I want to examine all RSOs (Registered Student Organizations) and senate groups to see how they spend their money."

Hacket, a 19-year-old sophomore political science major, said the SGA leadership should work closer with the various student committees, specifically the finance and budget committees.

"The fact is we spend so much money and waste so much money that we might have to cut RSOs next year," Hackett said.

One area that should be cut if possible, she said, is the professional payroll, because it uses money which might otherwise be used for student groups.

"Professional payroll is far too excessive," Hackett said. "They have to take cost of living allowance and insurance increases every year. The (student activity) fee is high enough now -the students shouldn't have to lose out on activities."

Cerrato, who has been assistant to the Budgets Committee chairman for two semesters said student leadership should avoid "partisan war" with other members of student government and "move student government in a positive direction."

Hackett, who would serve as the student member of the board of trustees, said her experience as chairwoman of the Rents and Fees committee for the last six months has prepared her to be the trustee.

Hackett, a senator from the Greek area, and member of Kappa Kappa Gamma, also worked on the Rape Task Force and the Swing Space Task Force.

Cerrato, a senator from Dwight House, is involved in the UMass Chamber Choir and the campus Episcopal Youth Group.

Kim Hackett & Mike Cerrato

Hi, we're Kim Hackett and Mike Cerrato and we are running for SGA co-presidents. Our platform is one of fighting for student rights, as well as providing student activities. That balance, is the the answer that the SGA needs.

Now more than ever, UMass needs strong campus leadership. The administration has threatened to eliminate the Board of Governors, our only voice in the management of the Campus Center. They have proposed an alchohol policy that is restrictive to the point of being unacceptable. They have taken away our lounges and common spaces for "emergency" housing without examining alternatives. In Southwest, they removed furniture from student rooms without student input. The University continues to violate students' civil rights, as in the Yvette Henry case, and withhold information that documents it. The administration has also proposed the universal Resource Fee, a fee that will charge many students for services they do not use.

The issues don't end off-campus. Students must work together to stop the financial aid cuts which attack the very foundation of our educational system. No student should be forced to drop out of school because their financial needs cannot be met.

As we push for student rights, we will be careful not to neglect the programming needs of students. Other candidates have focused only on student rights, but have forgotten that students need activities, too. More of the SGA's budget must be directed towards activities, especially those for underage students. The SGA should provide bigger and better free concerts, and more of them. We have been and will continue to work for an SGA budget act that includes money for concerts. Students pay a $96 activities fee, and we want to make sure that they get their money's worth.

We believe in a student government that will address the present financial crisis and get to the job of working with students; for students.

We're asking for your support because issues count. We have been working on those issues which students are concerned about. From the Universal Resource Fee and the proposed alcohol policy, to spring concerts and the academic grievance procedure — issues which require strong, effective leadership willing to truly stand up for students.

We, Kim Hackett and Mike Cerrato, feel we can provide students with the balance of both advocacy and activities. The SGA can and should provide both of them, and that's what our candidacy is all about.

A vote for Hackett/Cerrato is a vote for more input. More ideas. More activities. More fun.

Board of Governors election draws 32 candidates for 18 open positions

By JEANNETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

Thirty two students will vie for 18 positions in the Campus Center Board of Governors next week and seven people are running for six positions in the Residential committee elections.

The BOG is the student governance unit for the Campus Center/Student Union complex. "They try to get student input into the Campus Center," John Crowley, the undergraduate elections coordinator, said. The Board's $134,000 budget comes from the $84 Campus Center Fee students pay each semester.

"The BOG has been fighting for existence" since December, Crowley said, when the University proposed a plan to eliminate the board.

Ten people will be elected to the board as at-large representatives, and one board member will be elected from each residential area, including the Greeks, Central, Northeast, Sylvan, and Orchard Hill. The Southwest Residential Area will have two representatives, and the Commuter Area will have three.

Northeast, Sylvan, and Greek areas are running uncontested.

The Residential Committee is a University wide committee which decides policies for the dorms, said Crowley. Members decide on issues like swing spaces, resident assistants' responsibilities, the alcohol policy and residence hall renovations.

"They try to oversee what money is allocated to the dorms and how it is used," said Crowley. "They have had a lot of influence on what is decided, but are not a highly publicized committee."

Last semester when furniture was removed from Southwest, the Residential Committee was "instrumental in getting the mirrors back," he said.

In the elections for Residential Committee one representative will be chosen from each residential area, with Southwest choosing two. All of the positions are uncontested with the exception of Central area.

All the candidates agreed the SGA was going to have to cut its budget in the coming year, and all agreed that cutting out registered student organizations was not the answer, but there were differences on the role the president should play in budget decisions.

Hackett/Cerrato emphasized the need to cut waste in the SGA before cutting RSO's, and to make every attempt to help small RSO's survive during the current financial crisis.

"There is a crisis. Let's face it, the SGA doesn't have any money," Hackett said. Cerrato added that the SATF "has been stretched and stretched and it's going to break."

It is the responsibility of the president to be actively involved in making sure that budget cuts are fair and do not cut out neccessary services, Cerrato said.

Roth/Burgess said the president is not the treasurer or chair of the budgets committee and should focus on student rights.

Roth, however, also emphasized the need to hold the SGA accountable for its spending: "Fiscal responsibility is one thing, fiscal strangulation is another."

Keohan/Sbardella said some of the smaller RSO's might have to face cuts to help alleviate budget problems.

Bambaataa show dismal

DJ Afrika Bambaataa in the Student Union Ballroom Friday, March 1

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

Last Friday night I had a choice of staying in my room and studying or going to see DJ Afrika Bambaataa. I decided to see Afrika Bambaataa. I should have stayed in my room.

When I arrived, there were about 30 people there including the security guards. A total of about 75 people showed up.

There are two reasons that I have thought of for the low turnout. The first one is the ticket price was too high. Six dollars is a bit much to ask for a performer who hasn't had a hit record in quite some time. The second reason is Angela Bofil was performing at Smith College that Saturday night and when it came down to a choice, most people preferred to see Angela Bofil.

Music was provided by the Black Mass Communication Project All-Stars. Although they did a nice job of mixing, the music was a bit too loud for such a small crowd.

The party started at 9:00 but Bambaataa didn't make an appearance until 11:30. Dressed in a sweatsuit, he looked as if he had just returned from the gym.

Two gentlemen which accompanied him did most of the rapping, while Bambaataa rapped for only twenty minutes.

While the crowd danced to the music, their response was less than enthusiastic to the rapper's chant. The only positive response they received is when one of Bambaataa's companions asked the crowd if they liked sex!

The most action at the party was watching people walk in and out of the Student Union Ballroom.

Not even the "open bar" for students 20 years old and over could save this pitiful excuse for a party.

The DJ Afrika Bambaataa "experience" was a dismal failure.

Wheeler photo show hot

Intro to Black and White Photography Wheeler Art Gallery through March 11.

By ANDREW HELLER
Collegian Staff

As I entered the Wheeler Art Gallery, located on the first floor of Wheeler Dormitory, I kept saying to myself, "Don't expect miracles. These students were only in this photo class for three weeks over intersession. Some had never touched a camera before in their lives."

Instead, I was pleasantly surprised by the high quality and unique angles presented in some of the more than 40 prints on display by Dina Melanson's Introduction to Black and White Photography students.

The course syllabus stressed some of the basic photographic concepts such as depth of field, shutter speed variations and some special effects with high contrast and solarization techniques.

A few students made some excellent self-portraits. Catherine Pitt has a well-framed shot of herself with a truly eye-catching expression. The high level of enlargement gives a very grainy texture to the photograph, providing a misty, seductive appeal.

Mark Lewis chose a bathroom for the setting of his self-portrait. The light streaks from the window blinds cast diagonal shadows across his face and the visible camera contribute to the authenticity of the self-portrait.

Martha Systrom's "Christopher" is a fine portrait of a young boy, with the natural light source reflected in his wide open eyes. His soft skin tones and missing tooth combine to form this lovable image.

Such a neglected item as a snow-covered storm grate was brought to life by M. Jane Paglee's "Meltdown." The print is razor sharp with a fantastic texture to the snow. It was so real I got cold just looking at it.

These are just a few of the photographs on display. I strongly urge you to visit the Wheeler Gallery and take a look at the entire exhibit which continues through March 11th.

Bags on parade

The Shopping Bag: Portable Graphic Art Herter Art Gallery through March 15.

By BRIAN STACEY
Collegian Correspondent

"The Shopping Bag: Portable Graphic Art" is an exhibit at the Herter Art Gallery that portrays how advertisers utilize the shopping bag to create an image for the store and the consumer.

The exhibit is on loan from the Smithsonian Institute's traveling exhibit series. Among the hundred-odd bags are some designed by art students from UMass Art Professor Paston's graphics class.

Stores around the world, from Filene's to Godiva Chocolatier, are represented. Today the bags have become status symbols. They portray not only an establishment's image, tone, and quality, but the bag carrier hopes that some of that image will transfer to himself.

A Christmas and small-size collage is included. Specialty bags such as long and skinny shopping bags from wallpaper stores are represented.

Some bags tell a story about what the store carries, some use unusual material such as plastic, other stores use a one-color scheme. Advertisers sometimes use a striking pictorial scene as a field of multi-colored flowers. The danger is that the picture will hide verbal identification with the store.

This interesting and unusual display of graphic design remains at Herter Art Gallery until March 15.

Turk 182 is trite, clever, and predictable. Fortunately for us, it's also kind of fun.

Timothy Hutton, in an 180-degree turn-around from his role as a tortured teen-ager in Ordinary People, plays a scruffy but likeable New Yorker who battles bureaucracy with ingenuity and spray paint.

The flimsily-constructed reason? Hutton's brother, a New York City firefighter (Robert Urich), is injured as he rescues a little girl from a burning building while off-duty and tipsy. Urich is a very nice man who even has a special firefighting award. The Mayor (Robert Culp) is a very mean man who denies him workman's compensation because of a couple of Buds.

Sounds a little like Dorothy versus the Wicked Witch, doesn't it? But the Most Plastic Character Prize goes to Hutton's social-worker-turned-girlfriend (Kim Cattrall). What could be worse than cartoon-like people? You guessed it — cartoon-like situations. Hutton, in his efforts to ruin the Mayor's re-election campaign, refuses to let the public forget that one of the incumbent's best buddies pulled a political "no-no" and took off for Rio. He sprays Sears Latex on subways and signs. He blasts Benjamin Moore on buses and billboards. He maligns the scoreboard at Meadowlands Stadium.

Naturally, a roomful of cops, who can't figure out who he is, hates his guts. Not to worry. Everyone else loves him. His exploits claim more magazine covers than Brooke Shields in tangerine eyeshadow.

But despite its many glaring flaws, Turk is forgivable, because for once, someone finally tangles administrators in their own red tape. That's not something we see too often at UMass.

If for no other reason, this film should be a big hit in Amherst. It was a bad movie that I kind of liked.

MINUTEMEN MUTTERINGS: UMass is 8-1 on Saturday afternoons, so to try and create that atmosphere, the Minutemen will eat a pre-game brunch tomorrow, foregoing the usual steak dinner that precedes night games. UMass will also stay in Somerset, New Jersey when at the tournament, away from the busy Hyatt Regency, the A-10's official hotel.

Eight players are from the New Jersey-New York area which should help UMass' support. Three newspapers, two radio stations, and a television station will be traveling with the team to Jersey, including WMUA-FM (91.1) which will broadcast its "Sportstalk" show from courtside on Thursday night at 6 p.m.

It's tourney time for the Minutemen

Atlantic 10 field is balanced

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 basketball tournament, starting tonight at Rutgers University, is anyone's game.

The top three teams in the league, Temple, West Virginia and St. Joseph's, have all struggled at some point during the season and have a chance at an early departure.

The middle of the pack, Massachusetts, Rutgers and George Washington, have experienced problems but have played well against the top teams. They too could be knocked off early, or come on strong and win the tourney, and the NCAA berth.

The bottom teams in the league, St. Bonaventure, Duquesne, Penn State and Rhode Island, have played poorly during the conference season, but have upset some contenders and have decent chances at a spoiler's role.

"If I had to select a favorite, I'd say that West Virginia and St. Joseph's are the two teams to beat," UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen said.

"But that's not to downplay Temple, they have a lot of talent and the coaching, they've just had troubles lately," the coach said.

At stake at the four day tournament (see schedule) is a position in the 64 team NCAA tourney. Temple, chances are, will get in anyway and West Virginia has a good chance as well, but the remaining eight squads need the tourney win to continue their season.

On display will be some good talent. Temple's Granger Hall and Charles Rayne, West Virginia's Lester Rowe, George Washington's Mike Brown and Rutgers's John Battle to name some of the best.

St. Joe's Bob Lojewski and Maurice Martin have been playing well as of late. Duquesne's Rick Suder and Penn State's Craig Collins are also quality ballplayers.

For the local entry, senior forward Horace Neysmith and senior guard Donald Russell are among the top ten in scoring. Point guard Carl Smith runs the team better than any of his league peers. Senior Bobby Braun is third in league rebounding and freshman Lorenzo Sutton has been a scoring tear this past week.

Temple, West Virginia and St. Joseph's, because they have been labeled as the favorites in this balanced league, have that pressure on them. Rutgers, because it is at home, is also under the looking glass. That leaves UMass and George Washington as two possible surprises.

But the colonials, who split with UMass this season, have been beset with internal problems. The Minutemen, which were picked for last in all pre-season polls, have every reason to be loose.

"I look at it like we aren't supposed to beat these guys anyway, so maybe we can have some fun out there because we know we can beat them," Gerlufsen said. "I enjoy proving the polls wrong."

UMass opens tomorrow night at 7 p.m. against Rutgers. UMass beat the Scarlet Knights at home, 83-72. They lost last week in Piscataway 86-79 as UMass shot poorly.

"I believe that we can beat them," Gerlufsen said. "We have to shoot better and play our usual aggressive full court defense."

Should UMass beat Rutgers, next in line would be the Mountaineers of West Virginia.

Gerlufsen was blunt. "We don't like them, not many people do. I look forward to playing, and beating, them. Our players would love another shot at them and I hope we get it."

UMass was beat 82-59 in Morgantown by UWV, and lost 76-74 in overtime in Springfield.

"Anything can happen, that's what they always say about tournaments," Gerlufsen said. "But it's true to the extent that you can be upset in this type of situation. I feel good about our chance. UMass has improved this season to the point where we aren't jokes to everyone. It's time to

Lee to wrestle UM's finale

Despite program's last season, makes nationals

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian staff

The 19th and final season for the University of Massachusetts wrestling team will go on a little longer with the selection of sophomore Chris Lee as a wild card at last weekend's New England championships at the University of Maine, Orono.

Lee, the defending New England champion at 126 pounds, was foiled in his attempt for a second straight title when New Hampshire's Dave Beaulieu beat Lee, 12-6.

Dana Richards also took a second for UMass at 167 pounds dropping a 5-1 decision to defending champion John Hanlon of Boston College.

Freshman Tom Pomella took third with a 4-2 win over top-seeded Tony D'Arezzo of Boston University at 190 while sophomore Brian Shaughnessy (177) and Dan White (heavyweight) took fourths for the Minutemen.

But it will be Lee, who has an unimpressive slate of 8-7, that will represent Massachusetts wrestling for the final time at the NCAA championships March 14-16 in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Lee was one of the two wild card wrestlers chosen by the coaches to represent New England at the nationals.

"I'm excited about the chance to go to the nationals," Lee said. "I just wanted to stop after I lost (in the finals) but the coaches wanted me to go."

Lee earned another trip to the New England finals with a convincing 17-2 over Hartford in the semis but in the finals the Wildcat's Beaulieu took the upper hand early.

Beaulieu took an early 4-0 lead on a takedown and near fall but Lee reversed and Beaulieu was penalized for locking hands and it was 4-3. It was the closest Lee would come.

"He wrestled well and I wrestled well," Lee said. "I guess the better guy won."

Richards jumped out on top right away in his semi-final match against New Hampshire taking a 5-0 lead on a takedown and near fall. But he had to hang on for a 5-4 victory.

Massachusetts took fifth. Boston University (65), Maine (64.25), Boston College (56.75), UNH (54.75) were ahead of UMass' 31 points. Hartford was last with 14 points.

For too long in the past news of concern and interest to the Third World community has been ignored, extorted, or delegated to the back pages of area newspapers. Thus Third World students have had little forum to express their concerns , interests and ideas. The valley community at large have also been deprived of reading about news that exists in the Third World community in the valley, the nation and abroad.

To alter this situation, NUMMO NEWS has provided the printed news of, by and about Third World people. Filling in this void has accomplished three major goals. First, is that when the community wants to learn about what it means to be a Third World student, they refer to NUMMO NEWS. We feel that this has proved to be educational to people that would otherwise remain ignorant of three fourths of the world's population.

Second, the paper has been Second, the paper has been a practical training ground for people who want to join the field of journalism, business menegement, graphics and leyout. This is an invalueble aspect of the newspaper.

Finally, NUMMO is the largest weekly Third World newspaper in New England. This, we feel, is not only a credit to a consistent, determined and hard working staff, but also to the University as a whole.

We plan to continue printing NUMMO on a weekly basis so as to continue informing the valley about Third World people.

Legend in Her Time:

Maya Angelou Visits U.M.

by Marilyn G. Bou
Nummo Staff

Maya Angelou, a poet, song and playwrite, dancer, choreographer and speaker fluent in English, Spanish, German and Frech, has indeed become a legend in her own time.

"I am truly delighted to be here in this city of UMass/Amherst," said Angelou in the opening of her speech on Monday, February 25 at Bowker Auditorium.

Angelou, who was invited to speak as part of the Black History Month celebration, focused on Black poetry and the importance of Black literature. "The writings of my people have so seldom been appreciated, yet their exsistence symbolizes the love which must be credited for the survival of a human species," she said. Black writings have, throughout history, been ignored by many, according to Angelou. However those who have not educated themselves, have denied themselves.

Among the writers Angelou quoted were Gordon Parks, Countie Evans, Nikki Giovanni, Mari Evans, James Walden Johnson, along with an assortment of African proverbs. Angelou also sang excerpts from "Take Time Out", a song she wrote which was recorded by Roberta Flack. She reminded the audience that life and love are precious gifts,saying, "Take a moment for youselves, for without selflove one cannot provide love for another."

Speaking on women Angelou pointed out that they can be their own worst enemy. "Women should challenge themselves to be the best in whatever roles they are fulfilling at any particular time. fulfilling at any particular time."

"I encourage you to LEARN," was Angelou's message to the scholars in the audience, adding, "All knowledge is expandable depending upon the market." She also encouraged everyone to take advantage of libraries.

In closing, Angelou told the audience,"Black poetry, keep it alive." Her inspiring and educational speech was rewarded with a standing ovation which lasted well over three minutes.

Due to technical difficulties, NUMMO NEWS did not appear until this issue of the COLLEGAIN. Our normal distribution is on Monday. We apologize for any inconvience to our readers.

Historical Links:

Hundreds of people gathered last Thursday night to hear Chinese author and historian, Dr. Han Suyin deliver this years W.E.B. DuBois Lecture at the Campus Center of the University of Massachusetts. Her presentation was entitled "China and Africa: Linkage in the thought of W.E.B. DuBois and writers of the Third World". Africa has recieved great feelings from China, said Dr. Suyin, "owing to the common history of violence."

As cameramen moved from wall to wall in the packed room and reporters took notes, Dr. Suyin spoke to the crowd of the close links between China and Africa and the links between Dr. DuBois and the people of China. Following a film that was shown on Dr. Dubois' visit to China for his 91st birthday, Dr. Suyin spoke of the significance of the Dubois visit and the pride she and the people of China had for him. This (tribute paid to DuBois at UMass) is what DuBois wanted," said Suyin.

Dr. Suyin went on to say that what is happening in UMass (cultural events and intellectual exchange) is going to be a fruitful beginning. She added, "If the youth of today will only help each other, then one day they would be able to take over this world." In conclusion, Dr. Suyin cautioned in a whispered tone, "When you drink from the water do not forget the man who dug the well."

AND STILL... THE STRUGGLE

The Rededication of the Malcolm X Center

Twenty years have passed since Malcolm 'X', El Hajj Malik El Shabazz was assassinated and still the struggle for equality among people of color continues. The annual rededication of the Malcolm "X" Center here at UMass/Amherst featured as keynote speaker, Ms. Betty Shabazz, Malcolm's widow. In keeping with her husband's nonseparatist way of thinking Shabazz said, "We must not get bogged down with the system, we must however continue to realiza that our stregnth comes in numbers and we should maximize that power." She continued, "One snowflake may not make the difference but many however, will prevent an airplane from taking off. Shabazz said, "We must continue to support equality all members of the human race."

Malcolm was an inspirational leader for the Black peoples of this country, with his most powerful weapon being his gift of truth by word of mouth. An example of the struggle still revelant today is the untollerable regime which exists in South Africa. She said,"We in this country must continue to dismantle aparthied."

The "X" here at the university symbolizes both a social gathering place as well as providing study space for many students of color. Shabazz said,"Young people today must realize that education is the most effective means by which to overcome any present and future struggles, not only in this country but those of our brothers and sisters throughout the world."

Mutually Impressed

Another look at the important visit of Cape Verde Ambassador

by Segun Eubanks

The following are excerpts from the presentation and interview of the Cape Verdean Ambassador, Jose Fernandes-Lopes.

THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS

"I am impressed with the University's faculty and facilities. Wa have a very positive attitude toward the University of Massachusatts and we are looking forward to working an axchanga systam for the studants of Cape Verde."

HIGHER EDUCATION IN CAPE VERDE

We racaivad our indapendenca ten years ago. We didn't inherit any scholastic facilitias from the Portuguesa govarnmant. Thus, wa must send our students to countries such as the Unitad States, Portugal, Brazil and many othar countrias."

"These students coma to tha racipient countries to gain tha highar education which tha institutions offer. Thosa students which hava racaivad governmant support will study abroad with the vehicla to return to Cape Verde to practice their skills.

"Tha students are ancouraged to study Agriculture, Madicina, Law and Managamant. Wa hope to davelop our own systam of Managamant, both political and social."

TOURISM VS. CULTURE

This depends on tha policy which the country sets up. Cape Varde has avoidad dealing with large industries which have only financial interest. We axtend a welcome to private businesses with special interest in our country, for example the Oceanographers."

THE DRAUGHT

We had heavy rain in the winter months of Decamber and January. Thus wa are able to produce beans and vegatables. However our largest cereal crop suffered a total loss.

"The F.A.O. which is a national organization to assess the draught conditions in the world is helping us recover.

HUNGER

We really don't have that problem (hunger) in our country. There ar no relief programs with other countries. We have programs to assist the elderly and the poor vary similar to your own (Tha United Statas) Welfara program.

MESSAGE TO CAPE VERDEANS IN AMERICA

"I believe that the Cape Vardeans which ara citizens in the United States should always remember where they are from. I say to you this; do not discard your culture and let your haratity become just a folk reference. Keep you history and be proud of your background. I believe this will stranghan you as a person and as an American.

"For those returning to Capa Varde, we wish you to educate our people and use your knowledge to make ua a strong, self sufficiant country.

"I am impressed with the University's faculty and facilities," said Cape Verdian Ambassador to the U.S. Jose Fernandes-Lopes during his recent visit to tha University to investigate possible academic collaboration between UMass and the Cape Verde Islands. However, while the Ambassador was impressed with UMass, he also left his impression on a number of Cape Verdean students here, whom he met with at the New Africa House. NUMMO NEWS talked to two such students to get their reaction to the Ambassadors visit and how it affected the newlyformed Cape Verdean Student's Alliance. Sidonio Ferriera, a junior Mechanical Engineering Major and Rui Peraira a sophmora Civil Engineering Major saam to hava their hands full with academics but this doas not stop them from baing involvad in the community; they ara the Co-Chairman andPrasident, respectivaly, of the Cape Verdean Student's Alliance.

The Ambassador's prasentation was "very informative," said Ferriara, giving an idea of "what Capa Varda has to offer to students here. What to expect politically from Capa Varde when you visit," he said. When askad if tha Ambassador sparkad intarest in the possibility of going back to Cape Verde, Peraira respondad, "I had tha idea of going back, but with his visit I hava reinforced my thoughts about going."

The Ambassador strassad the importance of Capa Vardean and othar minority students, working hard for good grades to prova sociatal staraotypas wrong, said both Pereira and Farraira. "Cape Verdeans ara always taught to be hard working paopla hare at UMass wa must continue that tradition "Pereira added.

Both young men agreed that the Ambassadors visit affected the role of the Cape Verdean Alliance and reinforced their long term goal of building alliances with other Cape Verdeans in the araa. "A main goal (of the Alliance) is to have a conference to educate people about Capa Verde, where they come from and who they are," said Pereira. On the quastion of certain forms

On the question of cretain forms of disunity that exists between soma Cape Verdeans and Black Americans, Rui Paraira and Sidonio Ferreira see their role as trying "to educate both sides to see that we are all brothers and sistars, all Africans." Indicating that in Cape Verde there is very little distinction in shades of color, both men said that it is not a question of how you label yourself. "We do not consider ourselves as white or black but as Africans."

As a last satatemaent, both Sidonio and Rui asked that stereotypes be dismissed. They remarked, "Don't try to judge one Cape Verdean. There are always some Cape Verdeans or Blacks who don't want to associate with people. We invite all people to come to our meetings, not just Cape Verdeans, to check us out and see what we are all about."

The answer will appear in next weeks NUMMO. Submit answers by Friday, March 1, 1985 to room 103 New Africa House.

Missed the 'Perfect Beat'

If you experienced D.J. Africa Bambatta at the S.U.B. on Friday March 1st 1985 from 9pm-1am you were definitely a victim of an overpriced avant which produced little if any excitament. The Africa Bambatta who appeared at the Fine Arts Center spring semestar of 1983 was nothing like the Africa-Bambatta that appeared here on Friday night.

There was a very poor attandance (approx 100 person including 20 or so who worked on security) partially due to the price ($7.00) and not much excitament due to the fact that Mr. Bambatta only played his music for no more than an hour, and did not once address the small crowd of Friday noght victims. The BMCP D.J.'s played music longar and better, and honestly, I faal anyone could've done a descant job - becausa Mr. Bambatta could not find the "perfect beat"!!

AFRICA - Lost Continent?

by Rod Clare
Nummo Staff

".. It [Africa] will become a lost continent," forewarned C. Payne Lucas, unless it recieves help in the long run. Long run development, not just short term aid, was what Mr. Lucas stressed in his spech to a mostly white audience at Amherst College last Tuesday.

In his lecture, "A Call to Action on the African-Crisis," Mr. Payne, founder and executive director of Africare, a rural help program, said that his priority is to save lives but that "Africa needs a Marshall Plan." Citing various problems that the continant faces, Mr. Payne noted examples such as: the avarage income for an African is about $200 a yaar, that people freeze at night because they have no blankets, that a country like Senegal loses about 300,000 hectacres of forest per year, and that fa mers have little incantive to plant food because they maka no profit.

Mr. Payna said that the conflict cuts across lines [racial, athnic, religous, atc.] and the care that the American people showed towards the famine victims backs up his piont. He added though that since deaths have decreased, news about the famine has been cut back even Ethiopia is being ignored by the press.

Tha continant has great potential, said Mr. Payne stressing that Africans have to help Africa and other Africans because there are about 5 million refugees over the whole continent. People are also moving into urban araas for tha type of life it offars so Mr. Payne suggested that the rural areas would have to be mada more enticing to attract people back.

America's foreign policy also concarned Mr. Payne because of the billions of dollars that go for military as opposed to economic aid. He commended Amherst College for being so concarned about Africa but suggested that they go still furhtar and "adopt a village" in the sense that all the money thast Amherst raises for Africa goes to ona particular village. He also recommended this for U.S. campus. In a final note, he made a call for America to help Africa lika it did Europe.

NUMMO EDITORIAL: Release The Report!

Have the Civil Rights of Yvette Henry, a black resident assistant charged with one of the fires that plagued Crampton dormitory in the fall of 1983, been violated? Very possibly, says a report by the Committee on the Status of Minorities, which has yet to be publicly released by the Faculty Senate Rules Committee. Since the Thursday, February 14, 1985 issue, the collegian has printed a number of articles and editorials, including a full reprint of the actual report, in an effort to inform the University community and persuade the Faculty Senate Rules Committee to release the report to the public.

NUMMO NEWS gives its whole hearted support and joins the Collegian in the demand to release the report, which all students, have a right to see. We would like to commend the Collegian for meeting their journalistic responsibility and even going beyond that by supporting both the Civil and First Ammendment rights of all students. The Faculty Senate, by not releasing the report, is supporting the same institutional racism that victimized Yvette Henry. We, as a student community, must not let what happened to Ms. Henry be repeated in the future. The release of this support is vital to the struggle to maintain the civility and diversity that represented (but has not reflected) the ideas of our University. We would, however, take issue w a statement made by Rita Murphy (Wednesday Feb. 27, 1985) in her editorial titled "Doesn't anyone care?" in which she states, "It seems the Collegian is the only group displaying dismay at the behavior of the administration and Faculty Senate in not releasing a report..." While it is true that NUMMO has not displayed "dismay" (Frankly, we are not at all surprised with the conduct of administration officials who have been supressing vital information from students for years, the South African related University investments as one example), NUMMO and many other Third World Organizations have questioned and challenged the University's actions since the onset of the Yvette Henry arrest. NUMMO published a number of articles and editorials (Dec. 5, 1983, Dec. 12,1983 and Feb. 6, 1984) raising some of the same questions brought out by the report. We talked to the Black administrators who were "present and involved" and we also talked to Yvette Henry, Mrs. Henry (Yvette's mother), representatives from the Legal Services Office, reporters from the Philadelphia Inquirer,Boston Globe, Springfield Daily News and others. It became clear to us that racism and civil rights violations played a role in the Henry case long before the Status of Minorities report stated that possibility. At the same time the Collegian did not find it necessary to do the same investigative reporting, instead hiding behind so-called "journalistic etiquette". It must be pointed out that this year's Collegian staff is almost totally different and has made up for last year's inadequacy with excellent, timely investigative reporting. Also, Rita Murphy has proven to be a fair, responsible journalist and we believe her statement to be and over-sight,nothing else. Once again we commend the Collegian's efforts and join with them in their demand to Faculty Senate. We, as students, faculty and staff have the right to know the facts.

Suppression of such vital information contradicts the basic precepts of democracy and perpetuates the poison of racism that has infested our society for far too many years.

All unsigned editorials reflect the opinion of a majority of the NUMMO staff.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Student Government Co-Presidential candidates Kim Hackett and Micheal Sceratto had a scheduled meeting with the Third World Steering Committee on Thursday, February 28, to exchange platforms and discuss the role of Third World issues in the campaign. The candidates failed to appear at the scheduled time and place. This letter reflects the Third World Steering Committee's reaction.

No apology, nor any words, can change the fact. Your failure to attend the Third World Steering Committee meeting was an insult. It reflects your racism and arrogance in relating to Third World people. It was incorrect; you are wrong, you should have been there.

If a Rightwing coalition had invited you to their meeting, you would have made it. You would have been on time and you would have stayed as long as they wanted you to. You would have courted their endorsement.

The arrogant way in which you just chose not to show up, after communicating to our representative that you would, tells us that yo don't really care about our vote. If you were not going to come than you should have sent word in advance.

The Third World Steering Committee has a message for you, any other CoPresidency candidates and all of the students in the S.G.A. who think of themselves as the 'WhiteRight'. The message is this: The Asian, Black, Hispanic, Native American and all other people of color, are part of the American Mainstream. The Rainbow Coalition is here to stay. We pay the Student Activities Trust Fund tax and we will have a say about how the whole pie gets spent.

The arrogance and insensitivity you have demonstrated suggests you may not be fit to be Co-Presidents. You obviously don't care enough about ALL of the students on campus. You obviously have chosen to write off the Third World vote. That is quite unfortunate.

In expressing ourselves by writing this letter we the Third World Steering Committee, want you to know about our indignation and disgust. As stated previously, there are no words which you might say that can reduce the indignation all members of the Committee felt when you failed to appear at our Thursday metting as scheduled.

In the upcoming elections for Student Government officers, our voice will be heard. The fact that you chose to insult us just means that you can count on us not supporting your ticket.

In fact as a gesture to prove you are not racist, as your behavior indicates, you ought to withdraw from the race and get behind the ticket we will be supporting.

Racism is a very peculiar institution. It has been around in our country since the white men arrived. From the days when genocide was perpetuated against the Navajos and other Native Americans, up through the cruel Middle Passage and slavery and on through to today, some Americans have thought they had something over other groups, just because they have no complexion. You must understand that the way in which you behaved is an example of the '80's' style of racism.

Editor s Note :

The following is being re-run due to popular demand

Shame, shame, shame on you. Yes, you the so-called "Black" students of the Five College area, especially those of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, for not attending the numerous events planned for Black History Month. Where were you? Please don't tell me studying. Studying only takes up so much of your time. Besides, any truely concerned African student would have made the time by arrang- not you, your too "good" for that.

However, many have time to gossip. Many more have lots of time to make endless excursions to the Hampshire Mall to insure that Africans in America maintain their high levels of consumption and non-ing to attend at least a few of the many events, but su·e enough some of us are truely dumb; some are deaf and blind too. However, the blame is not all on you, after all we have all been programmed to self-destruct.

Many of those who are in positions of so-called "leadership" also failed to attend many of these events. This is surely a tragedy, because the future of the race and the world is in your hands. Well, if you don't change your thinking and behavior, and soon too, we are all surely doomed.

Those "Black" students who did not attend any of these events because of indifference or laziness are guilty of treason for not paying respect to their deceased and living Africans who fought and are still fighting for their liberation. It is a crime that Malcolm X, Martin Luther King Jr, and countless others died so that you could dance up and down with a bunch of white people at a rappers concert. They gave their lives for more than that; they offered their lives so that exsistent levels of production. And yes, you have time to party; we can't forget that. This does not mean that there is anything wrong with partying, but too much of one thing makes Jack a dull boy. And we, the future, could excell in the things they couldn't. They died so that the race could live and not merely exist.

Unfortunately, this apathy is not new. Last fall there was a Third World Leadership Conference. The turn-out was relatively good, especially when the food was served. African students came from all over the New England area, many of whom arrived at 9:30 a.m. when it began, but where were most of you then? Some of us claim that we are Black, but are we and do we want to be? It appears to me that some of us are nothing more than Europeans wearing black face.

Nevertheless, all praise must go to all of those African students, faculty, and administration who organized and attend any of the events held during the last few weeks. For those of you who have not attended, I suggest that you do and soon too! This is not a pleasant subject to write about, but the truth has to be revealed regardless of who it may hurt or embarass.

Lest We Forget

Excerpts From Our People

Editor's note: The following are exerpts taken from a pamphlet entitled "Students and the African Revolution," printed and distributed by the All-African People's Revolutionary Party.

The All-African People's Revolutionary Party (A-APRP) emerged in 1972 as a product of the Civil Rights, Black Power and National Liberation movements of the 1940's,50's and 60's, dedicated to: 1) Building an organization capable of galvanizing the collective energies of Africa's 900 million scattered, suffering and struggling people (all people of African descent are Africans and belong to the African Nation); and 2) Directing that energy toward our total emancipation.

Of etratigic necessity we have chosen to focus on developing a core group of genuine freedom fighters armed with the skill of organizing, guided by scientific thinking and inspired by just principles. We do not expect immediate rewards nor seek instant gratification for the task we have shouldered is by its very nature generational.

The international capitalist (economic) system has sown the wind of African discontent and it is reaping the whirlwind of the African Revolution -- a whirlwind of change whose ideas are being spread to Africans everywhere by the enlightened organizers who constitute the African revolutionary intelligentsia.

WHAT IS INTELLIGENTSIA?

The intelligentsia is that segment of the community with the broadest acquisition of the knowledge and skills available in society. They usually correspond to those who have had the broadest exposure to formal education, i.e., students, teachers, doctors, lawyers, politicians, advanced workers, etc. As a whole, they have been either co-opted to work against the interests of the broad masses of the people, or they have merged the problems of the people and their own as one, and work tirelessly to see them resolved.

The intelligentsia serves both a political as well as an economic function. Politically, they have the task of defending and elaborating the ideology of the dominat class in society. Economically, they have the responsibility of ensuring the continued technological development of society by introducing new ideas and techniques, which increase the production capacity of society as a whole.

HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE AFRICAN INTELLIGENTSIA

Before contact with the outside world, Africa developed complex societies with various educational systems aimed at ensuring our continued intellectual and technical development. Ancient Africa developed writing, mathematics, astronomy, architecture, medicine, etc. We must therefore turn to traditional Africa to identify the intellectual basis of our struggle. The roots of the African Revolution is found in the struggle to harness nature and to destroy indigenous African exploiters who sold their brothers/sisters into slavery and collaborated with the European imperialists who came to colonize our land -- Africa.

The collaboration between the European imperialists and Africans seeking to exploit the people while acquiring personal wealth, political power and social prestige, devastated the African Nation. Over 90 million Africans were kidnapped from Africa and shipped to the Carribeen, South, Central and North America; and stripped of their identity, culture and were made to be ashamed of Africa.

The capitalist system emerged full blown from this murderous slave trade of human flesh dripping with blood from African veins and sweat from African backs. Without exception, the U.S., France, England, etc., left the masses of our people in poverty, diseased, melnourished and uneducated. Despite all of this, they still could not destroy our desire to be free. to reclaim our dignity and remake our lives.

By 1960, capitalism/imperialism was being forced to give ground under the weight of mass popular uprisings and resistance everywhere. National independence and liberation was sweeping the continent of Africa, the Middle East, the Carribean, Central and South being consolidated in Asia, Eastern Europe, Africa and Cuba. Everywhere, capitalism/imperialism was in a severe crisis and suffering set-backs and defeats. Imperialism had to respond.

Its response was massive, brutal and vicious. It included the development of neo-colonialim (a new form of colonialism) internetionelly and the welfare state domestically; attempts to blur, confuse, divert and soften contredictions through liberal reforms. And when all else failed, fascism, repression, intimidation, harassment, imprisonment, enforced exile, murder coups d'etet, outright invasion and war.

In the course of this struggle two important lessons were learned: 1) That the movement had to be guiled by one, revolutionary ideology of African orgin, (Nkrumahism); and 2) this ideology (Nkrumehism) had to be carried to the masses by young intellectuals brought together in a revolutionary, mass, permenent, Pan-African, political party.

THE ROLE OF THE STUDENT: WHAT MUST BE DONE?

We have reached that critical point when historical event have clearly identified the forces of contention --the oppressed against the oppressors. The battle lines have been drawn. In the balance hange the future of our home --Africa-- and its 900 million scattered, suffering and struggling people.

African students stand in a position to heve an enormous impact on the speed, direction and outcome of this greet human struggle. The choices faced by you are crystal clear -- modern slavery or freedom, capitalism or socialism, revolution or surrender. We know that many of you will continue to chase a life of leisure and weelth, while putting your own personal interests above the interests of the people. We also know that many of you will never graduate. Those of you thet do, many will be jobless; all will be landless and powerless, and not one of you will be free.

The A-APRP is looking to organize those African men and women whose conscience impels them to act on behelf of their people. Those we seek are honest, disciplined, responsible and willing to set aside the selfish ideas propagated by the capitalist system. We call upon you to edopt a new set of ethics, morals and principles in order to assume your role as part of our new revolutionary intelligentsia. You are in school as a result of the untiring sacrifices of our people. You are the direct beneficiaries of hundreds of years of struggle end you must use your newly acquired knowledge and skills to push forward our struggle for Pan-Africanism.

We call upon you, African students, to join with African youth throughout the world who have taken to the streets with Positive Action as the struggle to build mass, revolutionary organizations intensifies. They are rising up, demanding liberty, unity and socialism. They are adopting Nkrumahism as their ideology and they are boldly challenging the antiquated concepts of capitalist society and the spineless opportunism of those who claim to be our leaders.

African students, workers end peasants who bear the brunt of capitalist exploitation have grown weary of seeing the owners of factories, mines, banks and imperialist combines grow increasingly rich off their labor as the masses sink further into the depths of poverty. We see the masses of African people as they struggle to the limits of their consciousness against this political and economic tyranny to no avail.

Consequently, revolutionary theory must be injected into the mass struggle of African people by the African revolutionary intelligentsia. This is the role of the student.

The Following are excerpts from, "The Case of Mariana Curileo Quintriple, Mapuche Indian.

Mapuches have lived on the reservation in southern Chile since 1884....through the years much of our land was stolen...and with each generation the parcels of land dwindled until the plots were an acre or two for an entire family....I grew up on such a reservation....We had three acres and live in a ruca, a mud hut with thatched roof and earthen floor. With five children to feed times were often hard, but our family was very close and worked together. ...my two sisters had to leave home to look for work in Santiago; we just couldn't make ends meet any more....At home my little brothers watched our two pigs and four sheep,while I helped my mother with the weaving....The blankets and ponchos we made we copuld sell in town and buy food with the money.

... In 1970 I married Jorge Quintreple....He had been off working in Santiago but he came home to the reservation. He said he thought thing might change under Allende but I didn't really believe him. Politicians were always promising the Mapuche a better life but nothing had ever changed for us....At ...we knew takeovers had happen...that Allende goverment had backed up. We also knew this was a chance to make a decent life for our selves. ...The takeover didn't meet any resistance right off....He came out with a bunch of thugs and threatned us, but a goverment official had been too, and told us we were within our rights. He told the owner that too. The owner and his men came out shooting about three nights after the takeover. But we were ready ofr them and fired back. They never tried that again. Our farm was expropriated legally two months later.

...We renamed it Elicura, after a brave Machupe warrior, and decided to run it collectively....The goverment sent us materials and a carpenter who worked with us teaching us how to build houses. ...I think when things began to settle down a bit we women realize what a change was happening to us. Back home we saw pretty much only our families and close kin. On the reservation neighbrs were pretty far apart. Visiting was an allday affair, and women were expected to keep the water kettle warm at home. But here we were 16 families. Oh, we were all related one way or another, but we weren't used toliving so close. We women could get together real easy, and we sormed a Mother's Center. We started trying to get a teacher and a clinic. Some of the men objected to our activities, they thought we should stay home tending to the meals, gardens, and the children. We still did all our work and cared for the children, but most of us began to work together more on projects. ...We got the teacher and the schoolgoing pretty easily The teacher was one of our own who got some training at a mission school. The goverment sent her to a special program for rural teachers, and she came back to teach at Elicura. Ther were classes at night twice a week to teach the adults reading and writing. The clinic was another matter. Once a month a nurse visited Elicurs and brought the powdered milk. But that wasn't enough for us. We needed a real clinic with a real doctor in our area permanetly....I think the Allende Goverment did a lot to helpmthe poor people. It"s just that there were some problems and as we realize what they were and what we needed, we just didn't want to sit around waiting anymore. ...When the right wing started sabotaging food distribution, we got our own distribution system going, just like they did in the city....Earlier, in August, the military had invaded a cooperative farm on the cos near us, saying the place was a training ground for the MIR guerillas. All they found was a bunch of old beat-up guns the owner left behind;but they put out pictures of a huge amount of bombs and weapons. The women on the farm were stripped and dunked in the cesspool and beaten awfully, all in front of their children. An old man was thrown repeatedly into the cold winter water of the river, and he died a few days later of pneumonia. After four or five days the military left and took most of the men to jail. ...At Elicura we had talked about the resistance end defense and aht the struggle might be like, but we weren't really ready....One of our leaders was executed before our eyes, as an example. Our treasure finally killed himself because they arreated and tortured him so many times that he couldn't stand the thought og enduring more. And a women who tried to organize our health clinic was taken away. We heard she was shot,but we're not sure. Then Junta gave Elicura back to the old owner.

SPORTS ★ TALK

Sophomore point guard, Carl Smith of the University of Massachusetts Minutemen,basketball team, will go down in the history books for this basketball season. Smith has been a hero at more then eight games this season by scoring in the waning seconds to give UMass a win or a tie. Surprisingly, egoism never seems to be a problem for Smith.

Smith 20, who hails from Kings Mountain, North Carolina, is a Sports Management major at UMass. Smith attended Kings Mountain High School after leaving Fork Union Military Prep School in Virginia. In 1983 Smith was offered a scholarship to atudy at the University of Massachusetts, which he accepted with gratitude.

Coming to the Eastern section of the country for the first time in the fall of '83, Smith was attracted by the size of the institution and the hospitality. "I was impressed by how friendly the people were, when I first came here",the five feet 11 inch Smith said.

Although carrying a weight of 165 pounds, Smith is still agile. He earned two cross country letters along with three basketball letters at Kings Mountain High School and one letter at Fork Union Prep. Smith has proven himself here at the University. On the court Smith is a key performer for his coach.

The two most interesting games for Carl were those against Boston and Northeestern Universities, which UMass won last year. "Both teams were from the National Eastern end were supposed to be better then us but, we were just bad",Smith pointed out with a grin.

Smith is business like both on and off the court. He enjoys playing table tennis in his spare time.Smith is well known for his T.V. commercial in which he advertises used cars without engines.

J.T.'s N.B.A. Mid-Season Outlook

N.B.A Altantic Division

The N.B.A.'s Atlantic division may be not only the strongest division in the league but the most competitive of any pro sport. Because of the trades (and despite injuries), this division may be stronger than last year, when all five teams qualified for the playoffs. The division features three of the leagues strongest teams: the reigning champion Celtics, the powerful 76ers and the recharged Washington Bullets. When everyone is healthy the N.J. Nets are one of the best teams in the N.B.A. Now that Darryl Dawkins is back, look out. And while the N.Y. Knicks have lost Ray Williams (now with the Boston Celtics), Bill Carwright (broken foot), Marvin Webster (Hepatitis) and Truck Robinson, they still have the everdangerous Bernard King. The Atlantic not only has the leagues toughest teams, it also contains some of the N.B.A.'s premier players.

BOSTON CELTICS

No team has more heart and tradition than the Boston Celtics. This is evidenced by thier stirring comeback in the finals last yeer against the LA. Lakers, after the rest of the basketball world (including myself) left them for dead. Even with the controversial trade of clutch performer Gerald Henderson, the Celtics are tough!

The Celtic strength starts in the front court. With Robert Perish, Kevin McHele, Cedric Maxwell (out right now with a knee injury) and M.V.P. Larry Bird the Celtics have a front court that has size, speed, scoring, rebounding and defense, making it the best in the league. Underrated center Robert Periah blocks shots, scores and rebounds with the best. Forward Cedric Maxwell, also underrated, rebounds, plays great defense, is a good passer and scores under pressure. Larry Bird can beat you a thousand ways and sixth man Kevin McHale plays all three frontcourt position well enough to be an N.B.A. Allstar.

While the Celtic backcourt isn't quite as strong with Danny Ainge and Dennis Johnson, it ain't chopped liver either. Ainge has a quick first step and can stick the open jumper. D.J. is one of the best all around guards in the league. He can shoot, score, pass, rebound and the man is a defensive genius. Bench strengh is present with Scott Wedman and Greg Kite up front, Quinn Buckner, Carlos Clark, Rick Carlisle and new acquisition Ray Williams back court and M.L. Carr coming of the bench to beat on opposing teams. With coach K.C. Jones at the controls the Celtics are a team to beat.

PHILADELPHIA 76ERS

After seting a playoff record 12-1 in the 82-83 season, the Sixers fell to injuries, apathy and lack of depth last season. During the 83-84 season the Sixers lost Moses Malone, Julius Erving (0 and 5 without him), Andrew Toney, Maurice Cheeks, Bobby Jones, Clint Richardson and Franklin Edwards at various times to injuries. Moses did not have a "Moses" type year, forcing Dr. J to carry the load. Erving had a great season averaging 22.4 points per game (12th in the league), 7 rebounds and a total of 355 asissts, 1.83 steals per game (10th), and 1.81 blocked shots (8th). This made him the only forward to finish in the top 10 in both steals and blocks. In spite of these awesome statistics Doc was left off the first team of the N.B.A. Allstars. With Cheeks plagued by injuries and Toney having communication problems with coach Cunningham, the Sixers were beaten in the playoffs 3-2 by a tough New Jersey team.

Then the Sixers made some bold moves in the N.B.A. Draft, obtaining 6'6", 260 pound Charles Barkley, Auburn's 'mound of rebound' and Leon Wood of the '84' Olympic squad for added depth.

Upfront the Sixers start with the man, Moses Malone. Moses is the leagues best low post player as evidenced by his league leading 13.4 rebounds per game and his 22.7 point average (highest among N.B.A. centers). He is very ably supported by the ageless Julius Erving, who at 34 is still one of the leagues premier players. Erving is nearing the end of a great career and would love to end it with a championship. Rookie Charles Barkley is the other starter in the front court. Barkley has shown allstar potential and may be the power forward Philly has been looking for since George McGinness was traded. Bobby Jones is the sixth man and still the best defensive forward in the league. Front court depth is present with Sam (slam) Williams, George Johnson and Clemon (The Lemon) Johnson.

The backcourt is among the best in the N.B.A. Cheeks and Toney go together like strawberries and cream, both being N.B.A. Allstars. They ae supported by Clint Richardson, Leon Wood and Sedale Threatt. If Philly can keep themselves together it should be a photo finish for first place.

WASHINGTON BULLETS

The old, slow Bullets no longer exsist. With the acquisition of Gus williams and Clifford Robinson, the Bullets are, at times, awesome. In the front court the Bullets have Jeff Ruland, Rick Mahorn, Greg Ballard and Clifford Robinson. No team has more rebounding than the Bullets. With frontcourt depth added by Darren Daye and Tom McMillen no one has a deeper front court...no one. The backcourt brigade is led by Gus Williams, a great scorer and passer who also plays great defense (he is the N.B.A.'s career steals leader). His backcourt partner is Dudley Bradley who shuts his opposing guards down with his overpowering defense. Frank Johnson, Jeff Malone and Tom Sewell are the backcourt reserves.

NEW JERSEY NETS

The Nets are young and strong. However, injuries may ruin them this season. Darryl Dawkins had been in traction with back problems most of the season and Albert King has been out with muscle pulls. Without these two performers the Nets have been having a tough time. However, the outlook has brightened as Dawkins has returned to action and King should be ready in a couple of weeks. New Jersey's strengh starts in the backcourt with Micheal Ray Richardson and Otis Birdsong. Birdsong is one of the leagues top off guards, able to hit jumpers from practically anywhere on the court. 'Sugar', one of the finest all around players in the game, is a great passer, scorer, ballhandler and defensive player. Only Magic Johnson can rival him in all around basketball skills, and even Magic doesn't have the defensive skills and shooting touch of Richardson.

Up front the Nets normally start with Darryl Dawkins at center, Albert King as the shooting forward and Buck Williams as the power forward. Mike Gminski is the top front court reserve with depth added by Mike O'Koren, Wayne Sappleton and Olympian Jeff Turner. When the Nets are healthy they are among the most talented teams in the league. If everyone heals, this season could still be salvaged.

NEW YORK KNICKS

"Help!" That must be Hubie Brown's lament. The Knicks have been devastated by injuries, leaving them just a shell of the team that played Boston in a tough seven game series. Only the wonderous Bernard King keeps them competitive within the conference. Up front the Knicks have lost starting center Bill Certwright for another month and reserve center Marvin Webster for the remainder of the season with health problems. Forward Truck Robinson is also out with injuries. Leaving Hubie Brown a front court of Bernard King and an assortment of players such as, Pat Cummings, Louis Orr end rookies Ken Bannister and Eddie Wilkins.

The backcourt isn't much to talk about either. Rory Sparrow is the point guard with backcourt mates Trent Tucker, who can shoot from outside but can't drive end isn't aggresive defensively, and Darryl Walker, a lightning quick guerd who plays great defense, can pass, rebound and drive but can't hit the ocean from the beach with his jump shot. It will be a long year for the Knicks.

PREDICTIONS

1) Philadelphia 76ers
2)Boston Celtics
3)New Jersey Nets
4)Washington Bullets
5 New York Knicks

Look for a close race for first place.

Student suit could cancel a candidacy

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

A suit, which could disqualify a candidacy for Student Government Association co-presidents, was submitted late yesterday to the office of Pia Giammasi, acting student attorney general, said.

Autumn Maki, an undergraduate student senator from John Quincy Adams House, signed a "request for judicial action" against Stacey Roth and Dan Burgess, candidates for SGA co-presidents, and Chris Sullivan, signator for the Roth-Burgess campaign and speaker of the senate. A signator has power to authorize spending to promote a campaign.

The request for action, which will be filed with the student clerk of courts today, alleges that Roth, Burgess and Sullivan on March 4 violated Campaign financial guidelines as outlined by treasurer John Mooradian, Maki said. The request charges the campaign spent money that was not included on purchase orders. According to the guidelines, all monies spent by a campaign must be processed through the Student Activities Office on a purchase order. Maki would not say what the members of the campaign did to violate the guidelines.

Burgess, who said he had not heard of the suit, said he was "very confused" by the allegations.

"I'm very open to finding out what's going on," he said. "I have very little faith that there is a valid suit. I have confidence in the people working with us."

Sullivan said he is "100 percent positive" that the allegations are false.

"It's probably just an attempt to get publicity. I've seen it in any campaign I've been in," he said.

Bill Collins, who brought a copy of the request for judicial action to a reporter from the Collegian, said he had worked on the suit because he is not in favor of the Roth-Burgess campaign.

"I'm basically not so against them personally, but against the SGA system of hand-picking specific candidates and endorsing them," he said.

Collins said he is not specifically working for any campaign, but has "offered my services" to the opposing candidacies of Terry Sbardella and Patrick Keohan and Kim Hackett and Micheal Cerrato.

Maki said she is not connected with any of the SGA presidential campaigns.

SAFA back from crucial lobbying trip

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON D.C. A bus carrying 53 University of Massachusetts students, many with sore, tired feet, arrived on campus early this morning after a four-day lobbying stint at the capitol.

The students, back to wearing jeans and sneakers instead of suits, ties and high heels, said they feel a sense of accomplishment after completing a trip they had planned since last fall.

Although this was Students Advocating Financial Aid's seventh bi-annual pilgrimage to Washington, group members agreed that, because of the $200 billion deficit and the Reagan administration's proposed financial aid and mass transit cuts, this was the most important trip the group has ever made.

SAFA member Jim Shaw said Monday, "There has never been a more important time to be in Washington. Financial aid is a national issue now."

At the first group meeting in Washington, Arthur Jackson, director of the Financial Aid Office at UMass told the students, "We really do have to fight. There are all kinds of lobbyists down here who don't want their programs to be cut either. Lobbyists for NAACP, Amtrak, the farmers and the handicapped were also lobbying this week.

Yesterday, as the bus left Maryland, SAFA President Cindy Howland said a radio report had just announced that the House budget committee voted to cut $79 billion from the defense budget over the next three years. Everyone cheered.

Early Monday morning, Gerald Grady, SAFA advisor, said he would be impressed if the group managed to meet with 90 congressmen during its stay. Howland said yesterday that 132 meetings took place and the group was unable to meet with only 21 members "for various reasons."

The group interviewed 69 Democrats and 49 Republicans, legislative aids and congressmen. Ninety-seven of those interviewed supported SAFA's positions against the cuts, nine opposed or advocated the cuts and six were undecided.

Measles worry Florida health officials

By JOSEPH McCORMACK
Collegian Correspondent

The Florida Department of Health and Rehabilitation is concerned that a recent measles epidemic in the Boston area may be transmitted to other students during spring break.

"With all those students packed into planes and buses, the opportunity for measles transmission is excellent," Hank Janowski of the department's immunization program said.

Earlier this week, University of Massachusetts Health Services began urging students who have not been immunized after their first birthday or since 1966 to make an appointment for a vaccination.

Dr. Thomas McBride, associate executive director of Health Services, said that it is especially important for students who will be "mixing it up" in Florida to check their immunization history.

As of yesterday, 32 students have come in for shots, McBride said. "I think that most of our students are pretty well immunized," he said. Health Services is still offering the shot, which is covered by the Health Services fee.

Measles is a highly contagious disease that begins with symptoms similar to the common cold. The disease is also accompanied with a high fever and an irritating rash.

"With all those students packed into planes and buses, the opportunity for measles transmission is excellent"—Hank Janowski, Florida Department of Health and Rehabilitation.

Janowski said that Florida has had to deal with similar problems in the past. At the outset of spring break, fliers are handed out to students and the danger of measles transmission is given media coverage.

The department alerts doctors and medical facilities along the beach areas and opens all of its own clinics and facilities to the students during the disease outbreaks. Despite the department's yearly preparations there is "zero participation" by the students, Janowski said. "The students come down here to have fun and lie on the beaches and are not interested in shots and clinics," he said.

This year, Florida has an epidemic in Lake City, Columbia County. Although Columbia County is not on the coast, it is possible for this outbreak to spread also, Janowski said.

Janowski said he would like to see every student vaccinated, or bring proof of vaccination, before they come down to Florida before spring break.

Men aren't grads in women's studies

By CAROLINE SAMOILOFF
Collegian Correspondent

Since its introduction ten years ago, the Women's Studies department at the University of Massachusetts has never had a male graduate from their program. Opinions within the department and among students vary as to why this is so and whether or not more men should be encouraged to enroll.

Arlene Avakian, staff assistant in the department, believes that men are not attracted to women's studies courses because "they don't see women's issues as directly affecting their lives."

"They seem to have an aversion to what women value," said Nancy Arnold, a graduate of the program and now a staff assistant in the department.

Lucy Costa, an education major enrolled in a women's studies course this semester, suggests that men are reluctant to participate in the program for fear of being "ribbed" by their peers.

Costa believes that men should enroll in women's studies courses and be encouraged to do so because "that way you can get their opinion on topics and also how they feel about it."

"Classes are better with male input as well as female input," agreed Debra Joyce, a women's studies major, adding "men should be exposed to women's issues as they affect all other academic subjects."

Avakian also believes that men can benefit from the program, commenting "just as it is important for whites to learn about racism and their power as whites, so it is important for men to learn about sexism and their power as men."

However, she stressed that the mission of the department was to teach for women and she "wouldn't want men to take courses if they didn't want to be there."

Arnold is also unsure about the appropriateness of men in the department and observes "women in the class often feel more comfortable without men in the class."

"I think it is important to educate men," said Avakian, "but classroom dynamics change when men are present."

David Sullivan, currently taking a women's studies course this semester, explained he enrolled because he "really wanted to see what the women at UMass thought about sexism and stuff."

Sullivan said more men should enroll in the courses but a variety of courses are necessary.

He encourages a women's studies course specifically for men called something like "awareness of sexism," which would "make it more acceptable for men to take," he said.

Professor of Women's Studies, Leila Ahmed, opposes the idea that there should be a special class for men. While she concedes "it is important for men to understand," she also believes "women's studies should be for both men and women," and therefore a separate male class is unnecessary.

Today is International Women's Day

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN

By Deborah Ross

Are there differences between women here and in your country?

Name: Sandra Mallot
Country: Venezuela
Major: Economics
In Venezuela, the education is more general; here they concentrate too much. We require more subjects in different fields. The overall education in Venezuela is not as specialized as here, but it's better because there is a strong humanistic approach.

Name: Ladan Rabbani
Country: Iran
Major: Computer Science
Education is harder in Iran. It's more strict and we don't have much time for fooling around. Especially now, because of the revolution, things are very strict. American students have a better time, but they take their studies less seriously.

Name: Aud Fjellvang
Country: Norway
Major: Management
In Norway, we don't have all the different schools in one university. If, for example, you want to study engineering, you go to a separate school for engineering. Also, men do military service and a lot of people work before they go to university. Freshman at UMass look so young.

Name: Ruth Lin
Country: Taiwan
Major: Public Health
Students in America have a lot more freedom. Here, if you don't want to go to class you don't go. In Taiwan, you go to your classes. Also, American students are more free to express their opinions than in Taiwan.

University to bestow honorary degree

The University of Massachusetts will award an honorary degree to the director of the National Science Foundation, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said.

Eric Bloch is expected to accept the degree during Industrial Appreciation Day in April, Associate Dean of Engineering Duane Cromack said.

Since last August, Bloch has been director and was previously the vice-president for technical personnel development at IBM.

His responsibilities included programs with universities, the firm's technical libraries, publications of technical journals, and the operation of IBM's corporate technical institutes.

The purpose of Industrial Appreciation Day is "to recognize financial as well as equipment support by industry to UMass," Cromack said.

The degree will be presented to Bloch at an invitation only banquet which will be attended by dignitaries from various industries and by public officials, he said.

Arthur Clifford, director of the Office of Public Information said that the University Board of Trustees generally approves honorary degrees in a closed session of its regular meetings.

"Honorary degrees are given to people who are being recognized for extraordinary achievements in their professional work or in some other form of their contributions to society," Clifford said.

Women's week ceremonies

• Conference on change begins at Hampshire

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

Issues of survival and the development of strategies for social and political change will be the focus of a four-day conference being held at Hampshire College this week.

The conference, titled "Survival and Visions: Organizing for Change" will begin today at 8 p.m. with a keynote speech by Johnetta Cole, professor of anthropology at Hunter College in New York and former associate provost of undergraduate education at the University of Massachusetts.

Anita Pleasant, a student spokeswoman for the conference, said the purpose of the conference is to provide a place for the articulation of "the diverse human experiences and visions, as seen by women, for obtaining and maintaining human needs."

Issues concerning the poor, the elderly, women, children and people of color will be topics for discussion and will be handled in such a way as to identify the needs of these groups and devise strategies for the future.

Panel speakers include Mary Wentworth, the unsuccessful 1984 challenger to Silvio Conte for his seat in the U.S. House of Representatives, who will discuss political strategies of change on Friday with Dr. Gloria Josephs, a professor of Black and Women's Studies at Hampshire College.

Other speakers are Katsi Cook, a midwife who started a health care clinic for the Akwasasne Nation, a Native American group and Katherine D'Amato, a coordinator of the Western Massachusetts Food Bank.

The conference is free and open to the public.

• Smith holds program about historic women

By MARIANE MEUSE
Collegian Staff

Readings and recordings concerning a variety of women's issues will be presented in a program at Smith College this afternoon to help commemorate National Women's History Week.

The program, titled "Words of Women: Readings From Letters, Journals, Diaries," will begin today at 1:30 p.m. with an hour of recorded speeches from women's history and suffrage songs.

Following the readings, staff members at the Sophia Smith Collection will read from letters, journals and diaries concerning such issues as suffrage, birth control and the role of women in society.

Among the women whose works will be presented are Clara Barton, a Civil War nurse reknowned for her heroism, Margaret Sanger, Anne Morrow Lind bergh and Illanche Butler Ames, a birth control advocate who wrote in 1870, "Men always seem to have the advantage in press, in law, in politics, everything. Will the time ever come when it is equally easy for women to exist?"

Eleanor Lewis, one of the staff members who will be reading, said it is important that these works be kept alive and the program should help in providing the public with knowledge of women's writing.

"Women had important roles throughout history and their names are not household words. We want to prevent their words from being lost," she said.

The program, free to the public, will be held in the Smith College Alumnae Gymnasium. The readings presented are part of the Sophia Smith Collection, an internationally known women's history archive.

Bike co-op to offer repair workshops

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Correspondent

Depressed about a broken bike and don't feel like taking it to be fixed? No need to fret, the University of Massachusetts Bicycle Cooperative makes housecalls.

The Co-op will be holding traveling workshops in dormitories this semester to instruct people on how to make repairs for themselves, Joe Daly, the co-op's acting treasurer said.

Daly said the workshops will concentrate on three areas of bike repair: wheels and tires, brakes and derailleurs. "Requests for more involved workshops will be considered, but they may have to be held at the Bike Co-op due to the equipment involved," he said.

Daly said each workshop must be attended by three to 10 people and at least one bicycle.

The purpose of the workshops is not to fix bikes but to instruct people on how to make the repairs themselves, Daly said.

"The thought is that if people can independently fix their bikes, they'll ride them more often," he said. "Students leave their bikes idle for weeks because of a simple flat or a misadjusted derailleur."

Tom Ashe, a Co-op member said, hhe workshops are "not a repair thing. We'll do some repairs as an example so people can see what to do. It's sort of a show and tell, a step-by-step demonstration," he said.

BEER WASN'T MEANT TO BE COOKED.

Back in the days of rag-time music, there was no such thing as bottled beer or beer in cans.

Those were the great days of draft beer, fresh from the keg.

Like the draft they brewed at Frederic Miller's old Plank Road Brewery. It had a taste as smooth and fresh as the new jazz music itself.

A taste that's hard to find in today's bottles and cans. Because most beers, in bottles and cans, are pasteurized. Cooked to 140 degrees to preserve their shelf life. So they lose that fresh, draft taste.

But now there's a bottled beer that's not cooked. It's specially cold-filtered instead. To keep the true taste of fresh draft.

Introducing Plank Road Original Draught. It tastes as fresh from the bottle as it does from the keg.

tuition freeze. Every year before, for eight years, there was a tuition hike," he said.

When one senator suggested the motion to allow the referendum be tabled for one week, Tony Crayton, former director on the Office of Third World Affairs, said "UMass created SSAM."

"Don't birth a baby, cripple its legs and ask it to stand up," he said.

The senate was about one-half way through the agenda when the quorum was called.

In other action, the senate voted to place ballot boxes at the New Africa House in Central Residence Area and the Kosher Dining Commons in Southwest Residential Area.

Although the senate did not consider a motion to censure David Valade, senator from Northeast Area Government, Valade spoke at the beginning of the meeting. The motion called for Valade to be censured "for his attempted vandalism of RSO material" on March 1. Valade said on that date he had been to the Top of the Campus lounge and then tried to "flip over" the signs representing the UMass Republican Club on the fourth floor of the Student Union. Valade apologized for his action and said he meant no vandalism.

Lobbying farmers befriend SAFA

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON — For Illinois farmer Frank Sanders, lobbying efforts on Capitol Hill this week will allow him to walk tall, "without shame."

"I'm here because I have two sons at home, and if I didn't come here and try to stop this, I would have to hang my head and say I didn't even try," Sanders said.

Sanders and thousands of other farmers are in Washington this week to participate in rallies and meetings to urge the passage of an emergency farm-credit relief bill. Many of the farmers are staying at the Skyline Inn, on the same floor as University of Massachusetts Students Advocating Financial Aid.

Many SAFA members have been associating with farmers and a feeling of camaraderie and a common cause has developed between the students and the farmers.

President Reagan vetoed the credit-relief package yesterday, calling it a "massive new bailout that would add billions to the deficit," without really helping farmers.

But the bill caused a constant flow of farmers into the offices of the House of Representatives earlier this week, where farmers gave members their stories of personal hardship.

Willis Woodham, a cotton farmer from South Carolina, said the farmers were also asking Congress to set minimum crop prices.

"All the farmers are in trouble and we've been selling at far below the cost of production," Woodham said. "Reagan's proposal of a free market will put more people out of business."

John Rowe, a Brookfield Mo. farmer, said the situation is worse than most people think.

"Of all the farmers in America, only 23 percent are producers, and 90 percent of them (the producers) are in serious financial trouble."

Robert Maxheimer, a corn, bean and wheat farmer from Bingham, Ill., said he just wants to get a decent price for his grain.

"We're spending more in producation than what we get for it," Maxheimer said.

Smith receives science grant

Smith College was recently awarded a $600,000 grant from a Philadelphia organization to purchase scientific equipment.

The grant will be distributed among the college's five most heavily-enrolled science departments: biological sciences, chemistry, physics, geology and psychology, according to the Smith College public relations office.

The physics department will use its portion of the money to set up a nuclear physics experimental laboratory, said Dean of Science Betty Ivey.

Fletcher Blanchard, the chairman of the psychology department, said his department is getting computer-assisted systems that will aid in research for neural chemistry and neural anatomy, speech analysis and operant conditioning apparatus used in experiments with animals and other areas.

Biological sciences will receive a biohazard containment facility, an enclosed research facility which prevents contamination.

Howland said she talked to several Republicans who felt there had to be cuts in federal spending but that "very few were completely in tune with the President."

Those advocating the $4,000 "mega caps" on annual aid available to a student and the income cap for Guaranteed Student Loans and Pell Grants cited the following arguments:

- Parents, state and local governments, not the federal government, should be held primarily responsible for funding higher education.
- Something must be done about mismanagement of financial aid, including the national 4.5 percent student default rate.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

The choice is yours

The Collegian is not endorsing any candidates for Student Government Association president this year.

The Collegian was unable to come to a consensus on which two of the three candidacies will best lead the student body in the coming year.

The candidacies of Burgess/Roth and Hackett/Cerrato have their strengths. But they also have their weaknesses.

Hackett/Cerrato represent a change in the approach to SGA leadership which the Collegian believes is long overdue. They seem strongly committed to alleviating the separatism that now divides the senate and its leaders.

They seem to be willing to deal head on with the financial problems currently looming over the SGA. They recognize that Registered Student Organizations are an integral part of the University and should not be the first groups to face budget cuts, but that those cuts should come from the president's office itself.

They seem to be committed to increasing dialogue within the committees of the SGA, helping to create a more unified voice.

Hackett/Cerrato, however, do not seem to have a great understanding of oppression issues and thus their ability to fight them is questionable.

Although Roth/Burgess have a greater understanding of the importance of combatting oppression, their candidacy fails to bring much that is new or innovative to the present SGA approach.

Roth/Burgess have better qualifications than the other candidates and have an extensive background in dealing with student rights. They seem to have a firm understanding of the need to speak out against administrative attempts to curtail student involvement and input in decisions directly affecting students.

They seem eager to fight for the reinstatement of the funding and influence the SGA has enjoyed in the past, although their ideas are far-reaching and do not adequately address the present crises.

The Collegian does not feel confident that either candidacy offers the tangible, feasible solutions which merit an endorsement. What has long been a fundamental problem of the SGA—bickering and personalities that supercede the issues—is one issue all seem unable to solve.

Keohan/Sbardello seem to lack an understanding of what is necessary to be co-presidents. The Collegian believes they lack experience and any real grasp of student politics. They do, however, recognize that government itself, and not student apathy, is the reason for lack of student involvement in the SGA.

The Collegian strongly urges all students to participate in the SGA presidential election this Monday and Tuesday, casting their votes for the candidacy which they believe will serve the best interests of students.

Unsigned, editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Collegian Board of Editors.

SGA presidents excel only in weakness

As the stimulating Student Government presidential campaign thankfully grinds to a close, it seems appropriate for an evaluation of the current occupants of this prestigious fourth floor office.

Approximately one year ago, our SGA co-presidents rode into office with a landslide 58 percent of the student vote. Little has been heard from them since. All those promises of outreach through the Collegian, WMUA, Union Video, and President's Council evaporated as soon as the office was occupied.

Don't get me wrong now. A lot of work has been going on in the student government. But not by the co-presidents. It took a senator from Brown to bring the problem of swing space to light. The President's office should have also been out front leading the charge for the disclosure of the Status of Minorities Report concerning Yvette Henry. This was left for the Collegian. The chair of the Budgets Committee was the one who brought the painful news to the senate that they were running out of money. With such an explosive topic as this where was our president?

The area where our presidents have excelled is in the category of weakness. There was never any concrete leadership emanating from their office. Our student government lurched from one crisis to another never able to stop spinning long enough to orientate itself.

Perhaps the task was too much for them; getting a grasp on one of the largest student governments in the country is a staggering undertaking. But to be an effective president one must be able to clearly chart a course and follow it. Our presidents were never able to find the rudder to steer the ship.

A president should rise above the petty personal rivalries that have long been a senate tradition at UMass. Leave the daily operations of the senate to the senate officers. That's what they're being paid for. The students of this campus deserve a presidency that will not only have the determination to solve today's problems but the insight and intelligence to foresee problems down the road and the ability to solve them. With a presidency more concerned about students, and less about its resume, UMass students would be less likely to be as "blindsided" as they have been this year. From the current SGA budget crisis to the Universal Resource Fee fiasco, students have begun to ask their leadership, "What were you doing while all this was taking shape?" The only response they've been getting has been an uneasy silence.

But the SGA co-presidents should take heart. Being mediocre is no crime. Unless you're doing it in front of 25,000 students.

Beware! Killer desks on prowl in Mahar

A UMass student was taken to the hospital yesterday, after apparently being attacked by a desk in Mahar auditorium.

Suffering from a cut elbow, a bruised knee, and minor frostbite, she claimed that she popped her desk up, and started taking notes. "The desk collapsed on my knee," she told reporters. "It was wobbling while I was writing on it, as if it were giving me some kind of warning, but I didn't listen. Those desks always wobble."

After recovering from the bruise on her knee, she tried to move over to the armrest. "I thought I was leaning on the armrest, but it turned out to be a piece of metal where the armrest was supposed to be," the woman told reporters as doctors finished the last of her six stitches.

Even though she was bleeding, she thought it best to wait until class was over. "I hoped that the 30 miles per hour wind that usually blows through the door would dry up the blood," she said.

Unfortunately for the woman, frostbite was setting in and an ambulance had to be called.

During a press conference, University spokespersons were questioned about what was going to be done concerning the deteriorating situation in Mahar. University spokesperson Joe Schmoe said, "Nothing." Angry students shouted, "How are we supposed to be able to learn in this kind of atmosphere?" Schmoe replied, "Students have far too many comforts as it is so we have decided to follow the Reagan administration's view on education, and we feel that this is a good beginning.

Schmoe refused to comment on the subject any further, but it was reported that a Physical Plant worker was seen posting a sign in Mahar which stated, "Use at your own risk."

The real 'human intelligence' in Nicaragua

Those who attended Monday night's forum on the U.S. role in Nicaragua had the distinct opportunity to obtain a better grasp of the politically polarized views of the UMass Republican Club and the Western Massachusetts Latin American Solidarity Committee. The latter organization had more challengingly attempted to appeal to our rational faculties as well as to our conceptions of morality and legality regarding U.S. policy. They obviously appeared more genuinely informed and prepared for they referred to a wide range of reputable sources and even featured a panelist, who having spent a month in Nicaragua, experienced the effects of contra aggression first-hand.

The position taken by the UMass Republican Club corresponded exactly with the White House view on the issue of Nicaragua and was little more than a rhetorical rehash of the Reagan administration. They appeared well-dressed but not very well informed. The UMass Republican Club's philosophical photocopy of Reagan's ideology concerning the Contadora process is of particular interest to focus on.

UMass Republican Club panelist, Loren Spivac, referred to Contadora provisions of "democracy" and "liberty" as "nice features" as if he were describing the options available for a sports car. His downplay (unquestionably cloned from Secretary of State Shultz's October 1984 position on the Contadora) was based on the selective ignorance that mechanisms of enforcement did not exist in the treaty. This is untrue. One provision calls for the appointmet of "five independent verifiers" from various governments that would have to be accepted of the Contadora process is due to another provision that would bar "irregular forces trying to overthrow other governments." This would include the contras which the Reagan administration wants to funnel multi-million dollar amounts to in the hope of achieving just that end. The Contadora nations and all others involved in obtaining peace in the region, are the real "human intelligence" in Central America.

Babbling profs have her down

I have been sitting around all week hoping to have an opinion when lo and behold, one is bestowed upon me by a professor.

I think something should be said about those professors who consistently run their classes overtime, finding it necessary to keep a 50 minute class for 1⅓ hours. I realize that anyone can confuse a Monday with a Tuesday or a Wednesday with a Thursday once or twice, however, such practice grows frustrating on a regular basis. I'm not sure which is worse, when a professor is saying something significant as you watch the clock take your bus home without you or if the professor is babbling away in a semi-catatonic state letting all reality cease to exist for 45 minutes.

Renee Bacher

Perhaps there is only one unlocked door in the lecture hall from which to exit and the podium is strategically placed directly in front of it. How do you plan your escape? Recently I've thought of taking up ventriloquism so I could throw the words, "Time to go now," from the nearest brown-nose busily taking notes till the very end.

Doesn't the professor realize that when 200 people have their coats on and their notebooks closed that something funny is going on? Tell me, is it wrong to fantasize about igniting a piece of looseleaf paper and maybe hurling it into the air bellowing, "Fire!" hoping that the lecturer will catch a glimpse of the window and the fact that the sun is going down?

Now usually when I state my opinion (if I am lucky enough to have had an opinion that day) it is with the intention of offending someone. Let's face it, what fun is life when you have to go through a day, maybe two, without offending someone? However, I'm not trying to offend overly-dedicated professionals.

If you figure that tuition for a semester is about $650, there are about 118 days in a semester, each day costing about $5.50, each hour costing about $.22, each minute costing ¼¢, then these folks are giving us an extra $.6 per class which is $.18 per week. That's an extra theoretical $23.40 per semester. Those figures are fun, of course (math majors take no offense), but by the end of May, all we lucky students will be education rich!

So this is my strange way of saying thank you on behalf of all us lucky, grateful students. Thank you. Thank you so much. One problem, though. The buses have this uncanny habit of running on schedule just when you need them not to. What can you do? A few times, I personally have risked great embarrassment and emotional upheaval by leaving class at the scheduled time, right at a hot point in the lecture.

I've never thumbed my nose in the lecturer's face upon exiting, yet still I am plagued by nightmares of what the boxes next to my name look like in the grade book. Another thing I am particularly fond of is taking an exam in the aforementioned class and blaming the fact that I am clueless about the answers on the fact that they were never mentioned during the time I was supposed to be in class.

Watch out 'tough guy'...

After reading the letter written by Terry A. Goldberg in Friday's Collegian, I had to really wonder about a lot of the people who were at this bar standing aside while this incident happened. I realize this might sound like some Goetz-like letter but what a lot of you don't realize is that incidents such as these happen all too frequently.

I speak from experience because I have had the unfortunate time to know what it is like to have this helpless beaten-down feeling. As an 11 year-old, I was beaten up pretty well by a man seven years older, much bigger and supposedly more "mature" than me. Because of my size, I was often associated with being much older and this would often lead to unnecessary altercations. Later on, I had the pleasure of knowing what it is like to be intimidated by knife-wielding individuals on the Boston subway system. Fortunately, that time I was able to talk my way out of what could have been an awful situation.

Well now I have grown up quite a bit (6'1" and 250 lbs.) and because of this I have been able to avoid many problems. Also, I am married to a smallish woman (5 ft.) and have a one-year-old son. I'll tell you it is real fun to watch all you "tough" guys look down with those so-called "tough" looks at my wife and son. In this regard I can really sympathize with women in these situations. The thing that really has been fun is catching these "tough" guys with their remarks, sneers, and threats, and really making them cower and hopefully putting a little "lubricant" in their sphincter.

I guess the point of this is that people like Goldberg do not look or are not threatening enough to these "tough" guys. I guess people could react violently in this situation, but that just tends to make a person feel "dirty." As for the people who stood idly by, well...I hope that you have a similar situation as Goldberg or myself so that you can feel what it is like.

Oh yes, to the character involved with Goldberg, I hope you realize that you have to be lucky every single time you venture into such behavior. Whereas, I, or others like me, and there are more of us than you would care to know, only have to catch you once and them my friend, you will truly know what sheer embarrassment and mind-numbing pain is all about.

I would just like to finish this with a challenge. Why don't any one of the many "tough" guys who are reading this try and explain why anyone would revert to such behavior.

Watch out next time "tough guy" because you never know when your turn might come.

Next time, just walk away

This letter is written in response to Terry Goldberg's plea "Where have all the people gone?" I for one have not gone to the bars uptown, but I have attended many at home. If put into a similar situation (which I have been) one would think the obvious action would be to ignore and move away from the so-called "gentleman."

Neither you nor your friend should have experienced what you did, but it was no one's fault but your own. You state that it was "ironic how every individual at that bar, including the bartenders and bouncers, did not take the initiative to rectify a potentially dangerous situation." If you truly felt harassed you should have discussed it with either a bartender or a bouncer. Or better yet, did the thought of leaving cross your mind?

Granted, it would have been nice if someone helped you out, but you should have had the sense to pick up and move, or leave.

Founding fathers or redcoats?

President Reagan has taken another position that might sound rhetorically heartening—the type of BS that makes patriotic print but has little logic. It was reported that he claimed the troops, contras, fighting against the Nicaraguan government, were the "moral equal of our founding fathers."

Just what parallel does he see? The contras are not leaders of any popular (i.e. mass) movement—in fact most of them, being ex-National Guardsmen guilty of atrocities under Somoza, were kicked out of Nicaragua by a popular movement. Furthermore the contras do not pursue any democratically principled actions. The focus of many of their "fights for freedom" are attacks on health centers, food storage/harvesting and basic terrorizing of the masses.

In fact the only similarity between the contras and the American Revolution that I can see is in the use of mercenaries. The British made use of blood money troops, red coats if you will, in the attempt to make the Colonies "cry uncle." Sounds exactly like the moral equal of Reagan's current policies. The contras do not amount to much more than a group of hired bullies, in tattered clothes—the newest in "freedom fighter" fashions. Clearly the contras are the farthest thing from the founding fathers referred to in Reagan's latest diatribe.

Doesn't our opinion count?

It is surprising that a college environment that supposedly centers around the word and concept of "diversity" is threatened by a professor who teaches a class titled "Alternative Lifestyles." Does this class not fit into the underlying theme of diversity? Perhaps the faculty in home economics and the administration don't want diversity at all but rather total conformity and sameness. They tell us that it is not the class itself that upsets them but rather the instructor and his teaching style.

Some say he is too liberal. How can this be? Is he not advocating alternative lifestyles for all? The course is intended to focus on social, personal and political issues with a central focus on the implications of sexual expressions for lifestyles in our contemporary world. As college students living through the second stage of the sexual revolution we should be allowed to learn and explore the various styles and sexual choices that abound in our society today.

Roger Libby's denial of tenure leads us to question the ethical moves of the faculty and administration. By stifling Libby they are in essence telling professors to teach, but don't teach anything that will rock the boat; help students to learn, but don't let them learn anything that is not conventional. Roger Libby is a fine teacher who treats the material with tact and consideration for the feelings of his students. The administration is exercising a form of censorship by silencing Libby, and students' evaluations are obviously not being counted.

This situation parallels two other situations currently being confronted at this University. These are the recent developments in the Yvette Henry case and the proposed takeover of the Board of Governors. For some reason the administration is not considering student opinion. We students should not and will not allow it.

Headline intent questioned

Concerning the article on sexual violence in Friday's Collegian:

It was well written, and made clear that the facts cited and opinions expressed were those of Kathy Alexander of the Everywoman's Center. The title however, was so blatantly biased that I wonder if perhaps the copy editor was making fun of the subject.

Ed Pershouse

FBI profile is to blame

Many times, when we see a situation snowball, as in Yvette Henry's case, we need to examine the push. It seems to me, that from a sociological standpoint, it is the basic assumption of the FBI that is at fault.

"Psychological profile" or none, the assumption that the most likely person to commit this crime is a member of a minority, is false. A member of a minority is the least likely person to take the chance of throwing away perhaps their only chance at a solid education.

It would be rather one spoiled enough as to have all their advantages taken care of so well that they need not worry about the future—theirs or anyone else's.

The whole point being missed here is that the guilty person was taking a chance upon taking someone's life. This potential fire could have been an act of murder. Therefore, I wonder if anyone could look at Yvette Henry and accuse her of the real crime?

ARTS

live wire
by Peter Wissoker

This weeks live wire is dedicated to a large art event taking place during the spring. There will be information about the usual stuff and a trivia question at the end.

Real Art Ways is an organization located in Hartford whose main purpose is the promotion of the new and more pertinent forms of art in Hartford area and Western New England in general.

This spring Real Art Ways is celebrating its tenth anniversary by holding a massive festival. The festival has five main parts: an art exhibition, a video exhibition, a program of short films, a music series, a lecture series on alternative TV, and a Video Festival including an open competition of free lance videos.

The video exhibition will feature a wide range of video artist's works; on display now through the end of May at the Real Art Ways Video Viewing Center at 100 Allyn Street in Hartford.

March 4-8:	Barbara Broughel: Untitled
March 11-15:	Nam June Paik: Suite (212)
March 18-22:	Peter Mitchell: News Fiction
March 25-29:	Bill Viola: Hatsu Yume
April 1-5:	Jessica Hagedorn: Cravon Bondage
April 8-12:	Terry Fox: Children's Tapes
April 15-19:	Joseph Celli: Snare Drum for Camus
April 22-26:	Meredith Monk: Ellis Island
April 29-May 3:	Gene Gort: Night Light
May 6-10:	Michael Smith: Secret Horror
May 17-25:	Daniel Wadsworth Memorial Video Festival

The Music series opens with the Philip Glass Ensemble on Saturday March 16, the Art Ensemble of Chicago on March 29, Pianist Cecil Taylor and the Cecil Taylor Unit on April 13, and The Seventh Prayer a new opera on April 27. The Seventh Prayer is an opera with Rasterfarian themes. This will be performed at Wadsworth Atheneum, the site of the debut of Virgil Thompson and Gertrude Stein's opera Four Saints in Three Acts.

There are three evenings of films, all in April. Named Ten Years of Living Cinema, there are twenty three films made by independent film makers from 1972 until 1982. They will be showing at the Real Art Ways.

Program One-April 12

Daughters of Chaos (1980) Marjorie Keller, City Edition (1980) Alan Berliner, In the Eye of a Child (1978) Richard Levine, Deutschland Spiegel (1980) Sharon Couzin, Mission to Mongo (1978) Jim Hoberman, Shift (1974) Ernie Gehr, Jealousy (1976) Gail Vachoni, Mär's Shirt (1975) Bob Fleischner.

Program Two-April 19

TZ (1978) Robert Breer, The Big Stick (1973) Saul Levine, Frames and Cages and Speeches (1976) Martha Haslanger, Crisis in Utopia (1981) Ken Ross, Skins (1976) Barbara Lattanzi, Counterpane (1979) Jim Jennings, Kino Da! (1981) Henry Hills, Bedtime Story (1981) Esther Shatavsky.

Program Three-April 26

Vestibule (1978) Ken Kobland, Displaced Person (1981) Dan Eisenberg, Ornamentals (1979) Abigail Child, Sorted Details (1979) Charles Wright, Gently Down the Stream (1981) Su Friedrich, Projection Instructions (1976) Morgan Fisher, Closer Outside (1981) Vincent Grenier.

Philip Glass, composer of* Einstein on the Beach, music for the movie Koyaanisquatsi, Music in Twelve Parts, *and other pieces will be playing at Bushnell Auditorium on March 16.

There will be two lectures on the role of video in society on March 8 and March 22. The first will deal with the transition of the early video movement which was outside the mainstream to its current postion as 'simply' another art form. The second lecture will be given by the video curator of the Museum of Modern Art and she will talk about the museum's role as exhibitor and collector of independent video productions.

At the end, or near the end of the Decade Celebration the Daniel Wadsworth Memorial Video Festival will be held. This is a four day affair spread over two weekends. The first weekend is divided up into a viewing of video installations and inter active video systems (you can meet the artists) and an opportunity to see the award winning videos.

The second weekend has an exhibition of some of the best tapes that were submitted to the festival and an awards night.

During the entire festival there will be art works on display at the Real Art Ways Building.

All these events seem like they are going to be really interesting and they give us an opportunity to see that Northampton is not the end of the world when it comes to art and culture.

As for the usual crappola, this weekend offers a few interesting specimens. Although it's hard to compete with Englebert Humperdinck (Springfield Symphony Hall/Friday) Archie Shepp will be palying at the Iron Horse Cafe, drawing away some of those devoted fans of Mr. Humperdinck. In previous outings in the last few years Shepp's poetry has been better than his sax playing his band is really great.

In the same department: Jeff Holmes will be playing tonight in Bowker Auditorium.

The accordian blues return to Northampton Saturday night with the return of Queen Ida and the Bon Temps Zydeco Band. They will be playing at the Northampton Center for the Arts, starting at 9

★ Minutemen face Rutgers

UMass dumped the Knights 83-72 in springfield in January before losing 86-79 in Piscataway last week as Battle scored 22.

The Knights employed a zone defense that held both Neysmith and forward Bobby Braun to a combined 19 points.

"We got the shots against them, we just didn't hit them," Gerluisen explained. "We had over 90 possession, that's our most this season by far, we just have to concentrate a little more a let the offense flow. I'm confident we can score on them. We just have to slow them up and deny them any easy shots."

Key matchups include UM's Donald Russell (15.5 ppg) against Battle and UM point guard Carl Smith (9.4 ppg) against Ellerbe.

The win in Springfield snapped a 15 game losing streak against the Scarlet Knights, and helped to increase UMass' confidence against teams that beat on them previously.

"We feel we can play with them, and beat them," Gerluisen said. "It's just a matter of getting out there and playing our game. If we do that, I'm sure we'll come out fine."

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: The number one and two scorers in UMass history are Russell and Neysmith with 1,549 and 1,409 ponts respectively. Russell needs 23 attempted field goals to tie the UMass record of 1,318 by Mike Pyatt. Neysmith is second in rebounding with 926, way behind Doctor J's 1,049. Smith needs 12 minutes to go into fourth on the minutes in a season record, 13 will give him third and 51 will net him second. Neysmith and Russell rank 1-2 in minutes in a career. Smith is third in assists over a career with 331 in two years. Russell has made the most free throws in UM history, Neysmith has attempted the most. Neysmith will also lead the team in rebounding for the fourth straight season.

Gerluisen, with a .446 winning percentage, is the eighth winningest coach in UM history (out of 16). No coach (as in the players were alone) is ranked 12th.

Minutemen duel Rutgers in tourney

Defense key in A-10 quarterfinal matchup

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — In the seven seasons between 1977 and 1984, the men's basketball team at the University of Massachusetts hit an all-time low in the school's hoop history.

A record of 53-139 (21 percent), three head coaches and a 3-8 record in league (Eastern 8 and Atlantic 10) tournaments reflected the dismal period.

With the loss of two key players and the comforting Curry Hicks Cage to renovations, the 1984-85 version of the Minutemen weren't supposed to do much better.

But, tonight at the Rutger Athletic Center, the Minutemen will take, they hope, the next step in bringing the program back to the point where winning a conference title is a reality.

UMass, 13-14 and 9-9 in the A-10, faces Rutgers at 7 p.m. (WHMP AM and WMUA FM) in a quarterfinal matchup that both the players and second year coach Ron Gerlufsen feel they can win.

"We're at the point now that we shouldn't be looked at as walkovers, we've won against some good teams and have steadily improved," Gerlufsen said. "Beating Rutgers would add even more credibility to that new respect."

But respect is still a hard thing to come by in the conference. Gerlufsen, despite guiding a team that lost two starters and was picked last to fourth place, was passed over as coach of the year in favor of Temple's John Chaney. The Owls were the pre-season picks for first, had two players on the first team league all-stars and another selected as an all-rookie team member.

Chaney also couldn't halt an end-of-the-season skid that saw Temple lose its hold on first place to West Virginia.

UMass's Horace Neysmith, although making the second team, was left off the first team despite impressive numbers and strong defensive work against players sometimes five inches taller. Freshman Lorenzo Sutton, with his double digit average and UM's 9-4 record since he became a starter was looked over as a rookie star for players that scored a lot of points for teams that finished in the bottom of the standings.

"No matter what happens with those awards, we'll come into Rutger thinking just about Rutgers," Gerlufsen said.

"I think some of our players deserve awards for their work, especially considering the circumstances, but if we don't get them it's not going to hurt us one bit. Maybe it will give us more reason to beat Rutgers," the coach noted.

The Minutemen have won their games with defense. A solid full-court press will be needed to slow the potent Knights on their home court.

First team all-star John Battle (22.1 points per game) and point guard Brain Ellerbe guide an offense that leads the league in scoring.

Neysmith selected as all-star

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

PISCATAWAY, N.J. University of Massachusetts senior co-captain Horace Neysmith was named as an Atlantic 10 conference all-star at an awards luncheon here yesterday.

Neysmith, who is averaging 15 points and 10 rebounds a game, was named to the second team. The first team was composed of four pre-season picks.

Rutger's John Battle, George Washington's Mike Brown, Temple's Granger Hall and Carles Rayne and St. Joseph's Maurice Martin were first team selections.

Neysmith, along with St. Joe's Bob Lojewski, West Virginia 's Lester Rowe, St. Bonaventure's Rob Samuels and Duquesne's Rick Suder were on the second team.

The all-rookie team was West Virginia's Holman Harley, Temple's Howie Evans, Rhode Island's Carleton Owens, Duquesne's Collins Dobbs and St. Joseph Rodney Blake.

The coach of the year was Temple's John Chaney.

Ski teams continue to roll

Ski teams wind down another successful year

By BETSY SCHNEIDERS
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's ski are having outstanding years and are well on their way towards another conference championship.

The teams play in the toughest division of the Eastern College ski conference.

"All the power is concentrated in our division," Coach Bill MacConnell said. MacConnell has been the coach for both teams for the last 26 years. The Minutemen have won the last 16 consecutive conference championships and the Minutewomen have won the last 11. But this season has been especially pleasing.

"This is the most outstanding year we've had in 25 years," MacConnell said. The coach has the numbers to back up that statement. The UMass men's team, with seven first-place and three second-place finishes out of ten races, is well ahead of second-place Boston College, with three firsts, four seconds, and one third. The women's team is way out in front, winning nine of ten races, far outdistancing Plymouth State.

Both teams also qualified to compete in the NCAA Eastern championships. On the first day of competition, the men's team placed eighth and the women's team placed tenth.

"It is unusual for a flat land team to even quality," MacConnell said, "But we also do great."

"The reason we have such truly good performances is our depth. While some teams have only a few good racers, all of my team is excellent."

Although the men's team will be losing some of their top racers to graduation, MacConnell is not worried about the future.

"Next year will not be a rebuilding year," MacConnell said. "We will have a winning season next year."

MacConnell also feels that the women's team will have a good year next year. They are losing only a few of their top racers and have many promising underclassmen.

"The reputation of both teams is growing which is bringing in much talent," MacConnell said. "This improves the team and creates an advantageous domino effect."

While MacConnell is looking forward to another challenge next year, he still has the rest of this year to contend with. Both the Minutemen and Minutewomen could place in the top four or five after second day results are in. So, chalk this one up as another successful season for the men's and women's ski teams, something MacConnell is making quite a habit out of.

Just a few thoughts...

If your have cable, and you're a college basketball fan, this weekend is what is appropriately known as heaven. It's tournament time across the nation and whatever school wins its league gets an automatic bid to the NCAA playoffs...Madison Square Garden will be the scene for the Big East Tournament, with tickets being scalped for a couple of hundred dollars. If Dick Vitale is doing the games, I think I'll shell out the money...Of course, the favorite has got to be Georgetown. Ewing and the rest of the Hoyas are peaking at the right time, especially the way Patrick played against St. John's last week. Coach John Thompson has them playing that aggressive, pressing defense that we saw last year. Barring any slip ups, they should take the tournament...Every tourney has a darkhorse and this year I'm going with Pitt. They played the top Big East teams tough and could surprise. Also watch for Pitt's Charles Smith to shine in tourney play.

The ACC should also have a very competitive tourney. North Carolina and North Carolina State both played well down the stretch but still had to share the crown with Georgia Tech, who played Oklahoma very tough in Norman last Sunday...Watch for Maryland as the sleeper. They played a little rough towards the end but they have a lot of talent...Speaking of Oklahoma, Wayman Tisdale has really matured as a player. He isn't as haphazard as he used to be and is turning into a leader.

Turning to the pros, Kevin McHale is another Rich Little, doing Bernard King impersonations lately. Kevin had consecutive games of 56 and 42 points, the latter coming against King's New York Knicks. I guess he likes the role of the starter. The question is if he gets a medal for it, can his sunken-in chest take it?...More pro hoop news involves the collapsed roof at the Pontiac Silverdome. Estimated damage is over six million dollars. What was even more damaging was all the sports announcers using the "Chicken Little" analogies. Maybe the sky will fall on them.

Other news to round out the day: A group in Canada is looking into punishing hockey coaches who deliberately teach and/or advocate violence. I wonder how they'll do it. Maybe they will build a penalty box in their home and give them a two-minute minor...I see Bob Uecker is doing quite well. Besides the Lite Beer commercials and broadcasting for the Milwaukee Brewers, Uecker has a sit-com on ABC called Mr. Belvedere and is negotiating a movie deal. Hopefully now he'll get a better seat.

Finally, I have to quickly squash the rumours Vince McMahon is not wrestling under a mask. He's still your favorite TV talk show host. If only he had a suit post-1977...Look out for someone new to enter the ring. From Cinemascoop to the squared circle-look out for the likes of Count Ramin Zahed. Oh my.

No more need be said.

Graduate T.A.'s can expect a raise in salaries

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Correspondent

In order to attract more qualified teaching assistants, University of Massachusetts officials have advanced $1 million to nine academic departments, for the purpose of raising the graduate pay scale.

The Chancellor's and Provost's offices committed the funds to enable deans of those school to increase the salaries of graduate students who become teaching assistants in undergraduate classes.

Current UMass teaching assistant salaries range from $4,400 to $4,800. With the pay raise, salaries would increase $600 to $1000 and bring UMass closer to the national average of $6,200 for salaries.

Provost Richard O'Brien said the advancement will give the deans greater opportunity to attract higher qualified graduate students for teaching assistant positions.

Each school, O'Brien said, was allotted a fraction of the money proportionate to their share of the total school budget.

The benefits of an increase in assistant salaries would affect the entire University student body because higher qualified graduate students who later become teaching assistants would be responsible for the instruction of undergraduate students, O'Brien said.

Christos Karastamatis, vice president of the Graduate Student Senate, said the increase has been long-awaited.

"Graduate students have worked in the last few years, to get the hike in stipends, because during the last ten years inflation had cut about 40 percent of the real money value from the assistant's salaries," he said.

Although graduate students are happy to see the increase, Karastamatis said, they are worried that the proposed Universal Resource Fee at UMass will negate the gain in income they have worked to achieve.

The University has submitted a request to state officials for the $1 million to be included in the UMass budget proposal for fiscal year 1986.

That request will be voted on this April in the state Legislature.

If the additional funding is turned down, the University will have to find ways to economize in certain areas next year to make up for the $1 million it will have already spent, O'Brien said.

Congressmen made aware of transit cuts

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

Most of the members of Congress interviewed earlier this week by Students Advocating Financial Aid were either "in the dark" about or opposed to President Ronald Reagan's proposed budget cuts in public transportation, SAFA members said Wednesday.

If the proposals are approved, the number of already overcrowded buses in the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority system will be cut, and students may have to pay bus fares, or face increased PVTA fees in order to attend classes in the five-college system, members said.

SAFA spent four days telling members of Congress and their staffs not to endorse the budget proposals, and that "denying transportation equals denying financial aid," members said.

Robert Catlin, a SAFA member, said most of the people he interviewed about the public transportation proposals "really didn't seriously think it would go through."

Catlin said Rep. Sherwood C. Boehlert (R-New York), told him he planned to fight against the transit cuts and that he felt other Republicans in the Public Works and Transportation Committees were going to follow suit.

Jeffrey Jacobs, the legislative aide of Rep. Silvio Conte (R-Pittsfield), and the Assistant Minority Counsel of the House Appropriations Committee, said Wednesday that "there is no one on the other side (supporting the cuts)."

While Jacobs would not say there would be no cuts in public transportation, he said if there were any cuts they would "tend to come from capital accounts, and not operation assistance accounts."

Condominium or apartment: does it matter?

Townehouse tenants unaffected by change

By MICHELLE SEGALL
Collegian Staff

Last May, Townehouse of Amherst Apartments on Meadow Street was sold and converted to condominiums, but the change has not affected its residents, most of whom are University of Massachusetts students.

The complex was sold for $3.5 million to Amherst Realty Trust which, in turn, has sold all but eight of the apartments, Judi Johnson, resident manager of the complex,said. Three-bedroom apartments cost $67,500 and two-bedroom apartments are $61,500.

Of the 96 units at Townehouse, 92 are occupied by UMass students, Johnson said.

Most of the condominiums have been sold to investors from eastern Massachusetts and New Jersey. About 20 percent have been sold to parents of UMass students. Currently no tenants have children living at Townehouse.

This has been a smooth transition without any problems, according to Johnson. "If there are any effects, they're all positive," she said.

Since the property changed hands, Johnson has noticed that the new owners are concerned with the tenants and spending more on the property.

"Things are not being done on a nickel-and-dime budget. It's being done like it should be," she said.

Over the summer, nearly $90,000 was spent on new carpeting, a parking lot was added, and all the sidewalks (over one mile) were resurfaced. These renovations cost almost $200,000, according to Johnson.

Although the apartments are individually owned, Amherst Realty Trust takes care of the property and sets the rent rates. Rent is currently $625 for a three-bedroom apartment and $550 for a two-bedroom apartment, but will increase next year.

According to Johnson, this increase will not be as large as last year's 13 percent increase, despite the renovations. In fact, this year's increase should be less than any increase in the past five years, Johnson said.

The condominium transition has been so smooth that many residents didn't even know the apartments were changed into condominiums, Johnson said. Those that are aware of the conversion say the change has not made a difference.

Jodi Sklar, a Townehouse resident, said, "It doesn't affect me at all." She added that living in the complex is expensive because heat is not included in the rent.

Another resident, Lee Ann Gemmell, who has lived at Townehouse for two years, said her apartment was recarpeted and there have been no problems since the takeover. "We get to pay the rent in cash now — that's convenient."

For the near future, landscaping and more renovations are planned, Johnson said.

Doctors debate over ethics of life saving artificial heart

TUSCON, Ariz. (AP) - A 32-year-old man, kept alive 11 hours with a new artificial heart during a "desperate" search for a human donor heart, was in critical condition yesterday while the medical community debated the ethics of using the unapproved experimental pump.

The mechanical Phoenix Heart, never before used on a human, was replaced with a human heart in an operation that ended at 3:15 a.m. yesterday at the University of Arizona Health Sciences Center. The Phoenix Heart was implanted after the man's body rejected a first human donor heart, transplanted Tuesday.

Dr. Jack Copeland, head of the university's heart transplant program, and Dr. Cecil Vaughn, who conducted animal research with the Phoenix Heart, said their decision to use the device was simply a matter of life vs. death.

And, critics said, whether the man lives or dies probably would determine the response of the Federal Drug Administration, officials who expressed concern that regulations on artificial heart implants were not followed.

"I don't anticipate then the FDA taking any sanctions against the hospital," Alethea Caldwell, executive director of the University Medical Center, said yesterday. "They are not in the business of sanctions. Not at any time were any threats made."

University Vice President Allan Beigel said the patient, a divorced father of two from Tucson whose name was not released at his family's request, "continued to experience moderately severe pulmonary edema," a condition in which the lungs fill with fluid.

Students somber in New Bedford

NEW BEDFORD, (AP) - Somber students returned to a sprawling vocational high school here yesterday speaking only occasionally about a classmate's attempted suicide. Counselors focused on those who saw the popular senior shoot himself in the head during a shop class.

"People are talking about it; teachers are talking about it, but mostly people just want to be left alone about it," said Carlos Costa, 17, a senior. "Everybody is quiet. You just couldn't hear nothing, except just crying."

Counselors from the Samaritans, a suicide-prevention group, spent the day meeting privately with the approximately 15 students who were in the classroom Wednesday when Bruce Perry, 17, pulled the gun. He remained in critical condition yesterday at St. Luke's Hopsital, being kept alive with the help of respirators.

Perry reportedly stood up at his desk, tearfully pleaded with other students to leave the room and lit a cigarette. Some students fled the room, and he then shot himself in the head with a small revolver.

His friends among the 2,000 students at Greater New Bedford Vocational Technical High School expressed shock at the suicide attempt, saying that Perry was well-known and liked, a cheerful youth with a talent for making them laugh.

"After it happened, I felt so guilty. I felt like if I had talked to him yesterday, I might have given him a reason to live," said an 18-year-old senior who would only identify herself as Perry's girlfriend.

Coffee may damage heart

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) - A study of sedentary, middle-age men has linked drinking more than two cups of coffee a day with higher levels of cholesterol and a protein associated with heart disease, researchers said yesterday.

The first clinical study in the United States to suggest that coffee could be related to heart disease contradicted several previous studies, while supporting European studies and a survey of 47,000 men and women reported in the February American Journal of Cardiology.

The study's results were questioned by the National Coffee Association, an organization whose 210 members import and roast about 85 percent of the nation's coffee.

About 120 million Americans drink an average of three cups of coffee a day, according to the association.

The study by the Stanford University Medical School appeared to indicate that sedentary and mildly active men, age 30 to 55, who drink more than two cups of coffee a day are at higher risk of heart disease than those who drink two cups or fewer daily.

BOG opposes University's CC proposal

By VICKI A. SPAGNOLI
Collegian Staff

Leaders of the Campus Center Board of Governors yesterday reacted negatively to a proposal submitted by University of Massachusetts officials which seeks to reduce the powers of the BOG from a governing student board to a programming board.

The proposal would give the director of the Student Activities office (SAO) the ultimate authority over allocating student space in the Campus Center/Student Union(CC/SU). The BOG's annual $145,000 budget would be used exclusively for student programming in the CC/SU. Ray Bender, Associate Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance and Michael Jones of the SAO submitted the proposal.

"It is completely unacceptable to the BOG and the Student Government Association that an administrator should be ultimately responsible for allocating student space," BOG chair Jane Donohue said. "They thought it (the proposal) would be a compromise, and we found it completely unacceptable."

The present BOG provides a number of services to students and the CC/SU complex, including the allocation of student space. Student space includes rooms throughout the CC/SU complex, which are designated for use by student-run businesses and organizations. Such as the Stockbridge Student Senate office, WMUA, and the bike co-op.

The administration's proposal would transfer the responsibility of allocating student space in the CC/SU complex to SAO director Randy Donant.

BOG treasurer Fran Hegeler said that giving one administrator authority over the allocation of student space is "another move in the general pattern of the administrations' encroachment on students."

The present BOG allocates $51,000 of its $145,000 budget to payroll and office administrative costs. There are 11 paid student coordinator positions, three paid student officers, and one secretary.

The remainder of the budget goes to student programming such as the Governor's Program Council, and research and advocacy groups such as SCERA. The board channels funds to student groups and programming in the CC/SU complex through its 11 coordinator positions.

Workshops alleviate stress between cultures

By KATHY HART
Collegian Staff

Through a series of workshops, the Cross-Cultural Resource Project at the University of Massachusetts explore problems that occur when members of different cultures interact.

"We live in a nation that is multi-cultural, and there are certain groups in society that are focused on as being a problem," Marcia Black, a coordinator for the project said.

"There are conflicts between different cultures, and we want to provide an atmosphere where people can learn to deal with and be sensitive to the needs of others," Black said.

Black and Elise Young, another coordinator, said that through their work as Jewish awareness educators on campus, they have discovered that many people from various cultures contradict each other.

The workshops aim to provide a forum to help them deal with their similarities and differences.

"We are going to show people how to communicate cross-culturally. This doesn't mean asking 'What are your holidays?' but what values and cultural styles are shared," Young said.

"There are many resources on this campus that are unrecognized," Young said. "We are going to bring together the resources - students, faculty and staff- to incorporate their knowledge through workshops."

The first workshop, "Deafness: Disability as Subculture," was "a major learning experience for all," said Black.

"The deaf have a language and values of their own, and interact in their own ways, which constitutes them to be recognized as a culture," she said.

One workshop, planned for later in the semester, is "Islamic Mysticism and Feminism" which will provide people the chance to "get rid of their stereotypes of the Islamic culture. The United States is not the only nation with a feminist movement. There is feminism everywhere. Women are struggling against oppression in every country," Black said.

"A Jewish-Lesbian Experience" is a workshop which will provide both Lesbians and Jews a chance to discuss their cultures: "...the way their history and values interact in the same way two people from different countries interact," Young said.

Black and Young both hope these workshops will lead to future workshops with discussion and support groups.

The next workshop, "Islamic Mysticism and Feminism" will be held Friday, March 29, 12-1:30 p.m., Campus Center, Rm. 165-169.

Karate instructor denounces barrage of illegal weapons

By DANA PIERCE
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts student is waging a one-man war on the flow of illegal martial arts weapons into the United States.

Larry Kelley, a senior physical education major and the director of the Karate Health Fitness Center in South Amherst, has taken a lone initiative to halt the current "ninja mania" spreading throughout the country.

"The problem of illegal weapons isn't just in Amherst. It's nation wide," Kelley said.

The ninja were 16th century assassins in Japan who used double-edged knives, metal flying stars, and kung-fu sticks to kill their enemies. Magazines such as Inside Kung Fu and Black Belt advertise the weapons and have made them easily accessible through the mail.

Kelley said the problem is that many high school age and younger children have been ordering the weapons. Kelley has made a project of contacting public officials, the media, and colleagues in the field of martial arts instruction to try to prevent the mail-order purchases.

"Too many people have had their heads in the sand on this issue, and something has to be done," he said.

Kelley plans to mail letters to each of the 100 U.S. senators, asking them to produce federal legislation restricting the weapons. A flying star, a metal weapon the ninja threw at victims, will be included in each letter.

Kelley has planned a press conference on March 15 at his fitness center to display weapons and speak about responses he has received from local officials.

"The problem of illegal weapons isn't just in Amherst. It's nationwide."
— Larry Kelley

Police in Amherst, Belchertown and Northampton said they do not see this as a problem, because they have not seen these weapons in the area.

One of the ninja stars Larry Kelley wants to keep off the streets.

School of Education excels

By MICHELE HALSTEAD
Collegian Correspondent

The School of Education is working on a variety of projects both on- and off-campus.

The 1,300 graduate students in the School of Education comprise about 25 percent of the graduate student population of the University of Massachusetts.

The school employs 101 full and part-time faculty, and strives for "a strong development on international, national and local levels," according to School of Education Dean Mario Fantini.

The school is presently involved in a professor-exchange program with Bei Jing University in China, where Fantini has been invited to participate in their US/China Distinguished Scholar Exchange Program. The Committee on Scholarly Communication with the People's Republic of China sponsors this program with the aim of enhancing academic relations between the two nations by providing opportunities for scholars to exchange information and investigate the possibility of collaboration.

The School of Education has been host to internationally-known scholars such as Buckminster Fuller, Ralph Tyler, and is currently sponsoring the month-long stay of Paulo Freire of Brazil.

On the national level, UMass professor Kenneth Blanchard recently wrote The One Minute Manager, which was a number one book on the New York Times bestseller list for many weeks. Another literary accomplishment that the School of Education boasts is the 1984 Yearbook by the National Society for the Study of Education. Fantini and professor Robert Sinclair were chosen to edit and compile this, one of the nation's most prominent education publications.

Locally, the School of Education is involved in a comprehensive study of the Commonwealth's infrastructure problems. A special $100,000 appropriation by the General Court in the 1985 higher education budget makes this analysis of the state's transportation, roads and bridges, water supply, schools and public health facilities possible.

Jim Shaw, coordinator of this week's trip, said the issue of public transportation is "the sacred cow of all issues," because transportation brings communities and businesses together.

Chris Liberature, also of SAFA said, "Most people were pretty much in the dark (about the proposed mass transit cuts) except for members of the Transportation Committee."

John Kennedy, another SAFA member, said an aide to Rep. Carl Perkins, (D-Kentucky,) "had no stance on transit" before the interview, but afterwards was "opposed to it."

Shaw said he hopes SAFA "made the kind of impression that would convince Congress to want us back to testify" at the Budget hearings in April.

Police said a locked container and several doors were pried open. Police said there are no suspects.

In other police action:

- Three tables from Dwight House were reported stolen Wednesday afternoon. The value of the furniture is $553, police said.

Students seek social change

Irritated at hippy label

By JEFF BAKER
Collegian Correspondent

The word "radical" is too often associated with the word "hippie" and, according to members of the Radical Student Union, the two have nothing to do with each other at all.

The union, whose prime objective is social change, have in the past worked toward making the University of Massachusetts divest from companies with operations in South Africa and informing the University about the United States' involvement in El Salvador.

By sponsoring films and lectures, as well as holding demonstrations and voicing their opinions in other ways, members of the union try to get their message across.

"We are political activists," said member Kathy Lacey. "We are not hippies. They were not politically involved. We are political activists."

"Students don't know what radicals are," said group member Beatrix Hoffman. "There is a terrible misconception of what RSU is."

"People have a violent image of the word," Cline said. "Radical really means fundamental, to the root. We are looking for deep social change, not just superficial change."

The group has about 40 active members and has a mailing list of about 150. "We are here to educate people about a whole range of issues," said member Court Cline. The goal of the group is "to work for social change, to create a society of social justice."

The group is currently working on a variety of projects that will deal with U.S. involvement overseas. In the first week of March, RSU is planning to show two films, Lovejoy's Nuclear War and Heart's and Minds, a film about the U.S. in Vietnam. On April 29, the group, in conjunction with other groups nationwide, will hold a "No Business As Usual Day" to protest President Reagan's foreign policy, as well as a call for the end of nuclear weapons. The groups hope to get students and faculty involved in an attempt to cancel classes on the last Monday in April.

Sociology director dispels rumors that major is easy

By DANIEL WHITE
Collegian Staff

The reputation of sociology as being an easy major is unfounded, according to N.J. Demerath III, director of the sociology department at the University of Massachusetts.

"Traditionally, sociology has been thought of as a kind of soft major," Demerath said. "The irony is that this isn't a soft major." He said that his department "takes its mandate seriously."

Demerath said the sociology field has gone through a "revolution" in the past 20 years and students must now have a strong background in fundamental statistical reasoning. He added that the field is now "more complex, more demanding, and more sophisticated."

He gives two reasons for the "easy major" attitude. First, sociology is "interesting, but not perceived as leading to a specific major. It is not a professional school and students tend to shy away."

Second, Demerath said, the major is often equated with working as a social worker.

"This is wholly unwarranted," he said. Sociology is a "very broad field" and can lead to careers in criminal justice, research, and demography, as well as social welfare.

Nina E. Balter, a sociology major at UMass, said this reputation may stem from the fact that sociology deals with "trends over a general population which makes it seem less specific."

Janet G. Erony, another sociology major at UMass, said that, having taken business and math courses, sociology courses are harder than both of those. She feels the "easy" reputation may come from people who have only taken 100 level courses.

According to a study published in the January 1984 issue of Teaching Sociology, only 3.4 percent of governmental and corporate employers saw sociology as an appealing degree. Only 2.3 percent recruited sociology majors. But 33.1 percent did hire sociology majors, and about half said marketing, sales, and personnel management jobs require a college degree. Of the employers surveyed, 64.7 percent suggested sociology majors needed more management training, 46.1 percent recommended more computer training and 34.3 percent more "applied training."

Rating the reputation of sociology majors, 35.3 percent gave them a poor rating, 51.3 percent a fair rating, and 13.2 percent a good rating. However, the study emphasized that the more experience an employer had with the majors, the better the opinion they had of them.

Mother says killing wasn't suicide

LYNN, Mass.— The mother of a 14-year-old boy who fired a bullet into his head at a sister's home says she believes it was not a suicide.

"I truly believe it was an accident," said Valerie Martin. "He didn't show any of the classic signs. He just didn't fit any of those symptoms...Billy did not show any sign that anything was bothering him."

The body of William Curtis was found slumped over a bed at the home of his sister, Judy LeClair, when she returned home about 10:30 p.m. Wednesday, and police said he had been shot in the right side of the head.

Police ruled out foul play in the death of the eighth grader and said the gun was a .357 magnum owned by Mrs. LeClair's husband, a security guard. The gun was near the boy's body.

An autopsy was ordered.

Police said the shooting took place sometime after 6 p.m., when Mrs. LeClair left the house.

"His sister told us he knew the gun was there and he liked to look around the house at things," said Capt. Joseph Coppinger, chief of detectives.

Thailand repulses Vietnamese troops

BANGKOK, Thailand — The Thai army said it drove Vietnamese troops from a line of hills inside the border yesterday, repelling the largest single incursion into Thai territory in the six years since the Vietnamese invaded neighboring Cambodia.

The Thais, moving behind air strikes, ousted the Vietnamese from positions they had taken for a planned attack on the last major Cambodian rebel base, Thai Military officers reported.

Thailand placed long stretches of its border with Cambodia on full alert. The army sent reinforcements to the area of the three-day battle.

Between 800 and 1,000 Vietnamese soldiers pushed into the hills about two miles across the frontier to try to gain the high ground in Thailand and encircle the Tatum camp, which is perched on a cliff just inside Cambodia and surrounded by land mines.

"We certainly have achieved control of the three hills....We cannot confirm there is not a single Vietnamese left hidden there...but I can tell you that they have been expelled from where we saw them before," army spokesman Maj. Gen. Naruedol Dejpradiyuth said.

He said Thai forces killed about 100 Vietnamese since the incursion began Tuesday in Surin and Sisaket provinces in the northern border area. Thai casualties were put at 18 dead and 36 wounded.

Remains of American found in Zimbabwe

HARARE, Zimbabwe— The remains of a young American and two other foreign tourists kidnapped by rebels in 1982 have been positively identified, Prime Minister Robert Mugabe announced yesterday.

He told a news conference that pathologists had identified the bodies of Kevin Ellis of Bellevue, Wash., 24 at the time of the July 1982 abduction; James Greenwell, 18, of Liverpool, England, and William Butler, 31, of Newcastle, Australia.

The three identified men and three other foreign tourists were kidnapped and marched into the jungle at gunpoint July 23, 1982.

The remains were among six skeletons found in three graves last week in the western Lupane district of troubled Matabeleland province.

The other abducted men were Brett Baldwin, 23, of Walnut Creek, Calif.; Martyn Hodgson, 35, of Peterborough, England, and Tony Bajzelj, 25, of Ulverston, Tasmania.

The prime minister said in a statement released at the news conference that officials of Joshua Nkomo's opposition party "had knowledge of both the abduction and the killing of the six tourists." The prime minister said he based his charge on information from two captured members of the kidnap gang and Lupane villagers.

Mugabe said the captured men also said five of the victims had been shot dead and the sixth strangled three days after they were captured.

U.S. agent found dead in Mexico

MEXICO CITY — Ambassador John Gavin officially confirmed yesterday that one of two bodies found in plastic bags on a Guadalajara ranch was that of kidnapped U.S. narcotics agent Enrique Camarena Salazar.

"It is very painful for me to have to announce officially that one of the bodies...is indeed Enrique Camarena," Gavin told a news conference.

Medical specialists had determined earlier that the other body found on the ranch, where police shot it out with alleged drug dealers, was that of Camarena's pilot, Alfredo Zavala Avelar.

Both men were abducted a month ago in Guadalajara, which is considered a center of the Mexican drug trade.

Mexican police went to the ranch, about 60 miles north of Guadalajara, Saturday looking for clues for Salazar, 37, and Zavala. They were greeted by gunfire and five people were killed, including a police officer.

The bodies were found, in the bags in a field, when police went back to the ranch on a tip Tuesday night.

The men were kidnapped separately Feb. 7 in Guadalajara, Mexico's second-largest city, 322 miles west of here.

Stricter policies against South Africa advocated

WASHINGTON — Congressional critics of South Africa's racial policies launched yesterday a bi-partisan campaign for enactment of tough economic pressures on that nation — including a shutoff of U.S. loans and investment.

"America should be playing a much more positive role in the effort to achieve peaceful change political freedom and racial justice inside South Africa," Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said at a news conference.

Legislators unveiled a bill to ban new loans and investment in South Africa, halt computer exports to that country and stop imports of its Krugerrand gold coins.

Kennedy, chief Senate sponsor, said he learned on a trip to South Africa in January that "America is increasingly perceived as being on the side of the racist minority government, and that our current policy is providing aid and comfort to apartheid."

Randall Robinson, head of the TransAfrica lobbying group that has led numerous demonstrations at the South African Embassy here, looked on as Rep. William H. Gray, D-Pa., principal House sponsor, ushered 13 legislators of both parties to the microphone to support the measure.

U.S. uses Puerto Rico as a stage

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Puerto Rico has been used as a stage to carry out invasion of Caribbean islands, thus playing a key role in the strategic system of the United States, according to a University of Massachusetts graduate student who spoke last night on the militarization of Puerto Rico.

Carlos Pabon, a history major said Puerto Rico was not only used for the invasion of the Dominican Republic in 1965, but most recently in the invasion of Grenada.

After the Grenada invasion in Oct. 1983, Pabon added there were also air jets deployed in the Caribbean island ready to be used in case of a Cuban counterattack.

Pabon discussed the need to have people infected with what the Reagan administration is calling "nuclear allergy" to stop the deployment of nuclear weapons around the world.

Speaking in English, despite a majority Hispanic audience, Pabon said it was essential for Americans to understand what was happening. He added Americans had the most important role to play in persuading their government to stop spreading nuclear arms.

Pabon said the fact the Puerto Rico is a U.S. colony aggrevates the problem, because part of the population may agree with commonwealthood, or statehood but this is not the issue, "even if Puerto Rico is independent, an associated republic, like some are suggesting it still transcends the problem."

He said it is difficult to educate Puerto Ricans on this issue because the military has taken a civil role in the island and many see its presence as a basis for economic and social growth.

Although Puerto Rico is in a nuclear-free zone as agreed in the Treaty of Tlatelolco, there has been a constingency plan drawn to deploy nuclear weapons in the island, since 1975. The New York Times exposed the news in a front page article on Feb. 13.

The treaty was approved in 1967 by all Latin American countries except Belize, Cuba and Guayana. The treaty was seen as essential in the prevention of nuclear attacks in Latin America after the Cuban Missile Crisis in 1962.

Although there is a movement against nuclear arms in Puerto Rico, Pabon said it is lead by the Independistas who are a mino rity in the island.

Because the Independistas are incorporating the nuclear arms issue with the struggle for independence, many do not embrace their opposition.

"There is no prerequisite in this movement," he stressed, "what Puerto Ricans need to develop is a broad popular movement involving people of all political ideologies," where the issue at hand is the prevention of nuclear holocaust.

He said the nuclear arms issue will not be solved by treaties, such as the Treaty of Tlatelolco, "which have more holes than Swiss cheese, what we need is a movement, a popular political movement," similar to that in New Zealand or Germany's Green Party.

Black veterans still face prejudice

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

Although Black soldiers in Vietnam faced little if any prejudism in the battlefield because they were dependent upon for survival, their situation changed once they returned to America, according to a Vietnam veteran and a Karate instructor at the University of Massachusetts.

"When I returned to California, I literally got spit in the face," said Abdul Mumeet, former Special Forces NCO and Comoat instructor in Vietnam.

Because white soldiers depended upon blacks in battle, there was no race separation or animosity, he said. "Even General William Westmoreland said that the best soldiers that he had ever had were Blacks and Puerto Ricans."

According to Mumeet, "every soldier wanted you to be his buddy when they were down in the foxhole. However, after the Tet offenses of 1968 and 1969, I noticed that things began to change."

The most noticeable change was the prejudice Black veterans experienced in the job market. "I would see Black veterans in high rank get passed over for promotions while White veterans with less experience were promoted," he said.

After the war, it was very hard for Black veterans to find jobs. Black veterans wouldn't be accepted in the same position that they held in the military. They would have to rely on White people to get a job and White people were going to hire their own people first.

Mumeet believes whites oppress Blacks because whites fear them. "They are afraid of Black people because they know we will rise politically, economically, socially, the works."

Minority veterans also experienced prejudice when it came to receiving their benefits. White veterans are getting 100 percent of their benefits just for suffering stress. While Black veterans who have lost arms and legs are receiving only 40 to 50 percent of their benefits. It is a total disgrace," he said.

The number of Black veterans who have sought psychological help is hard to say. "There are quite a few still in the streets. Some have become drug addicts while some have never broken the psychological chain," Mumeet said.

Although black veterans were exposed Agent Orange, they are not receiving any money from the Agent Orange Suit filed against the government by Vietnam veterans.

He said Black veterans should maintain constant pressure on the government to receive their rights, "I have a lawsuit pending in court now. I gave a portion of my life in Vietnam. This country owes me something and I will go to my grave with this county owing me something."

"Bloods," a riveting presentation recounting the experiences of black soldiers during the Vietnam War, will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom on Monday.

Freire speaks to challange students

By JOHN UNGERLEIDER
Special to the Collegian

Urging "critical thinking every movement," Brazilian educator Paulo Freire addressed Springfield high school students in the University of Massachusetts challenge program, Wednesday in Springfield.

Challenge students responded with questons on topics ranging from apartheid to peer pressure to student-teacher relationships and authoritarianism in Brazil.

The challenge program is a college preparatory program for minority high school students. There are 60 challenge students in Springfield's Commerce and Classical High Schools.

Challenge Program Director Rudy Jones introduced the visiting professor. Jones explained that Freire was imprisoned for his teaching in Brazil, then forced to live sixteen years in exile. Last week, however, Freire flew to Brazil to receive the highest award given to an educator.

Freire, whose schedule has been filled throughout his month's visit to the School of Education said speaking with the young keeps him feeling young at age 63.

Freire put the blame for student rebellion onto the schools and the political system, saying "rebellion is just the expression of something that is wrong."

"The more students feel school is something of their own, the more reason they have for loving the school. The more students see school as a place that works against them, the more they hate the school."

Freire remarked that it is "indispensible always to ask questions, of ourselves, to the teacher, to the newspaper, to the television — to not be silent."

Responding to an appropriate question about how to confront "challenges" in life, Freire said, "Challenges exist in order to be answered."

Commenting on the event, Jones said he was impressed with the quality of questions the students asked Freire. He said the student's critical thinking was one of the reasons for having the program, and it was well demonstrated. Jones added, "I was pleased with the turned out and with the quality of the questions."

Ann Saltwood, Classical High School Principal, and hostess of the event said she was also very pleased. Freire was also very impressed, said Jones. "He was honored because he doesn't speak with high school students that often," he said.

Also present were, Deputy Superintendent, Brian Robinson, Assistant Superintendent for Secondary Education, Jack Shade, Mario Fantini, dean of the school of education at UMass, as well as Paul Barrows, director of the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Blacks and Other Minorities, Juan Caban, undergraduate admissions Sherwood Thompson, director of Third World Affairs and Nelson Acosta, recruiter for the Bilingual Collegiate Program.

Freire will be speaking at 7:30 p.m. on Monday in room 104, Thompson Hall, UMass.

West African Feast will be held from 5:30 p.m. and 10:00 p.m. in the Malcolm X Center in Southwest on Sunday. Come and enjoy an exciting new dinner alternative; West African style with African Music. The menu will consist of, joll of rice, groundnut stew, steamed seasoned greens, kelewele (fried plaintains), moin-moin (seasoned steamed beans), fresh green salad, chicken pepper stew and shrimp creole rice. Student contribution will be $4.25.

Mapuche oppressed by government

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The Mapuche Indians are victims of cultural and economic oppression imposed by the Pinochet and previous Chilean governments, with one exception, said Sofia Painiqueo, Wednesday night at the University of Massachusetts in celebration of International Women's Week.

"Under no government have we been listened to; with one exception: The (Salvador) Allende government between 1969 and 1973," said Painiqueo through an interpreter. The Mapuche leader said during Allende's government, her people could "write their own laws with their own hands."

The Mapuche people in central Chile comprimise 10 percent of that country's population. "We have been around before the Spaniards came, throughout the history of Chile and we are still around today," Painiquero said.

The democratically elected Allende government "didn't last long," she noted, saying that in 1973 the socialist leader fell and was replaced by the U.S. backed Pinochet regime which passed" legislation imposed against (the Mapuches)" Law 2568 took away 32 million acres of land from the tribe then giving each family 1 hectare of land on which all owners pay mandatory taxes.

Painiqueo called the land division, "genocidal assasination of the Mapuche people," stressing this amount of property is not enough for the tribe to produce sellable crops and in several years the land originally theirs will be turned over to the state, due to failure to pay taxes.

Historically, the Mapuche people were nomanic, but with the Spaniards conquest to Chile, they were centered in one region. Throughout 300 years of Spanish colonization, they face severe oppression and the crudest treatment, she said.

"A lot of Chileans believe we suffered, because we were created to suffer, but that is not true."

"We Mapuches have always been organized. Now, our first demand is the right to our land. We cannot live without land just as any culture cannot live without land. The land is the Mapuche's economic base," she said.

Painiqueo feels one goal of the Pinochet government is to "say there are no indians in Chile." To do this she said "they will have to change our language, our faces and our culture, because, yes; there are Indians (there)."

Painqueo said that anti-Pinochet organizations within Chile like the Catholic church and the Chilean Commissions on Human Rights have attempted to help the Mapuches in their united struggle against Pinochet. While the Mapuches people are happy with the support, she said, "organizations think we are ignorant. They try to come and tell us how to operate things and how to run our lives. We've been considered ignorant by many people. But we say they are not living the way we are living. We want to be recognized as different in this struggle."

"A complete education," Painqueo said, is a goal the Mapuche people should struggle for because "children are the future of our people" and "an ignorant people will never gain anything."

Within Chile the Mapuche tribe have formed cultural centers and other organizations where people can come and study the Mapuche culture with the opportunity to learn the Mapuche language.

Fifty percent of Mapuche women work with the centers although all the leaders or cheifs are men, she said, "Besides always caring for the children, working in the fields, cooking, and making clothes, Mapuche women have always participated in the struggle. That is the reason why a mapuche woman has come to speak with you today."

Painqueo added, "(Women) should demand more participation. Women are more responsible than men and if we were leaders we would advance quicker and be more united."

No right to eliminate

While the Collegian claims not to be endorsing any candidates for student government association president this year, in actuality it is. In yesterday's editorial, "The choice is yours", the Collegian managed to make the editorial a review of only four candidates.

The Keohan/Sbardella bid for the presidency was the one to be hurt by the newspaper's lack of research in sweeping, over generalizations. With no supporting evidence the Collegian accused Keohan/Sbardella of a "lack of experience and any real grasp of student politics." Even this comment was relegated to a short paragraph at the end of the article. Keohan and Sbardella were not ever compared and contrasted with the other candidates. In effect the Collegian haphazardly eliminated the Keohan/Sbardella team from their review.

There is no indication that Keohan/Sbardella are any less politically experienced than any of the other candidates.

In any case, the Collegian has no right to eliminate or discredit a choice without facts to back its allegations. An irresponsible editorial should not affect a campaign in this manner. The choice should lie with the voters, and their opinion should not be unjustly swayed.

Give them a chance

We feel that Keohan and Sbardella were unacceptably cut down and cut out of yesterday's editorial. Not being entangled in the student government, with access to the facts to the issues being hard to get, obviously they were not as up on the issues at hand. However, this being the case, it is not reasonable to imply that they are incapable of the position of co-presidents. The other candidates have already had the chance to show their incompetence. Keohan and Sbardella should be given the chance to show what they are made of.

Candidates speak out

If all the candidates are categorized as either left of right, where do new ideas come from? We don't expect the Collegian to be an unbiased, impartial observer but, it is obviously suppressing our ideas. We asked that they try to sift through the tidal wave of rhetoric that annually accompanies SGA elections. We also ask them to try to make an honest attempt to grasp our stand on the issues.

This is just one of the many recurring examples of the Collegian's abuse of its responsibility as a campus-wide newspaper.

For two students to enter a race and have their issues actively ignored proves that any single student voice on campus has a long way to travel to find any medium from which students can voice their opinions in black and white.

'Honestly concerned'

I would like to know what degree the Collegian thinks candidates should hold in order to qualify them to speak for the student body? In my opinion anyone willing to help the students in any way should be allowed to do so. Patrick Keohan/Teresa Sbardella are honestly concerned enough for our rights to do something about it. I myself feel that they have the best qualifications since they are students, not members of the already corrupted student government.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

The way we think

Today is the 78th annual International Women's Day, a day to honor women throughout the world and their continuing struggle for equal rights. It concludes the week-long International Women's Event, which has been observed with lectures and cultural events at the University of Massachusetts since 1977.

The original motivation for this celebration was a 1908 uprising in New York City's garment district during which 20,000 women participated in strikes and demonstrations, following a garment factory fire in which hundreds of women were killed due to doors that opened inward and lack of fire escapes.

Those demonstrators and others demanded better living and working conditions and an end to child labor. Today we take for granted another freedom they struggled for: the right of women to vote.

But while applauding the advances women have made since the days of brutally exploitive mill conditions in Massachusetts, of bound feet in China, and of suffragette hunger strikes in England, we must recognize that the task of transforming a sexist society is neither easy nor complete. It requires constant efforts to change attitudes and practices in all aspects of our lives.

In the United States, these attitudes and practices have not yet changed enough for a woman to be paid more than an average of 60 cents for every dollar a man makes, or for our constitution to include a simple statement that men and women must be treated equally. At UMass, they have not changed enough for women to comprise more than 8 percent of tenured full professors.

International Women's Day is not merely a commemoration. It is a reminder to all of us that the key to equality between the sexes lies in all of us — not only in the way we vote, demonstrate, promote, hire and fire, but in the way we think.

Dean of students office 'helpless,' 'blameless'

As the individual responsible for coordinating production of the Student Telephone Directory, permit me to clarify for the record what transpired in regard to the anticipated spring edition.

The Student Telephone Directory is printed pursuant to bid specifications prepared by the Dean of Students Office and advertised by the Procurement Office. The successful bidder is responsible for, among other things, all publication expenses. In return, he/she is entitled to retain all advertising revenue. The vendor must deliver the completed job not later than three weeks after copy is provided.

It became apparent early in January that the vendor might encounter difficulty in meeting the bid specifications insofar as delivery was concerned. Repeated attempts to contact this individual were unsuccessful. Meanwhile, litigation was initiated by the printer against the vendor. This action to the best of our judgment precluded production of any directories before late March, i.e., after mid-semester. It was decided at that point, that no directories would be printed. Anticipating the problems this might create, we alerted the office to which the switchboard personnel report so that additional support might be considered.

The situation at this time remains beyond our control, not of our making and unavoidable. I acknowledge the problem that this absence of a service traditionally provided by the Dean of Students Office has created. We are helpless and blameless however in having created it.

I hope this explanation will allay your concerns. Any suggestions will certainly be appreciated.

Clarifying some 'misinformation' about PMS

The Everywoman's Center recently sponsored a workshop on Premenstrual Syndrome because it is a controversial health issue surrounded by many misconceptions. Unfortunately, the article reporting on the workshop which appeared in Monday's Collegian was inaccurate and contained misinformation. As one of the facilitators of the PMS workshop, I would like to correct the misinformation, misquotes, misspellings and misconceptions. The first error that I would like to set straight is that the workshop was facilitated by Veda Andrus (not Vita Andras) and myself, a graduate student in the School of Public Health (not Health Studies).

It is true, Premenstrual Syndrome has been associated with approximately 150 different symptoms. However, not all women experience the same symptoms and, as far as I know, no one experiences all 150 symptoms. According to the Collegian article, an estimated 5 million women suffer from PMS. Neither Andrus nor I made this statement because there is insufficient epidemiological evidence to estimate the prevalence of PMS. Furthermore, it is difficult to accurately distinguish between normal cyclical changes and changes or symptoms which are severe enough to constitute a disease or syndrome.

Regarding diet, Andrus recommended eliminating all sugar from the diet. Substituting honey or molasses was only recommended for those women who felt that they could not abstain. Reduction in salt consumption was an equally important suggestion omitted from the article. Coffee addicts — relax. Caffeine does not cause Premenstrual Syndrome as the article states. Caffeine can exacerbate symptoms such as nervous tension, insomnia, water retention, and glucose intolerance. I cannot confirm or deny the fact that 97 percent caffeine-free coffee has half the caffeine of regular coffee because this information was volunteered by a workshop participant, not Andrus.

The quote, "If you are going to take PMS medically, take it slowly..." was attributed to me. Personally, I don't want to take PMS anywhere, in any way, but I don't have a choice at this point in time. The biological cause of Premenstrual Syndrome is controversial. As a result, medical treatment of the condition is trial and error. The safest course of action to alleviate PMS symptoms is dietary and lifestyle changes (exercise and stress reduction). If this does not work, vitamin supplements or herbal remedies might be tried. For some women, nothing seems to work. I recommended that women seeking medical treatment educate themselves about the options available, analyze the risks and the benefits of these options, and assert themselves in relationships with their physicians by asking questions and participating in decisions.

PMS is a complex medical and social issue. The Collegian oversimplified the problem by reporting on only one aspect. The agenda of our workshop included political and personal concerns of women who suffer from PMS as well as coping strategies. I hope that I have clarified some of the misconceptions which may have resulted from the article and restored my personal and professional credibility in the process.

It began as a whim...

Nancy A. Bukar

It started out as a simple whim. I had always loved swimming and I was on my high school swim team. And who could forget the glory of the Olympic swimmers, going for the gold?

I, a woman, wanted to cover the University of Massachusetts men's swim team for sports.

"Get out of here," my friend, the sports editor, said. "What do you know about swimming? Anyway, I know you only want to do it for ulterior motives."

The ulterior motives were a part of it (writing about 30 men in very good shape could prove interesting) but I explained my background in swimming to him; then I begged, cajoled and pleaded for the next two weeks.

"Okay," he said, "but don't screw up."

Which I did.

At the first meet, I was very nervous. The guys on the team looked at me as if I was from Mars. Although I know a lot about swimming and a lot about reporting, I didn't really know too much about reporting swimming. I forgot to get any of the finishing times for the swimmers. I had to call Russ, the coach, the next day at home to get the results.

"It won't happen again," I told my editor as he shook his head and looked up to the heavens.

And it didn't. Things didn't always come out okay but I learned as I went along. One of the hardest things I had to deal with was the swimmers. Some would say hello to me, some would look at me funny and some would ignore me totally. I wondered if it was because I was a woman or because I was "the press."

I guess that it was a little bit of both. When I first started, my stories were pretty rough but I think by the end of the season, I was pretty proud of the way I could write a swimming story. Maybe some of the men were intimidated. (It's okay guys, you can tell me — it's off the record.) I may never know.

What I do know is that I had a great time and I made friends (after a while) with the guys. The apprehension that I had first felt when surrounded by many nearly naked bodies faded into admiration for the dedication and expertise that these guys worked so hard for.

The New England swimming championships and the final meet of the season were this past weekend. It was both a happy time when the team came in third, something that hadn't been done since the 1930s, and a sad time, because it was the last story I'd ever write about swimming. My objective observation as a member of the press went out the window on Saturday and it was a blast. So to all the guys on the team — thanks for a great season and congratulations. It's been a lot of fun writing about winners.

The Sure Thing is surprisingly sweet

When one first hears the title of Rob Reiner's new film The Sure Thing, he or she might be reminded of any of the cheap teenage flicks where acting and the plot are kept to a bare minimum. Thankfully, instead, we find here a romantic comedy that is sure to be the surprise hit of the year. Although this movie contains some of the same elements found in the teen flicks, they are presented in such a way as to be funny without being raunchy or crude.

The movie opens with two high school friends, Lance and Gib, discussing how their lives will be in college. Lance is going off to study on the West Coast while Gib is planning on attending a small Ivy League school in New England. From here the plot follows Gib's life in his new surroundings. While at school, Gib becomes interested in a girl in his English class named Allison. Unfortunately they are total opposites, and she finds him obnoxious and rude. The fun really begins when Lance invites Gib to California for Christmas Break to meet the sure thing. Because he can't afford any other form of transportation, he accepts a ride from a couple traveling West. To his dismay he finds that the car's other passenger is Allison.

From here the two slowly make their way West, eventually thumbing a good deal of the way. Not wanting to give any more of the story away, suffice it to say that the unlikely pair encounter difficulties before reaching their destination.

Although neither of the film's two major actors have had much film experience, they both come across as veterans. John Cusack, who plays Gib, seemed especially at ease in front of the camera. His timing and delivery were so natural that it was difficult to remember he was only a character in a film.

As for Daphne Zuniga (Allison), her acting was no less impressive. Although her major contribution was playing Cusack's straight man, she proved that she could also be a comedienne by delivering some unexpectedly funny lines of her own.

These two actors did an outstanding job, but the movie's real star was never seen on the screen. Rob Reiner, whose only other directing credit is the critically-acclaimed Spinal Tap has created a winner. He has proved that a modern day comedy about young adults can succeed without depending upon sex to draw an audience. Reiner takes new actors and an old idea, and combines them to make a movie that is highly enjoyable to young and old alike.

CINEMASCOOP
by Count Ramin Zahed

The greatest thing about Hollywood is that you never expect much from it and when once in a while the studios come up with satisfactory material, you are put in seventh heaven. It seemed like spring last week when Heavan Help Us and The Sure Thing turned out to be sweet sleepers and not teenage trash. Humanity was restored to earth. I rarely cheer in movie theatres, but the honesty of Heaven Help Us, especially the two-minute cameo by Larry Bud Melman of Dave Letterman fame had me roaring like a fool. Andrew McCarthy who plays the newcomer to a Catholic school in Brooklyn radiates with sincerity. The rest of the cast are equally good as the class nerd, the dumb bully (Kevin Dillon proving to be as obnoxious as his brother Matt), and a young Catholic who has a tendency of abusing his private parts day and night.

Now here is a film which says in two minutes more about the excesses of academic discipline than a foolish Breakfast Club attempts to do in two hours.

Speaking of Hollywood's vices, allow me to introduce the latest crowd pleasing, formula-based, dumb, and totally irreverant film by the master of manipulation, John Landis. Into the Night manages to waste the talents of Jeff Goldblum, Dan Arkroyd, Richard Farnsworth, Irene Papas, and David Bowie at a single strike. O.K., the film is very slick and well put-together, but, that's it. The plot is a re-hash of North by Northwest which makes Hitchcock turn in his grave. The only redeeming quality about Into the Night is Michelle Pfeiffer who must be one of the most beautiful smugglers in the history of cinema. Ten thumbs down for this film.

Michelle Pfeiffer will be seen as another enchanted woman in the upcoming LadyHawke, a film which sounds like a Medieval dream come true. Matthew Broderick (War Games) is a young pickpocket who becomes involved with sorcery. The title of the film refers to the impossible love of a maiden who turns into a hawke each day and a nobleman who becomes a wolf by night (Rutger Hauer). The entire movie is shot in Italy, among the beautiful castles of Parma belonging to the late Italian filmmaker Luchino Visconti. Even the mention of the film makes my heart pound faster. Let's say Ladyhawke will be the Cinemascoop pick of the spring break.

Michelle Pfeiffer portrays Isabeau of Anjou in Warner Brothers' Ladyhawke.

While we are at the subject of Italy and the Romans, be prepared for another NBC miniseries called A.D. starring Susan Sarandon, James Mason, Anthony Andrews (as Nero, what a laugh), Jennifer O'Neill, Ava Gardner, and Fernando Rey among others. The theme simply put together by the press package is hilarious; "in the silence of the gods, imperial Rome burns with its power, its vices, its desperate splendor." Sounds like Dynasty goes to Rome. It should be fun to watch just for the laughs and the set shot in Algeria.

Melissa Gilbert, who incidentally is another face to laugh at, has a movie opening soon. Melissa, constantly haunted by her past image of little peasant girl running in the prairies, has decided to create a totally new image of herself. She couldn't go far with her talents so I guess she settled for a silly girl and horse theme which vaguely resembles National Velvet. The film is called Sylvester (the name of the horse), and should be as much fun as a smurf orgy. Go back to the prairie or to Rob Lowe for that matter.

Also, you can look forward to another Neil Simon picture called The Slugger's Wife scheduled for an early spring release. This comedy which stars Michael O'Keefe and Rebbeca De Mornay in addition to Randy Quaid is a love story between a baseball slugger and his rock singer wife. If you're into Neil Simon's sentimentality, you might enjoy this one because the cast seems to be quite good.

Criminal Act of the Week: Mt. Farm Theatre is actually taking away Heaven Help Us only to replace it with Missing in Action Part Two. What is this world coming to? Chuck Norris replacing Donald Sutherland, why, why?

Weekend Winner: No question about it. Julie Christie and Donald Sutherland are brilliant as troubled parents taken by the mystery of life in Venice in Don't Look Now. This film is a classic and to miss it at the Amherst Cinema this Sunday would be a sin as grave as listening to REO Speedwagon. The other half of the double feature is Walkabout, a strange Australian trip to the land of the aborigines. This picture was highly acclaimed when it was released about ten years ago.

If you wish to stay on campus catch Rosencrantz and Guildenstern at the Rand with the marvelous Marty Norden as Claudius.

The Cinemascoop Oscar Contest: Here's your chance to predict the Oscar winners and win four passes to the Hampshire mall, have your picture taken, see your name in print, ride the royal bike, Excalibur to the Mall (Yes, I myself will drive you to the theatre on my bicycle, tons of fun and excitement for the family). Second prize is a copy of the Vision Quest album and third prize is a Matt Dillon poster. Fill out the ballot in today's Collegian and drop it at the special Oscar Contest Box at the Collegian office. Winners will be announced in the post Oscar ceremony Cinemascoop after the spring break. Good luck with the mid terms and try to catch Once Upon a Time in America during the break, you won't regret it.

Rutger Hauer and Matthew Broderick are out to fight an evil spell in Warner Brothers' Ladyhawke.

A 'new' China examined

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

Due to mere logistics, the closest view that many Americans ever get of current events occuring in other nations is one filtered through television journalism. This is especially true of China, just beginning to open up to Western investigation after years of speculative silence. One fortunate side-effect of Deng Xiaoping's open door policy toward the West is the possibility for investigation and interaction beyond the superficial level, in in-depth literary journalism.

TO GET RICH IS GLORIOUS: The New Yorker Reports on China (Pantheon Books, 210 pages, $15.95) is a collection of essays about Deng's "new China" written by noted Sinologist Orville Schell. Schell is a long-time observer of things Chinese whose previous books on the subject (Watch Out for the Foreign Guests, Modern China, and In the People's Republic) qualify him to interpret China's "new materialism." Schell draws upon both the nation's historical consciousness and the graft of communist ideology in an attempt to fully explore the implications of current reaction against the Cultural Revolution.

TO GET RICH IS GLORIOUS (the title of which comes from a new popular slogan) has everything one would expect from a New Yorker correspondent's report: sharp, clear writing, attention to detail, and an eye for telling images. These images become jarring, almost frightening, as Schell's vision of modern China unfolds. He explores the positive and negative effects of the 1978 Third Plenum which to a large extent decentralized industry in the People's Republic, and loosened other government controls as well.

Schell reveals the colorful as well as ominous fruit of this radical change. Material prosperity has brought a new excitement to Chinese social life, fashion, and art. At the same time, in the looser environment, official and petty crime have blossomed. Religious and family life have been fundamentally altered as well.

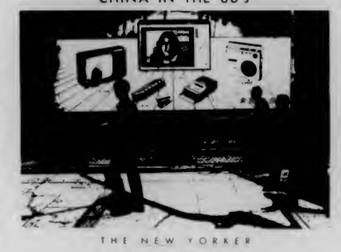
But the most thought provoking aspect of Schell's book derives from his ability to postulate China's future. Where will this "get rich quick" philosophy lead in a nation with more people than natural resources? For example, overgrazing by peasants now allowed to raise their own livestock has led to erosion of critically important grasslands. Similarly, exotic wildlife now sold in open markets is becoming endangered. Schell reveals the delicate balance between the "good" and "bad" results of Deng's far-reaching policies. Indeed, a warning of (perhaps inevitable?) reaction seems implicit in Schell's careful analysis.

TO GET RICH IS GLORIOUS is a small book. What Schell covers (with his considerable expertise) is so engrossing that it leaves one wanting more. It is a good introduction to a vast and fascinating subject.

Before discussing Annie Dillard's recently published Encounters with Chinese Writers (Wesleyan University Press, 106 pages), it is important to clarify what the book is not. It is not a Chinese Living by Fiction; it is neither an exploration nor a criticism of contemporary Chinese literature. It is, as Dillard explains, a series of literary "snapshots" of the telling interactions between some Chinese and American writers, recorded on cultural exchanges in which Dillard was a participant.

Encounters with Chinese Writers is a fine small effort:

TO GET RICH IS GLORIOUS
CHINA IN THE 80's



THE NEW YORKER REPORTS ON CHINA

colorful and clever, it is scattered with the exploits of such luminaries as to seem almost an international literary gossip. Dillard manages to catch, more than once, that sense of a nation in flux which is concretely described in Schell's book.

It is a little frustrating; at the start Dillard claims a "no comment" stance which ultimately detracts from the book's impact. Pulitzer prize-winning Dillard has been prominent long enough to make such pretension to objectivity beside the point. The best moments in Encounters with Chinese Writers come when she allows personalities (her own, and others') to shine through the web of bureaucracy and the awkwardness interpreters. Dillard's impressions of China escape the threat of superficiality, finally, because the people live in her images.

The lush life

A SUNDAY IN THE COUNTRY
DIRECTED BY BERTRAND TAVERNIER
ACADEMY OF MUSIC, NORTHAMPTON

By ELAINE SENAY
Collegian Staff

Foreign films can present something of a challenge to American audiences. Such films do not always have a tangible story. Often it seems that the director relies heavily on one's ability to fill in the gaps from shared human experience. This assumption can load a lot of responsibility onto the reader. Perhaps the hardest part of seeing a foreign film is reading the subtitles. The best advice to the novices out there: make sure you have had a good night's sleep. Foreign films can be hard work.

Bertrand Tavernier's A Sunday in the Country is a tough assignment. Visually, it is a beautiful film filled with lush photography. Tavernier creates a paradise in turn-of-the-century France when people seemed to lead a more enchanted life. He gives the impression that the plot is in the format of a play. Scenes are opened and closed by bright or fading light. While there is a sense of structure, the characters and their emotions remain shallow. Even the all-knowing narrator does not provide enough to flesh out this poorly written story.

The actors themselves are well cast and their appearance tells a lot about their characters. Monique Chaumette as the maid Mercedes is an instant reminder of the Frenchwomen who were painted by Toulouse-Latrec at the end of the last century. Louis Ducreux as the aging Monsieur Ladmiral is moving as he fights his senility that has also hindered his painting career. Michel Aumont and Genevieve Mnich suffer the most from this poor writing. They are consigned to keeping the action alive until the arrival of Monsieur Ladmiral's daughter, Irene. Irene is brilliantly played by Sabine Azema. She breezes onto the scene just in time to bring a bit of fresh air to an otherwise slow-moving film.

Big East Tournament

Hoyas rap UConn

NEW YORK (AP) - All-American Patrick Ewing overcame first-half trouble and scored 20 points as top-ranked Georgetown opened defense of its Big East tournament title with a 93-62 rout of Connecticut Thursday.

The Hoyas will take on Syracuse in Friday night's semi-final. The 13th-ranked Orangemen held on for a 70-69 victory later Thursday on Dwayne "Pearl" Washington's jump shot with 22 seconds remaining.

The 7 foot Ewing sat out the last 9:27 of the first half after picking up three personal fouls. Georgetown was leading 27-22 at that point, but, with David Wingate and Bill Martin leading the way, the Hoyas built a 47-36 halftime lead. Martin finished with 20 points.

Boston College had two opportunities to pull out a comeback victory over Syracuse, but missed two shots, the last taken by Troy Bowers with one second remaining. Bowers' shot rolled around the rim but fell out as time ran out.

★ Minutemen lose

Neysmith hit two foul shots and Smith a single one to cut the margin to five at the half. Smith had 10 first half points with Neysmith getting nine.

The Minutemen were uncharacteristically outrebounded 16-15 and committed nine turnovers.

"I haven't vaulted in awhile, but I've been practicing a pike tsukahara, and I feel pretty good about it, along with all my other events now that my leg is better. My bar routine went up to 9 tricks, (full difficulty)," said Allen.

"Realistically, I don't see any change in placement, (they are in fifth place going into the competition) but performance-wise, I think we'll do better than we've done all season," said Sheibler.

Fifth year undergraduate student Bert Mathieson, who has utilized his four collegiate years of gymnastic competition, has returned from Ontario, Canada after competing in the Canadian National Championships. The top 20 Canadian gymnasts qualify, of which 12 make the national team. Mathieson placed 14th, and is training for the finals in spring, hoping to become one of the 12 on the team.
